Oil thigh! Where did the tidilly come from?

by Terry Collins

Since 1891, Queen's frosh have bellowed "Oil thigh na Banrighinn...;" but today, our school song and yell have a tempo and pronunciation very different from the original version. Here is the story of this famous Queen's trademark...

- bottomley

"...Oil thigh na Banriggin na Banriggin gu Braw, tidilly Oil thigh na Banriggin na Banriggin gu Braw..."

The need for a school yell is obvious. As the Queen's Journal put it in 1903, football matches just don't seem right without "a uniform college yell that would demonstrate to the uninitiated the power and enthusiasm of the student body." So on October third, 1891, the Alma Mater Society gravely met to appoint a yell committee.

"Oil thigh" was composed by four students: Lavell, Cameron, McRae and McLean. They created the yell out of appropriate ingredients: Queen's colours, the traditional tongue of our founders, a war whoop and the word Queen's. Lavell had "Red, Blue, Yellow - Queen's Forever" translated into Gaelic. (Jarg, Gormus, Buidhe! Oil Thigh na Banrighinn gu Braih.)

"Cha Gheill," meaning "no surrender!," was chosen from a book of Scottish war cries. So the original "Oil thigh" sounded like this: "Queen's...Jarg gormoos boo-e-e-e...Oil'tye na vanree gu brath...Hah Yale! Hah Yale! Hah Yale!" The "boo-e-e-e" was "drawn out on a rising note," said Lavell in 1948, "like a defiant Indian war whoop."

The yell was sent to the student government who had requested it. Unfortunately, the Alma Mater Society didn't care much for "Jarg, Gormus, Buidhe!", and so replaced it with "Queen's! Queen's! Queen's!, which is with us today.

Student politicians were obsessed with creating a great yell, and so "Oil thigh" was the focus of AMS meetings in late 1891. At the time, the Journal commented, "The practice of school songs, which had been so neglected for a few sessions, was revived with so much spirit as to give the reporter from one of the city dailies the idea that it would hereafter form the chief feature of the meetings."

The yell rapidly deteriorated, which upset its composers. Lavell argued in 1931 that the effect of the war whoop had weakened, because students were mispronouncing it: "Can you imagine the warriors of clan McGregor going after the MacDonalds with their dirks and yelping, "cayell cayell cayell" like a bunch of mongrel pups?" If "Cha Gheill" is given in two long beats, it makes all the difference in the world." So, for a short time afterward, the whoop was hollered correctly, and was considered by the alumni magazine to be "a war cry well fitted to inspire Queen's athletes on to victory and to instill fear into the hearts of their opponents."

Today, "Oil thigh" is more than just a yell. It has become a leg-stretching dance and a lung-stretching song. How and when the yell was first put to the tune of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" is undocumented in Alumni Association files. And where the "tidilly" ever came from is also very mysterious.

Alfred Lavell (Arts '92)

This week, Queen's frosh obediently sing their gaels' distorted version of "Oil thigh": "Oil thigh na Banriggin, na Banriggin gu Braw, tidilly...Oil thigh na Banriggin na Banriggin gu Braw, tidilly...Oil thigh na Banriggin, na Banriggin gu Braw...Kay Yaw, Kay Yaw, Kay Yaw." (With the emphasis on the "Yaw".)

Then they yell: "What's the sport of kings? Queen's Queen's Queen's. Oil thigh na Banriggin! Kyaw Kyaw Kyaw. Oil thigh na Banriggin! Kyaw Kyaw Kyaw. Yea Queen's!" (Jump).

Today's version is certainly imperfect in both pronunciation and tempo. But it is a vast improvement over what Queen's had before the yell committee created "Oil thigh" 84 years ago. Up until then, the Queen's yell began like this: "1-2-3 sis boo yah!"

Terry Collins used minutes of AMS meetings, old copies of the Alumni Review, and other Alumni Association files as sources of this article. Collins has been with the Queen's Journal for three years as cartoonist and writer, and was Business Manager in 1974-75. He begins a weekly column on Queen's traditions and past in next Tuesday's Journal.

Comment: At this momentous occasion of the dawn of another academic year, at this unfolding of future opportunities, struggles, and challenges, with heartfelt optimism and abundant enthusiasm...I have nothing to say. (unofficial comment).

Let's do it right!

For years now, frosh and gaels have been mispronouncing the words to Queen's traditional school song and yell. "Oil thigh" was written to cheer on Queen's teams and to create cohesiveness between students who sing it together. "Cha Gheill", a Scottish war cry, was included to inspire the athletes and to scare their opponents. Originally, "Cha Gheill" was slowly shouted "Hah YALE", with accent on the "YALE". Today it is dully sung "Kay Yaw" or "Kyaw" (worse). What once meant "No Surrender" now is meaningless noise.

The tempo of the yell has changed from slow, deliberate, to fast and slippery. How weak it has become.

"Oil thigh" is one of Queen's most famous traditions, one which in its current shape has lost its meaning. Frosh and gaels must bring back the original pronunciation and tempo of "Oil thigh". Only then will it be restored as a cry of fierce Queen's spirit.

Going to vote?

With exactly seven days to go before the provincial election, there's not much time left for students to register. Your last chance is next Tuesday and Wednesday, the 16th and 17th, in the John Orr Room between 11-1pm and 5-9pm. An assistant revising officer will be present to sign affidavit forms for students. The affidavit allows people who have moved from one district to another, to vote in their new riding. The student receives the bottom portion of the affidavit form which he or she takes to the polling station to obtain a ballot. It is quite honestly an easy procedure and it's your last chance.

If you are already registered at your Kingston address, your non-Kingston summer address, or are set up to vote by proxy, forget what you have just read. You are ahead of the game.

Advice to frosh

by John Bottomley

Most campus papers offer advice to Frosh upon their (the Frosh's) arrival in September. It is usually wasted, since most Frosh at other universities, even when literate, cannot follow the directions on a package of frozen peas, much less complex behavioural instructions. We have no reason to believe that we can be any more successful, but there's a hole in the paper which needs filling, and this is it.

1) The first advice I can give you is to leave while the leaving is good. The $600 you just spent on tuition will go a hell of a long way towards a vacation somewhere, and the refund on your residence fees can't hurt.

2) Speaking of residence, the safest thing to do is to avoid any coherent conversations with your Warden. They only cause trouble. The best method is out and out evasion. I remember one episode from my own first year. One upstanding young man on the floor was making match bombs, which smell even worse than the food you'll be eating all year. I was playing chess. The warden entered and the following conversation ensued:

Warden: Who's playing with the matches!?

Me: Not us.

Warden: I know 'not you', now who was it!?

Me: You want to play chess?

Warden: What I want is to know who's doing that.

Me: Can we borrow your car on Saturday?

He gave up and left, and we got to use the car, too.

3) Also avoid everyone else in residence. They're all idiots. A computer finds all the idiots and puts them in the same building. Everyone in your building is an idiot. The best thing to do is wave your arms and yell "Oogledy-Boogledy!" at them to scare them away.

4) Always wash behind your ears.

5) If you are a male over 6'3", you may be eligible to be a member of the Tall Men On Campus, but don't bet on it. The T.M.O.C. is a very exclusive organization.

6) If you eat in the Coffee Shop without first saying your prayers, your ears will fall off, in which case you don't have to wash behind them anymore.

7) You'll be taught by some of the most learned and wise men and women in all of Canada. Always treat them with the respect due people of their stature. An apple a day may not keep the doctor away, but it keeps the Grades up; unless, of course, your professor is allergic to apples, in which case nehru shirts will be an acceptable substitute bribe. Everyone has a price.

8) If you feel that you are in line for the "Most beautiful Freshette of '75-'76" Award, come see me between 10pm and 2am any night this month and I'll give you a personal interview. I'm the best judge of Women in the Western hemisphere, maybe the world.

9) If your ears fall off in a public place, please dispose of them promptly and properly.

Extension courses...

French Canadian Theatre

Attempting to discover the reason for the upsurge in popularity of French Canadian drama will be one of the goals of a Queen's University extension course, French Canadian Theatre.

"Two years ago there were as many people attending plays at Place des Arts in Montreal as were at baseball games in Jarry Park," said Annette Hayward, assistant professor in the Department of French. "Theatre in Quebec is very active."

Prof. Hayward's course, to be conducted in French at a second-year level, will cover the history of theatre in French Canada from the late 1940s, the years which introduced the "fathers of theatre in Quebec", Marcel Dube and Gratien Gelinas. Seven authors' works will be studied in the course.

While poetry was the focus of attention in the 1950s, and the novel in the 1960s, the 1970s have brought theatre into its own in French Canada, according to Prof. Hayward. A look at the reasons for this development will make up part of the course.

Readings of plays and slides dealing with the authors under study will be included, as well as an analysis of the contributions made by scenery, costumes and staging.

Credit for an introductory French course is required for this course, to be presented Wednesday evenings. Further information is available from the Department of Extension, 547-3283.

Six languages to be offered

Six languages are being taught this fall and winter through the Department of Extension at Queen's University, including for the first time a course in Ukrainian.

French, Russian, Portuguese, Spanish and German are the other five languages to be offered, mostly for the uninitiated.

"The Ukrainian language and culture are developing in Canada," said Robert Karpiak of the Department of Russian, who will be teaching the new Ukrainian course. A survey which was conducted in the area showed a positive response to the idea of such a course. Most people of Ukrainian background in Canada live in the western provinces, but another large group is in Toronto, Mr. Karpiak said.

Cultural films and other audio-visual aids from Canadian and Soviet sources will enhance the course, which will include instruction in grammar, translation, reading and, mainly, conversational skills.

French language training for the fall includes an introductory half-course based on an 18-week CTV television series on University of the Air. The series was presented by Prof. Stephen Day of Queen's Department of French, and was televised in two parts during 1973 and 1974.

The programs will be shown to students, and personal instruction will be given by Prof. Day after each film. A five-lesson history of the French language and culture starts the series, while 13 subsequent lessons concentrate on language acquisition and comprehension. The half-course will take place Tuesday evenings for an hour a week beginning October 28.

"En France comme si vous y etiez" is another introductory course from the French Department, also taught by Prof. Day. Based on film episodes of a traveller to France who must handle a variety of everyday situations in French, the course is designed to help students acquire linguistic reflexes. These reflexes are patterns of speech rather than individual words, according to Prof. Day, and students will be encouraged to practise them on their own in the university's language laboratories. The course is entirely oral, and will be given Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

"There is no prerequisite for this course except the ability to open one's mouth," Prof. Day said.

The Reading Spanish and Reading Russian courses will teach students to read texts of varying degrees of complexity in Spanish or Russian with the help of a dictionary. The Spanish course will take place Monday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 8:30 p.m., and the Russian course Mondays from 7 to 10 p.m.

The essentials of Portuguese grammar and pronunciation will be taught to beginners Tuesday and Thursday evenings in another extension course.

The traditional and innovative influence on the Western world of German drama in the 19th and 20th centuries will be presented by the Department of German using texts translated from German to English. A look at the German dramatist's position in relation to other European countries will be included in the course, to take place Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

All Department of Extension courses are $120, and the deadline for registration is September 15. The department can be reached at 547-3283.

Drugs and Their Actions

The medical and sociological aspects of drug and alcohol usage are the focus of a Queen's extension course, Drugs and Their Actions, offered by the Pharmacology Department. The course was established by Professor Gerald R. Marks, Head of the department, and was first offered in 1972.

A multidisciplinary approach has been adopted to present the student with a clearer picture of the complexities involved with alcohol and drug use, according to Dr. Marks.

The 12-week course spans topics from the history of drug use to physical and psychic dependence; and from the legal, pharmacological and social aspects of alcohol to the resources available to individuals suffering from drug dependence. The course also covers oral contraceptives, antibiotics, over-the-counter drugs, vitamins and food additives.

While the professors in the Pharmacology Department teach the majority of lectures, specialists from the Departments of Sociology, Psychology and the Faculty of Law also contribute lectures with viewpoints from their particular disciplines.

"We try to dispel the myths and give the facts," said Dr. Marks. "We don't want to tell the students that a drug is good or bad, but simply tell them what is known so they can make their own intelligent decision," he added.

Drugs and Their Actions will be offered Wednesdays from 7-10 p.m. until December. Students will receive a half-credit for successful completion of the course. For more information contact the Extension Department at 547-3283.

Government to hold student aid hearing

TORONTO (CUP)--An advisory Committee to the Ontario Minister of Colleges and Universities will hold public hearings this year "to take a fresh look at student aid", according to an August 14 announcement by the government.

The Committee is requesting submissions from student, labour, business and other interested groups on current needs and new aid schemes, as well as comments on the Ontario Student Assistance Programme (OSAP) and the newly introduced Ontario Student Loans Plan.

According to a senior student aid official in the provincial government the purpose of the hearings is to solicit opinions and prepare a report on the position Ontario should take in the upcoming federal-provincial renegotiation of the Fiscal Arrangements Act.

The Act, due to expire in 1977, outlines the tax and funding arrangements between Ottawa and the provinces, and includes a section on provincial participation in the Canada Student Loans Plan.

The official denied that the decision to hold public hearings at this time meant that Ontario was dissatisfied with the results of last year's federal-provincial talks on student aid.

Those talks, he said, were "more general in scope" and the recommendations coming out of them were acceptable to Ontario.

He said the hearings and report, to be conducted by the Ontario Advisory Committee on Financial Assistance for Students, will "be more concrete than philosophical" and would "start from scratch" and investigate Ontario's student aid system in detail.

"The advisory groups concerns are more immediate. They're being asked to take a fresh look at student aid and can't assume that the present OSAP system is the one we're going to have to live with for the next ten years," he said.

According to the official, the advisory group could decide to recommend that Ontario pull out of the federal aid system "if it looks better for Ontario."

The written request for submissions put out by the Advisory Committee, however, gives a very broadly worded definition of the concerns of the group.

They ask for submissions on "any and all" matters relating to "the financial arrangements required, in the long run, to assist students in pursuing their post-secondary studies or training" and on the administrative steps and procedures needed.

The submissions "may simply address themselves to specific needs or problems...analyse or criticize any or all features of existing Ontario student assistance programmes...(or) may choose to advance revised or completely new schemes of student assistance."

Public hearings by the Committee are to take place on November 26 in Thunder Bay and Sudbury; on December 5 in London and Ottawa; and on January 20-21 in the Toronto area.

"That young man has a better grasp of the future than any other politician I've met in North America."
Buckminster Fuller,

On Leadership.
"I would define leadership in the 1970's as being the responsibility of government to anticipate social and economic change, and then to use all the resources of government in clearing the path ahead, so that when society and its people have to make the journey from one set of circumstances to another, the passage can be made with the minimum of disruption and the maximum of preparedness."
William Davis Ontario Municipal Electric Association March 6th, 1973

In the Gallup poll taken June 19-21, 46% of 18-29 year olds believed Bill Davis would make the best Premier of Ontario at the present time; this compared with Nixon at 28% and Lewis at 26%.
Toronto Star Wednesday, July 9th, 1975

On Law and Justice.
"Our American friends are familiar with the phrase 'law and order'. But I think here in Canada, and certainly in Ontario, our continuing concern has been more with 'law and justice'... a term that I prefer because without justice in the enforcement of law there is very little likelihood of order in society."
William Davis Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce February 8th, 1974

Ontario's New Ombudsman
"With the nomination of Arthur Maloney, an inspired choice, perhaps the best appointment in years, the government set the fresh breezes blowing."
Norman Webster, Globe and Mail columnist

City Life
"Men closest to Toronto's day to day functioning credit the Ontario government with the consistently tough minded policies that have steered it clear of urban decay."
The Wall Street Journal July 26, 1974

"Few cities anywhere in the world seem to have quite so much going for them as Toronto!... the lowest crime rate of any major city in North America; one of the most modern transit systems anywhere in the world; a sparkling, clean and modern inner city.

"With rapid growth came the social and political pains of maturity... The Ontario provincial government stepped in and imposed a central governing body on Toronto and its thirteen satellite cities (which) meant that small neighbourhoods could maintain their own identity while receiving all city services..."
"Toronto is a kind of miracle" Newsweek

"The effectiveness of... public transportation can be traced directly to the policy of the Province of Ontario which is firmly committed to high quality mass transportation."
Business Week February 16, 1974

Housing
"In the case of Ontario, it is the province which has shown the big initiative in developing low income housing. Ontario's record, in this respect, surpasses that of most jurisdictions on the continent."
Globe & Mail March 4, 1975

On the Honourable William Davis
"This is the same man who in 1971 at a private gathering so impressed Buckminster Fuller, the American planning visionary, that Fuller later remarked, "That young man has a better grasp of the future than any other politician I've met in North America."

Students: losers in election

The timing of Ontario's election has turned student's efforts to oust the Davis government into a mad scramble for voter enumeration. The September 18 polling date - shortly after Fall classes begin - will mean that most students will not be enumerated in their university ridings.

The Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) has demanded that the province launch a major publicity campaign aimed at informing students of enumeration procedures.

"Most students will be in transit between their summer place of residence and their university or college town at the beginning of September," states an OFS press release. "The complexities of enumeration and proxy voting mean that students will be forgotten at the polls."

"The choice of the September 18 date could be construed as a deliberate attempt to lessen the impact of the student vote in the election," suggests the OFS. "This is particularly disturbing at a time of grave concern for the future of post-secondary education in the province. Students, as a group, must have the opportunity to vote."

Some special procedures for the enumeration of students have been put into effect at various universities, however. Tables for the purpose have been set up in residences or elsewhere, as at Queen's, where enumeration officers are presiding in the John Orr Room. At MacMaster University students are being enumerated in the registration line. But the solution does not seem to have been applied to other universities. The "special arrangements" were outlined in an August 13 memorandum from Chief Electoral Officer Roderick Lewis to all provincial returning officers.

The question of student voting is a "very difficult problem," said Lewis in an interview. But remedies exist to ensure that all eligible students can cast their ballots, he said.

Students must visit their local district returning office in order to be enumerated, or to change the riding in which they were enumerated. At some universities, such as Trent, students' unions are conducting publicity programs to inform students of the procedures.

However, the last day for anyone - including students - to get on the list of voters is September 10th, the deadline for revisions.

"There's no provision in the Election Act to allow any voter to be included on the polling lists after 9 p.m. (EDT) Wednesday, September 10," says Mr. Lewis.

Police crackdown

Orientation '75 has brought about more arrests and complaints than any other year. This is the word from the Kingston police. Drunkenness, vandalism and noise have brought an unprecedented number of complaints, primarily from residents in the immediate campus vicinity and the downtown core of Kingston.

Among some items taken Monday night, presumably by engineering students during their annual scavenger hunt, were a tractor trailer with a hay wagon, parking meters, garbage cans and bathtubs from local residents. One funeral home reported the disappearance of one of its coffins. Although this sort of activity has happened in the past, a police spokesman felt that this year's frosh and organizers had gone 'too far.' Traditionally Queen's freshmen have been given a break by the police, however it is felt that the overall increase in the number of reported cases of vandalism has led to the unusual number of arrests.

As was pointed out by the police spokesman, a conviction can seriously affect a person's future in terms of job opportunities.

This year, as in those past, the Friday of Orientation week will find frosh and their Gaels participating in the various activities which comprise Charity Day.

One of the main events, and one which has always been a success is the Shinerama. Thousands of students on campuses from coast to coast participate in this National one day shoe-shining blitz. The proceeds collected aid Cystic Fibrosis research.

Kingston being full of shoes, business is sure to be brisk. So smile frosh and keep on shinin'!

As Minister of Education, Bill Davis encouraged the expansion of post-secondary institutions. The Conservatives are still planning to do tomorrow what should have been done yesterday. They have failed to plan for the realities of the seventies and eighties.

Ontario New Democrats believe we must anticipate and attack tomorrow's problems today.

Unemployment rate for students up

Over 17 thousand Canadian students between the ages of 20 and 24 were still unemployed in July of this year, compared to 8 thousand a year ago, according to the latest Labour Force Survey released by Statistics Canada.

In July of 1974, the unemployment rate for persons in this age bracket intending to return to school in the fall was 4.2 per cent. The comparable 1975 survey shows an unemployment rate of 8.1 per cent, an increase of 95 per cent.

The July figures released on August 12 show an improvement over the situation in the month of June. During the that month 24 thousand students were unemployed giving an unemployment rate of 12.6 per cent, up 66 per cent from June of 1974.

But although the rate fell for July, as expected, the continued high rate of unemployment indicates that the job market for those needing money to return to school did not firm up in the latter months of the summer as in past years.

As well, it is unclear just how accurate a picture is given by the unemployment statistics. In the labour force survey, all persons who worked at all during the survey week are considered "employed", even though the duration of the job may be less than a couple of hours.

According to Canada Manpower officials interviewed during the summer, not only were jobs harder to find this past summer, but those that were available were generally lower paying and for shorter periods of time.

Which means that the 8,000 students listed as officially "unemployed" may be just "the tip of the iceberg". The number of students who were unable to save enough money from summer employment to make ends meet during the academic year may be much larger than the official number.

Bound memorials

A memorial book fund has been established at Queen's University in response to a need for a worthwhile purpose for gifts which do not involve large sums of money.

Contributions made to this fund in memory of friends, relatives or associates will add to the library's acquisition and will perpetuate the name of Queen's friends through the use of individual book plates.

"There could be no finer memorial in perpetuity," said Lin Good, assistant chief librarian at Douglas Library. "Books are permanent, attractive and useful to generations of students and scholars in the university community", she added.

Donors may specify special areas where they wish their funds to be used. The chief librarian's annual report will contain a list of titles purchased from the memorial book fund and donors will receive a copy of this report.

Good explained that there is currently a trust fund known as the Richardson Memorial used for the purchase of material for Canadian studies, and the Friends of the Library fund, from which items deemed necessary or desirable by the library staff are purchased.

"A memorial book fund is an excellent addition to the library's acquisition funds", the assistant librarian said.

AMS Concerts

A.M.S. Concerts are introducing a new fall line of shows that proves to be quite interesting. It all starts with The Earl Scruggs Revue tonight at 20 hrs. at Grant Hall. The twenty year veteran of the music industry is perhaps most easily recognized as the author of the Grammy Award winning song Foggy Mountain Breakdown.

For several years, Scruggs, the onetime master of the Bluegrass banjo, has been developing a carrier free, barrierless approach to music. He is now using his banjo to explore many other forms of music; blues, rock, jazz, modern-country and pop.

The Revue is young, dynamic and experienced and much more than just another rock or country band. The music the Revue does is a hybrid for which a label has yet to be invented; if people deal in labels, Earl Scruggs and his Revue disregard them. They deal in one simple word: music. They have developed an unusual mixture of rock, folk, and country, all of which fuse to yield a distinct personal sound.

Playing also at this concert is Colleen Peterson, a beautiful singer with a no-less spectacular voice. Colleen's credits include being half of Spriggs and Bringle and also being part of the Canadian cast of Hair.

Then on September 21 Murray McLauchlan comes to Kingston, and the month is finished off on the 30th by an appearance by the Bee Gees.

October 19 brings David Bromberg and on the 27 Sha-Na-Na returns to Kingston. For further information on these and the coming concerts, keep watching the Arts pages of the Journal.

Show Job

by Alan Mann

When I first received all the promo pictures and blurbs concerning Lighthouse and the World's Best, World's Biggest Rock Circus, I must admit that I was somewhat dubious of the show. I mean teaming a group like Lighthouse up with "the superb trampoline trio, the Trampchamps" and "the clowns, Malto and Mari" just doesn't seem to click to produce the greatest show on earth, which it didn't. It did however produce an interesting and definitely entertaining evening.

The opening parade was an opening feature not to be forgotten, but Malto and Mari's warm up to the parade was a little too drawn out thereby losing the humourous atmosphere they had at first set up.

The Trampchamps on the other hand provided a fast pace and interesting show. With one member of the troup posing as a grease-ball member of the audience called up to give a hand, the trio showed the very attentive audience all the thrills and chills of trampoline work.

After a cute, but predictable skit by the clowns, Lighthouse took the stage. Although now only a nine man group, they performed their old and present hits with the skill expected of a group that has been together so long. They also did some of their new, unreleased songs. Most noteworthy of these were Sorry by lead guitarist, Ralph Cole, and Southern Comfort by the saxist.

Response to the concert was so strong, that a second show was arranged for those people without tickets. From what I've heard from trustworthy people that attended this second concert, although the warm up acts had improved slightly, Lighthouse was either too tired or too stoned to do a good show. But the audience was still enthusiastic, probably since they were either Frosh still psyched up from Oil Thighing around all day or because they were Kingstonians who haven't been treated to a concert since A Foot in Coldwater came to the Memorial Centre at the end of last school year. At any rate it was an unusual way for the Concert Committee to kick off their new year, and prepare us all for what is yet to come.

Pink Panther purrrrs

by Sandra Bernstein

As of press night, the only film worth seeing in downtown Kingston is The Return of the Pink Panther, highly recommended and playing at the Capitol 1.

Naturally, it is not the return of the oft-stolen diamond that is particularly noteworthy, but the long-awaited reappearance of Inspector Clouseau (Peter Sellers), the French inspector whose specialty is retrieving the Panther.

Clouseau leaps to the conclusion that "The Phantom," the aristocratic thief who stole the gem the first time, must have done it the second time. This obliges the Phantom (Christopher Plummer) to attempt to catch the criminal before he himself is arrested.

Plummer has been criticized for not fitting in with the rest, being too serious, but in fact he and his elegant Moet et Chandon set help provide the typical Jewel-Robbery-Movie norm against which Clouseau can operate. Similarly, Blake Edwards, who also directed the previous Clouseau misadventures, litters the path of the movie with references to Bogart movies, and other "quotations" from previous thrillers.

Clearly, Clouseau operates under the delusion that he has the personal dignity and finesse of the great detectives of the cinema. Unfortunately, he applies his open mind, tenacious pursuit of each train of thought, and ingenuity only to things that don't matter; he relies on "instincts" he does not possess; and, like Sellers' comic mentors such as Lloyd and Keaton, he finds his most menacing adversaries in inaminate household objects.

Not surprisingly, most of the comedy in this film is physical or slapstick, complemented by Clouseau's idiocy and imperturbability in the face of disaster.

This shtick, of course, is as contagious as Clouseau's impossible French accent, which the French themselves find incomprehensible but parrot nonetheless. The intrepid inspector infects first his boss (Herbert Lom) then others around him with his lack of co-ordination and his mad approach to investigation.

Sellers has refined the character, and performs at his best, equalling his achievements in "After the Fox" and the first half of "The Party". This is particularly refreshing after his atrocious script choices in a couple of his more recent films.

Poor editing and direction can ruin the best comic film performances, which is why the team of Edwards and Sellers is such a fortuitous one. Edwards provides his character with the screenplay, photography, pace of editing, and composition that make the most of Sellers' comic talent.

See the film this weekend - you deserve a good laugh before classes start.

Baryshnikov and Bruhn join National Ballet

Following its current engagement at Ontario Place in Toronto, the National Ballet of Canada moves into concentrated rehearsals for its fall season, opening in Montreal, September 26, with guest artist Mikhail Baryshnikov.

The Company presents four performances at Place des Arts in Montreal, "Swan Lake" on Friday and Saturday evenings, September 26 & 27; and "La Sylphide" and "Kettentan" at the matinee and evening performances on Sunday, September 28. Mr. Baryshnikov will dance the three evening performances.

Mikhail Baryshnikov, who, since his defection from the U.S.S.R. a year ago, has performed in Canada, the United States, Australia and France, joins the National Ballet for rehearsals in Toronto on September 10. On September 15, Erik Bruhn, resident producer for the company, returns to Toronto from Europe to coach Mr. Baryshnikov in the two productions, "Swan Lake" and "La Sylphide", both of which he choreographed for the National Ballet. The company flies to Montreal from Toronto on September 24, for a dress rehearsal at Place des Arts on the 25 and opens the following evening.

The National Ballet's Montreal engagement is the first time the Company has visited Montreal since its engagement with Rudolf Nureyev as guest artist in his new production of "The Sleeping Beauty" in September 1972.

From Montreal, the Company flies to Vancouver as the first stop in a tour of Canada's western provinces during which they will perform in Edmonton, Calgary, Banff, Saskatoon, Regina and Winnipeg. The Company returns to Ontario at the end of October for appearances in Hamilton, Windsor and London.

Montreal and the western portion of the company's tour is made possible in part through grants from the Touring Office of the Canada Council and IBM Canada Limited.

Fitzgerald and Brooker: their drawings

Bertram Brooker was born in England in 1888 and emigrated to Canada with his family in 1905. He died in 1955. A man of many parts, he was an advertising executive, novelist, poet, editor, musician, illustrator and artist. At the time of his meeting with FitzGerald he was painting his abstract canvases, such as "Sounds Assembling" (1928), in contrast with FitzGerald's explorations of trees and still-lifes. But in the 1930's, influenced by FitzGerald, he began to explore nature forms, looking at these drawings as preliminary study material for works he anticipated doing in a totally different style. Their pencil treatment of trees, for example, is often similar but their work in ink quite dissimilar. FitzGerald wrote of Brooker:

"Intensity, precision and searching for an even finer expression of inner compulsions, are revealed in all the drawings and paintings that Bertram Brooker has left to us and we are deeply indebted to him for an example of artistic integrity..."

The exhibition has been prepared by Patricia Bovey, Curator, the Winnipeg Art Gallery, who has also written the introduction to the illustrated catalogue which is available, price $1.00.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18: Victor Brooker, son of Bertram Brooker, will be our guest for a "Brown Bag Lunch" at 12.30 p.m. in the Art Centre. There will be an informal discussion of these two artists and the exhibition. Bring your sandwich; coffee will be provided.

This exhibition is an exploration of the relationship between two Canadian artists, FitzGerald and Brooker, as expressed in their works in pencil, ink, crayon and watercolour. Drawings form a major part of the work of both men; trees and still-lifes are the most common subjects but both also did abstracts and in that vein they were forerunners of abstraction in Canadian art.

FitzGerald and Brooker met in Winnipeg in 1929 and a close and enduring friendship began and continued in lengthy correspondence between them. Influences on drawing and painting flowed both ways, but each pursued his individual course; both remained somewhat apart from the contemporary style of landscape painting associated with the Group of Seven.

Lionel LeMoine FitzGerald was born in Winnipeg in 1890 and spent most of his life in that city where he was Principal of the Winnipeg School of Art from 1929 to 1949. He died there in 1956. A quiet and sensitive man, he was a prolific worker, leaving a great number of subtle but very powerful drawings and some fine canvases. He wrote of his own approach to his work: "It is necessary to get inside the object and push it out rather than merely building it up from the outer aspect...This requires endless search and contemplation; continuous effort and experiment; and appreciation for the endlessness of the living force which seems to pervade and flow through all natural forms, even though these seem on the surface to be ephemeral."

Performing Arts Office

by Alan Mann

The Performing Arts Office, an office of the University which you'll be hearing quite a bit about in the next few issues of the Journal have put together a partial list of some fifty events varying from the movie Attica to the stage presentation Ten Women, Two Men and a Moose to a concert with Ashkenazy with the N.A.C. Orchestra. There are three subscription series offered this year, plus three film series offered in conjunction with the Department of Film Studies.

A detailed booklet of the Series available can be obtained either at Registration or at the Agnes Etherington Arts Centre, and watch for the Performing Arts Office previews each issue of the Journal.

Theatre 5 on the move

Theatre 5's new home will be Brewery Lane Theatre, at 370 King St. West. Once John Morton's thriving brewery and distillery, the attractive old limestone buildings on the lakeshore at Morton Street have been an armed forces hospital, and more lately, part of the general offices for Military District 3.

A large part of that complex has been bought by the city of Kingston. Parks and Recreation now run it, and intend to make the old buildings active again by creating an arts and crafts centre for the city of Kingston.

Weavers, potters, lapidarists, actors, designers and musicians are finding their way to Morton St., and the thriving book sale for the Symphony Orchestra is now housed in the Rotary Rotunda, next door to the Brewery Lane Theatre.

In 1844 the British Whig of March 1st ran a story about 'Mr. Morton's Mammoth Distillery' which began - 'Having lately paid a visit to this most extensive Establishment, the largest on the continent of America, we have been induced to favor the public with a slight description of Mr. Morton's property whereon his business is transacted as Brewer and Distiller.'

Apparently a Mineral Wells was used as a public bath, 'fitted up with hot, cold, vapour and shower baths, for the cure of various complaints' on the same premises, probably because of the steam enginges and proximity to the lake.

Theatre 5 has the use of a large room almost tone-third of the length of the building, on the ground floor, which we are painting and carpeting throughout.

The stage will be moveable, to take advantage of the shape of the room, so that for some productions we can use a semi-proscenium type of setting, and for others, a thrust, or in-the-round arrangement will be used, flexibility being the ideal in mind.

Festival '76'

This February Queen's is holding a festival of the Arts. As in previous years, this will include music, art, film, photography, poetry and drama. We need to start preparing for this week-long exhibition now.

Arts Festival provided the opportunity for students involved in the arts to present their talent to the student body at large. It is a relatively new facet of the Queen's experience and is shaped by everyone who participates.

Student involvement is everything. There is a need for coordinators of events, assistants, artists, performers, and arc welders. There is a place for you.

At present we are looking for people to take part in making this the best Arts Festival ever.

Bews News

by Paul Findlay

For those of you who are constantly being told that you are a dumb frosh this week, this column will try to explain what Bews is. For those of you who aren't, perhaps this will tell you something about this year's program.

Bews is the men's intramural athletic program at Queen's, thought by many to be one of the best in the province. The male university population is divided into some 24 units. These include the 4 Arts years, 4 Commerce years, 3 Law years, Science '79, Mining (including Geology, Metallurgy and Mining Engineering), Chemistry (including Engineering, Chemistry, Chemical Engineering and Engineering Physics), Civil-Math (Applied Math and Civil Engineering), Mechanical Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Business Grads, Engineering Grads (including grad students in Civil, Electrical, Chemical, Mechanical, Mining, Metallurgy, Chemistry, Math, Physics and Computer Science), Arts and Science Grads (all other grad students), Medicine (including Rehab and Nursing), Education and Phys. Ed. There is also an independent unit.

Although points are awarded in Bews for winning, the emphasis is on participation. So whether you are a great athlete, or someone who just enjoys playing sports, your showing up for any sport will be appreciated by the rest of your unit.

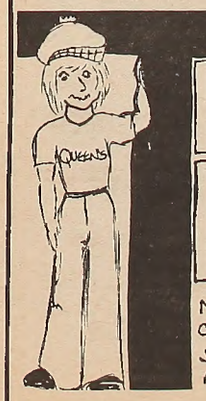
Each unit is organized by an athletic stick. For most units these people have been elected. First year units (ie Arts '79, Commerce '79, Science '79 and Law '78) will be electing their athletic sticks when they have their year elections. This year these units are urged to elect two athletic sticks in order that they can divide the responsibilities which begin very soon.

The first events are Tug-o-War and Monsterball being held Sept. 22 and 23 respectively. Entries for these events must be in by 9:00 a.m. on Friday the 19th. Other sports beginning shortly are golf, innertube waterpolo, track and field, tennis, horseshoes, football, rugby, indoor softball and soccer.

For those of you who would like to know how to play Monsterball there will be a clinic on the Outer Field at 7:00 p.m. next Thursday. There will also be an Innertube Waterpolo clinic on Tuesday the 23rd in the pool at 10:00 p.m.

A reminder to sports convenors and athletic sticks: There will be a convenors meeting next Tuesday and an M.I.A.C. meeting (for athletic sticks) next Wednesday. Both meetings commence at 7:00 p.m. in Seminar A of the Phys. Ed. Centre.

A first-class candidate shoud be acutely aware of your problems, sensitive to your needs.



In Kingston and the Islands that first-class candidate is Keith Norton. A Queen's graduate in Arts (1961), in Education (1962) and in Law (1969), Keith has a history of personal association with the Queen's community.

He is familiar with housing problems having spearheaded a review and updating of housing standards bylaw enforcement by City Council. He has served as liaison between the city and the student government, between the city and Queen's University, and between the city and the Health Science Complex planners. He served as director of Legal Aid with the Faculty of Law at Queen's. He promoted good day care as a member of the Board of Directors of Kingston Day Care Inc.

Through a history of involvement, Keith Norton is tuned in to the Queen's Community.

Universities: an election debate

Efforts by faculty members and student politicians to initiate debate on post-secondary education have finally been rewarded. Under the able chairmanship of David Bacon, President of the Queen's Faculty Association in a completely-packed Ellis Auditorium, Keith Norton, Ken Keyes and Lars Thompson fielded questions on a variety of educational issues.

Norton began the debate by arguing, as he has throughout the campaign, that our views on university spending must be coincided with a broader social perspective. "Other areas of need have changed our scope, and although the government must maintain its commitment to universities, it must also bear responsibility for those areas of even greater need."

It was a point he stressed again when attacked by former ASUS—VP John Ronson. Ronson argued that the PC party had done little to improve student housing and referred to a "desperate housing situation." Norton responded: "You're looking at the situation from a very narrow perspective, that of a student. Kingston has done quite well in terms of low-rental housing. In addition the government has to deal with problems throughout all the province, and, believe it or not, there are areas in more desperate straits than Kingston."

While both Norton and Thompson have natural links with the university community, Ken Keyes, the Liberal candidate does not. It was a disadvantage he attempted to reconcile at the opening of his remarks. After describing his various municipal links with the university, Keyes said, "The problem today is that universities do not have uniform standards. We have to return to more consistent standards to give universities a proper basis by which to screen their applicants." In addition Keyes called for greater long-range planning, including an attempt at a five-year global financing plan.

Keyes also defended the Liberal plan to eliminate the Ministry of Colleges and Universities arguing that such an integration was "a natural progression." But Norton and Thompson disagreed maintaining that the independence of the university was at stake and that integration on that level was just not possible.

Thompson began his attack on Tory policy by arguing that the "Tory Socialism" of the sixties has to be continued in order for the educational system to succeed. "You just don't encourage an institution to grow and then pull the plug." Placing a greater emphasis on central planning and efficiency, Thompson emphasized that "They built, built, built. But they didn't plan, plan, plan."

All three candidates received flak for not adhering to their own party's platform. Thompson opposes his own party's viewpoint on universal tuition. While the NDP supports free tuition, Thompson questions whether or not student accessibility will be improved by such a move. He did say, however, that the NDP, if elected, will need a good Minister of Education.

Keyes attacked his own federal party arguing that the resignation of John Turner as Minister of Finance demonstrates a lack of ability on the part of the Trudeau cabinet to "tighten their own belts."

But it was for Keith Norton that the most serious questions on lack of adherence to party line were levelled. Norton, the alderman for Sydenham Ward, has, in the past, relied heavily on student support for municipal success. His views naturally differ with those of his own Minister of Colleges and Universities, James Auld. For example, Norton favours a spending formula geared to the level of inflation and opposes certain inequities in the Ontario Student Awards Plan.

Faced with comments like, "We like you, but we don't like your party," Norton retorted, "I understand this community. I know this university. And if you don't think I'll fight for you, you're dead wrong."

Thompson ended the meeting by calling on other sectors of society to recognize their social responsibility. In focusing on education he asked for a redefinition of our values and our purpose in education. He remarked, "If a university education is really just a waiting room, then we've got to find more interesting things for you to do while you're in that waiting room."

A.M.S. outlines the issues

by Paul Steep

Increased government control over post secondary education means that the outcome of Thursday's provincial election will have a very direct effect upon all Ontario students. With this in mind the AMS set up the Election Action Committee to make sure that as many students as possible were enumerated and informed about the issues as they pertain to the university. They focused on three main policy areas: government funding of universities and its effects on the quality of our education; accessibility to university; and the worsening problem of student housing. These issues were decided to be the most important through a series of AMS meetings with the government over the past year and through what was described as a general concensus of AMS opinion. The AMS' position on each of these issues was explained by Peter Lane, AMS External Affairs Commissioner. Overall funding to universities has failed to keep pace with the rate of inflation over the past four years.

This year Queen's deficit will soar to 1.1 million dollars. This has resulted in cutbacks of university services, an area the university feels is least likely to affect university life. The AMS disagrees and feels that the financial squeeze will very definitely have an adverse effect on us all.

Universities are presently financed through what is known as a formula funding scheme. According to Peter Lane, the Conservatives have made no policy statement in this area, but that if we judge them by their past actions, then allocations will continue to fall.

He also said that the Liberal party has a very hazy understanding of the problem. They propose to allocate money to each university on the basis of submissions made to the government by all post-secondary institutions. The obvious drawback here is the temptation to overestimate real costs thus leading to a spiralling education budget similar to that of the mid 1960's.

The NDP feels that grants should be at the very least keep up with inflation. They propose to raise the extra money required for such a program through a progressive tax of large corporations.

The AMS supports the concept of universal accessibility to post-secondary education. They do not feel that any qualified student should be turned away because of insufficient finances. This position naturally leads to a program of free tuition. The policy of universal accessibility is one taken directly from the NDP platform. Lane pointed out that although the AMS agreed with the party's policy in this area, it was not to be construed as an endorsement of the NDP in the upcoming election.

Student housing and the living allowance were seen to be the issues most directly affecting Queen's students. The AMS would like to see a clearer definition of exactly what the allowance covers. They also feel that it is arrived at too arbitrarily. According to the AMS there

Green Paper Quote

"The universities have managed effectively to deal with unprecedented growth; they have maintained and improved academic quality; they have expanded and enriched the range of opportunities to the people of Ontario; they have honoured the objective of improving accessability to university education...." - from the Green Paper from a Special Committee of the Council of Ontario Universities.

Although universities such as Queen's have a strong and proven record, there is still room for improvement. Your concerns with post-secondary education would be strongly represented by Keith Norton.

will work to ensure that universities have sufficient lead time in knowing about future funding to effectively plan their future will work to ensure that the formula system is revised to eliminate prejudicial effects for any individual post-secondary institution in the allocation of public funding.

Enumeration

Student voting list

Student enumeration for Thursday's provincial election continues this week. On Tuesday and Wednesday students can get their names added to the voters list by coming to the John Orr room. Normally additions would have ended last Wed., Sept. 10th, however, under section 29 of the election act enumeration can continue until the day before the election if you have changed your address during the campaign. This applies to most students at Queen's who are not on the voters list.

In the Kingston re-enumeration (including Queen's campus) 2534 people had been added to the lists as of Friday. It is estimated that at least half of these are students. In addition, roving enumerators have added another twenty-five names in the last two days.

Dryden's project

OPIRG on campus

Montreal Canadien Goaltender Ken Dryden paid a visit to the Queen's campus Sept. 11 to talk on a topic far removed from the world of hockey.

Speaking at Ontario Universities, Dryden is currently promoting a plan to establish university groups dedicated to public service.

The idea is to organize Public Interest Research Groups (PIRG's) on campuses throughout Ontario. PIRG's are the brainchild of American consumer advocate Ralph Nader, and Dryden's proposals are very similar.

The concept entails a fee paid by students at registration, the receipts of which would go to PIRG's to engage in research and lobbying in the public interest. Such a fee, though paid by all students (if passed by referendum) would be refundable to any who disagreed with the aims or working of the plan.

The purpose of the PIRG's, as described by Dryden, is to involve as many people as possible in "public service." This, he stresses is a broad term encompassing work in the fields of energy problems, housing, environmental conservation, occupational and health hazards as well as a realm of other possibilities. The parameters of the PIRG concept are purposefully limitless in order to allow the participation in them of people with diverse goals and backgrounds.

Ontario PIRG's (OPIR's) would have a two pronged structure. On the one hand there would be the local board, employing one full time coordinator and being directed by a board of students. The local board would have its focus in Queen's and Kingston and would send a representative to a provincial board. This provincial body would employ a number of full-time employees and would function to set up PIRG's with province-wide benefits as their concern. These two boards would split all collected monies evenly, each getting $2.50 of the $5 student OPIRG feel.

Dryden is emphatic in his desire that the PIRG's be campus based organizations, and he cites several basic reasons for this. In particular, he suggests that, viewed as a group within society, students are probably more interested in social service than any other group of comparable size. Avoiding the stereotypic view of the idealistic student, Dryden still feels that a larger nucleus of concern reinforced by a larger circle of supportive is not terribly active members is to be found in a body of students than elsewhere.

In addition, the methodology to be employed by a PIRG is the same Dryden suggests, as that used by students in their everyday functioning. Problem solving and quality testing as carried out in a campus laboratory could be directed equally toward practical PIRG goals as well as towards theoretical or academic ones. Dryden suggests that indeed, the application of school work towards the practical goals of a PIRG could help bring learning alive.

There are some weaknesses inherent in citizen volunteer groups that could be avoided by placing the focal point of a PIRG on the campus, Dryden feels. The ordinary citizen, facing the demands of family and work has too little time to devote to public service in any large way.

In addition, funding for such citizen groups is always a problem. Dependent on government or foundation grants, the contributions of a usually small membership and the chancey results of solicitation, such volunteer groups, are eternally subject to financial failure, said Dryden. The campus based PIRG's on the other hand, with a continuous, year after year $5 from each student, would have a security almost unique. Though aided by grants and contributions, they would not be reliant on these and would be able therefore to hire and keep full time staff and make other long range plans and arrangements.

The object of the PIRG's, emphasized Dryden, is to involve as many people as possible in one project, thus ensuring that no one person has his resources and-or time taxed to the quitting point. Students, he feels, are a built-in group, all set to make such a scheme viable.

There are presently 2 PIRG's in Ontario, at Waterloo and McMaster, each operating on a budget of $5 from each student. Referenda on the question of organizing new PIRG's are being planned at seven more universities for this year. Supporters of the concept are hopeful that the November referendum here at Queen's will include such a question and that it will see the addition of $5 to the present student interest fee for the establishment of a Queen's PIRG.

In concluding his short talk, Dryden was unable to provide a great deal of concrete evidence of PIRG's successes either here in Ontario or in the U.S. where they originated (groups now exist in 20 states). He was however optimistic and his enthusiasm and belief in the possibilities of the PIRG concept was evident. With obvious support from various members of the Queen's community, Dryden will continue the push to establish a Pirg chapter here.

Partisan posters?

To publicize the educational issues of the upcoming election the A.M.S. printed its own posters on the policy areas of housing, university funding and universal accessibility. The A.M.S. printed the posters after rejecting posters that were printed by O.F.S. These posters carried the headline, "Vote No To Cutbacks." The A.M.S. also rejected similarly labelled pamphlets. They felt that these could be interpreted as supporting a partisan position as they are very close to the public statements of the N.D.P. However, even in their revised form a controversy over the posters has still erupted.

Progressive Conservatives on campus claim that these posters publicize a partisan position. They say since student money was used to make the posters, they should present an objective point of view.

However, Peter Lane, a member of the committee that designed the posters, maintained that the committee approached the issues only from a student point of view; if their position happened to be in agreement with a certain party, it was only insofar as it related to that particular issue.

It was not to be interpreted as a blanket endorsement of the party or its policies in other areas, said Lane.

Bruce Trotter, another member of the committee, also emphasized that they were only trying to present educational issues. He said, "The posters present the facts. They present the issues."

The posters are also being criticized because they carry no indication of who sponsored them. Doug Bonnell, a Norton organizer, said that "this could only mean that A.M.S., after spending $1500 of student money, was unwilling to accept responsibility for their work."

Bruce Trotter admitted that this was a mistake and that the posters should have indicated they were sponsored by the A.M.S.

The election Action Committee, responsible for the posters, consisted of Craig Brown, Cindi Hall, Bruce Trotter, Peter Lane and Ruth Ranson. The committee was set up in the summer in the hope of presenting the educational issues to the students and to encourage as many as possible to get their names on the voters list.

OFS action

In the election campaign currently in progress, the OFS made it a top priority to make both students and the public aware that there are post-secondary educational issues in this election. Their special election issue of The Ontario Student, made a solid attempt to try and force the leaders of the three major parties to come to grips with these issues in a constructive manner. Their campaign focussed on: a) the financial support levels to students (OSAP) involving the expansion of accessibility to university education for those presently excluded by both social and financial pressures, b) the levels of government funding to universities and c) student housing including the other members of society who are involuntarily placed in competition with students.

They also concentrated and centralized the Ontario-wide drive to ensure potential voting students would not be disenfranchised by the untimely election date.

Debate!

The following is a discussion of several student issues by three Queen's students affiliated with the three parties in the upcoming provincial election. The students concerned, Gus Itzck (Liberal Party) Sue Breau (New Democratic Party) and Ross Drummond (Progressive Conservative Party) are in no way official party spokespeople but were asked to participate due to their past and present involvement in the respective parties

Gus Itzek is a 3rd year history and politics student, and was president of the Queen's Student Liberals in '74-'75. Sue Breau, also in 3rd year History and Politics, is active in the Queen's New Democrats. Ross Drummond, a 4th year politics student, is a past president of the Queen's Progressive Conservative party and is current vice-president of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Campus Association.

Journal: Let's talk about University financing.

Drummond: With regards to the university funding, the government's position at this time is that we are in a time of very bad economic circumstances, and that every sector of the economy face basic restraints. I feel that it is necessary for the universities to start examining their procedures and to excercise restraint, because nobody in the economy at this time can have an open-ended budgeting system.

Itzek: I would like to question the PC's stand on that, because obviously if they are so concerned about inflation and rising prices and trying to use cutbacks, etc...- why do we have a 4 billion dollar deficit, and there is no optimistic outlook of it getting better at any time? So I think that their idea of cutting back costs by putting a ceiling on education spending through universities is not a good idea, definitely something the Liberals would not stand for. They would at least look into university budgets and make it so that at least they could afford modern technical equipment for the labs and in their whole area of schooling

Breau: Yes. To me, it's a question of organization of priorities. We're not suggesting in our party that we increase spending and give the universities everything they want.

Journal: How about tuition? Do your parties want to raise tuition? Do they think they may have to? What about free tuition?

Breau: I could start off there. The definite goal, and it's stated in all our party platforms, is: free tuition eventually. There's no way that we're going to pretend that we can do it now.

Drummond: I want to ask a question right away. If it's a definite goal of your party for free tuition, why is Lars Thompson against it?

Breau: Because it can't be done now- you can tell me why it can't be done now.

Drummond: He is against the concept of free tuition in principal, and he so stated about 3 or 4 evenings ago at an all candidates meeting. He does not agree.....

Breau: University education should not be the right of people who have money. Right now I don't think that the party can possibly say that we can have free tuition.

Sue Breau

Gus Itzek

As I said, we have to re-evaluate; there has to be centralized control, looking over the universities, seeing what the priorities are; seeing where the money should be spent. Then we can investigate at what prices, what proportio of the university education should be paid by the student. Then we can investigate that. But as of right now, the system is in such a mess that it wouldn't be possible.

Itzek: I'd like to say now that we can't leave out the grants and the loans on this topic since it concerns tuition; and, agreeing with Sue, we cannot eliminate it; it would be the ideal solution to eliminate it; although the Liberal party is working on eliminating tuition for people over 65 years of age, but...

Breau: That's great, maybe we should all come back when we're 65!

Itzek: This at least gives older people a break, but in regards to the tuition situation, I see nothing wrong, and I think the party takes the same stand: that tuitions can go up. But as the Liberal party also states, it would also make grants and loans much easier to receive, and make it therefore much more equal or fairer for people with less funds.

Drummond: Where? Where do they state that? They don't state it in the Liberal Party platform. They don't state it in anything else they've released.

Drummond: The PC party stand on tuition is quite simple: They believe that the student has to make a financial contribution to his education. If you examine the situation right now, tuition fees were raised in 1971 by $100. That was the first increase since about 1958; well actually it was earlier.

Breau: But I am frightened of what is going to happen next. Because if we raise tuition, to make students pay a good proprotion of their education, with the rate of inflation right now, within two years we'd be paying $2000!

Drummond: I didn't say that the government intends to raise tuition by the rate of inflation. I did not say that the government intends to raise tuition at all.

Breau: Well, tell me what it intends to do.

Drummond: Well, the Premier has stated that this year the tuition fees were not going to go up, and I guess you cannot really predict what financial situation the universities are going to be in until the estimates for the next year come forth. The party feels, the government feels, the Premier feels, and the candidate in this riding feels, that the student must bear a certain percentage and I guess that will vary according to economic times) of the cost of his education, and it should.

Breau: Well, you see, there's the difference in our philosophies. Education is a right. It's a right. We should be entitled to a university education.

Drummond: Universal accessibility is a right too, but I don't think any student really has any problem raising the basic tuition fees. Now, living costs may be something else, but I think that the university grant system is not that bad. There are changes I'd like to see in it, and changes which I've lobbied for consistently.

Journal: You said you wanted to talk about the loans and grants system - student aid.

Drummond: I think the Conservative party has done as much as they could under the present financial circumstances. Two out of five students in Ontario do receive aid from the government. The aid from the government of Ontario at present, or up until very recently, was a grant and the aid from the government of Canada was a loan, so that the money you received from Ontario was a giveaway; it wasn't money that you had to pay back, it was a grant. But there's a new system, a new thing, that's just been added to the Ontario System: the Ontario Student Loan Plan, which is a co-equivalent to the Canada Student Loan Plan...This has been introduced to make things easier.

Journal: What about accessibility? Do you feel that the current system allows post-secondary education to be within reach for all students?

Breau: Here is a perfect example of socialism without expert socialists. The idea of the student loan is good; it could be an excellent programme, but it needs revamping. It seems to me where a student warrants independence from their parents, all right, don't give him a grant, give them a loan, and let them pay it back. All right, lets say the parents are making too damn much money....Why should we have to be considered dependent until they're 24 years old, when they can vote at 18?

Drummond: Well, you are incorrect to one degree, because after four years of education you are declared independent.

Journal: Ross, what is your party's intention regarding OSAP and the employment situation for students? Do they plan to introduce compensation grants to reduce summer savings or reduced employment during the summer?

Drummond: Essentially the government's position, or the most recent move, was to set up a special person in the ministry to handle appeals of students who were unemployed or had lesser earnings than they could have been expected to have and that this person has been established there so that the people will be processed extremely quickly and so that the person will have no financial deficit as a result of the fact that he was unemployed.

Journal: What about student housing?

Itzek: Well from the Liberal standpoint, they would first of all definitely try to get in touch with the municipalities i.e., with the municipal government of Kingston, and start immediate budgeting programme of building new housing, of building better student housing, of making it affordable for students; and something the Davis government has not been doing and that is trying to get in touch with municipal governments and saying, listen lets get together in this. They're just saying "Kingston, do it; it's your problem."

Breau: I'd like to hear what Ross has to say on what the Conservatives are going to do. This is the whole point that gets me mad. They haven't said anything about residences and student accommodation. They've said, "we'll raise the student awards" and stuff like that, but what about accommodation? There is a freeze on residences, and I'd like to know whether in the campaign anything has been said about whether the government is going to look into it.

Drummond: I don't think any of the three parties have stated in one way or another that they're going to be building any.

Itzek: I said they would attempt...

Drummond: Where has Mr. Nixon said they would attempt? Regardless of that, this isn't the point, I think the government has made remarkable progress in the building of housing in the province. I don't think there's as great a shortage in Kingston as one would believe. I came down here last Monday - I spent five minutes in the Housing bureau and I found a place. Five minutes...

Breau: The kinds of housing some students are living in I wouldn't even walk in!

Journal: An issue of substantial interest to health sciences students and social science students is the fact that part of their education consists of on-the-job-training. Many must spend a great deal of the summer working in hospitals, providing a service, but also learning while they do it. This reduces or eliminates their chances of getting summer or part-time employment What would you parties do to remunerate these students, and to compensate them for lost earnings?

Drummond: Okay. I'm aware of the situation, but not one hundred percent sure of what the government is doing about the case of the Rehab students...What I do know is that this new announcement (of Aug. 27), and the compensation in OSAP, will do a great deal to relieve these individuals. These cases will be processed as quickly as possible....which means they will recieve full benefits. Basically, these students are unemployed over the summer.

Journal: How about compensation?

Breau: The NDP would be saying it is a summer job. They are doing a summer job - why shouldn't they be paid for it?

"Going to take a sentimental Journal"

by T. Collins

This is the start of the Journal's hundred and second year on campus. Here is a brief introduction to the origins of the paper and some of the highlights from the Journal's past.

The first thin issue was filled with poetry and was about the size of a comic book. It remained in magazine format for 38 years during which time it was typically in financial trouble Editorials appeared regularly condemning those stdudents who did not pay their $.50 subscription fee.

News of campus life entered the paper around the 1890's, still most of the content was devoted to campus poets Early issues carried editorials contending that women should not be allowed to study with the men at Queen's. "The highest ideal of society is not that women become logic-choppers. The severer studies which are found necessary in the training of young men would not be best suited to women. Their proper sphere of action is in the domestic circle. ...May the day be far distant when Canadian Lady Jane Greys shall fill up the pauses in the dance with quotations from Plotinus, and spice up their drawing room conversations with discussions on the differential calculus or transendental idealism." 1876. So spake the editor.

Women fought back in the letters column and won the support of the principal who also wrote in his disagreement with the editor's point of view.

The first woman editor of the Journal was Charlotte Whitton in 1917 who was also the first woman president of the AMS and later Mayor of Ottawa Women again filled the editor's post in 1935, 1945 and 1956. Recently there has been a rash of them with all but three volumes since 1967 having women editors

In the paper's infancy, the college's enrolment was such that personal stories and barbs were possible to publish and have appreciated by the majority of students. Examples of this are headlines such as "Hello Yank" and "John is sporting around the halls in a black suit", from the 1890's. As the Queen's Review remarked in 1937, "How the objects of these witty thrusts must have squirmed in their Victorian modesty!"

Local business establishments supported the Journal then as they do now. Advertisements were allowed into the paper shortly after its conception. Presently revenue from this source constitutes half the Journal's funds One advertisement from October 28th, 1899 reads:

HONG LEE
388 Princess Street

500 cents me give for dis to show how me like your trade.

Low prices. Good Laundry on all kinds of linen and underwear

Generally it seems the editors have never had smooth relations with the AMS. Mutual charges of incompetence appear regularly today as they have for years. Grudge hockey matches were staged between the Journal staff and AMS in the '50's.

For a brief time in the late '40's the Journal sent its sports and news editors over to CFRC to broadcast 'Journal on the Air'

In all, the history of the Journal has been one of good experiences for participants and occasional flares of student controversy. The Journal won the Southam trophy for excellence in 1956 and was a founding member of the Canadian University Press. People have always been attracted to the paper, offering their services free of charge in exchange for a byline or a spot in the masthead.

Occasionally photographs of the workers are published in order to maintain staff morale. Sadly, in 1894 an attempt to do just that was spoiled because "a boil on the nose of the Business Manager.. delayed the photo's appearance for two weeks".

Source material for this article came from clippings in the Alumni Association files and from old bound copies of the Journal and Tricolor. Our appreciation is extended to Mr. Murray Gill and Mr. Herb Hamilton of the Alumni Association for their cooperation in producing this column.

Interviews with Kingston and the Islands Candidates

...on current student issues

Interviews by Sarah Yarnell

Keith Norton Progressive Conservative Party

Lately, financing of the university, and the role of the university have become topics of controversy. What do you see as the university's role in society?

The university's role is to preserve the academic tradition, to advance learning, to be a seat for academic pursuit and research, and to be a breeding ground for new ideas and approaches to social problems. It is low on the pole as a training ground for employment.

What priority do you feel the universities should have in the provincial budget?

They have priority; but it is impossible to say whether they are One, Two or Three. The government has no intention of leaving universities with million dollar deficits. I am convinced that the government will follow the Ontario Council on University Affairs' next recommendations, if at all possible. The universities will and must continue to have high priority in the government's budget.

Do you feel current levels of university funding are adequate?

There are problems with the current method of financing; however, I think the system of formula financing is desirable. Before this system, universities had much less autonomy and flexibility. The BIU system is prejudicial at Queen's because Queen's is static, is not in a growth-oriented state. I am convinced that Queen's has made a sincere effort to curtail spending. This year, the level of funding which led to Queen's carrying a $1 million deficit, is an exception. Yet we must accept the reality of constraint. We can't afford the open-ended spending of the sixties.

Accessibility to a post-secondary education is an issue which many students and the Ontario Federation of Students are concerned about. Do you feel that tuition and living costs are barriers to some people who want to attend university?

We have made a lot of progress: tuition has been non-inflated, and student assistance programmes have improved to provide greater accessibility. I doubt finances are a major deterrent to someone who wants to go to university. The maximum debt for a four year Arts programme would be $3200. That debt is relatively small. There could be an improved loans system, in which students could borrow more than $800 if they wanted to. The savings requirements perhaps ought to be geared to summer earnings.

Should we have free tuition and receive a living stipend while at university?

Not at this time, certainly. It may be advantageous for students to share with society the responsibility of the cost of their education. It is not entirely society's responsibility. We students personally benefit.

In recent years, there has been an increasingly serious shortage of student housing in Kingston. What do you see as the provincial government's role in improving the situation?

In the near future, the provincial government definitely has to come across with more support for student housing, because we need more student housing. Recently, when the provincial government has told the federal government how many millions of dollars are needed for housing in Ontario, they have received only a portion of what they requested. Most of this money has recently gone to family housing.

Lars Thompson New Democratic Party

The university has two functions: research and teaching. Now, the research role is in jeopardy because of the cutbacks in govermernment funding. The governmnent is asking for faculty to carry a greater teaching load, which leaves less time for research.

High priority.

In the sixties, the Conservative government wanted more universities; now it is unwilling to pay the bill for expansion. An NDP government would support the universities; you have to support universities. Right now, the corporations and resource industries are not paying their share of the financial load. And the PC government is spending money on roads and hydro expansion.

There is no simple one-step cure for the problems. The current system discriminates against some people; for example, because there is no "local quota" of students a university must admit each year, Kingston residents who are accepted at Western are being turned away from Queen's. And some of these people can't afford to live away from home and go to Western. If a student is acceptable at one Ontario university, he should be acceptable at all Ontario universities. The cost of living away from home is a barrier. Tuition is only a fraction of the cost to go to university.

I don't see an abolition of fecs; instead, there are other support systems that should be investigated. The co-op system is one, in which the student works as part of his studies, and is paid at an apprenticeship rate. There should be an extension of both the student loan and bursary; however I'm not sure about providing a living stipend. The money then has to come from somewhere else in the government budget. Besides, offering free tuition and a living stipend is a type of universal scheme, and I don't feel that universal schemes evaluate need.

There is a need for student housing. If student housing is not provided, then the student demand forces rents up and puts pressure on the housing market, forcing out the lower income people and the old. The provincial government is responsible for providing housing. A system of land banking can be used, in which the provincial government would provide a grant to buy rural land north of 401 for student housing. You know, have a shuttle bus service or something. You can't possibly accommodate all the students in the core of the city, and force out everyone else.

Kenneth Keyes Liberal Party

Under the Liberal government, universities would have five-year budgets, so there could be better long-term planning. Within their own budgets, universities must be able to set their own priorities. They must regain their autonomy. Right now there is no autonomy because the provincial government pays for 85 percent of the cost of educating students.

They can't be Number One because food and shelter are Number One. Universities have to be prepared to tighten their belts a bit, and attempt a balanced budget. There may have to be a raise in tuition fees because of inflation.

The percentage of post-secondary costs which the government pays (85 per cent), may have to be reduced. Universities will have to seek funding elsewhere. More "esprit de corps" has to be developed so that Queen's students and alumni are more willing to provide increased financial assistance. Universities may have to curtail programmes.

The student awards system needs to be revamped. For one thing, the current system tends to make liars out of people; for example, you find some parents vouching dishonestly about their salary so their child can get a better loan or grant. The age of independence should be changed to 18. The loan limit must be raised, with more loan being provided per student, at the risk of less grant. We don't need to offer larger grants; we need a better way to determine need.

That would be a totally socialist system beyond my acceptance.

The provincial government is responsible for making mortgages available so that student housing can be built on land owned by the university or student government. I just found out that the Ontario Student Housing Corporation, which is supposed to be performing this function, has fallen apart. I'm not sure why. I believe this is why recently money has not been made available to build student accommodation. So, regardless of this foul-up in the system, I still feel it is the province's responsibility to ensure that a corporation such as the OSHC provides money for student housing starts.

When it rains it's poor

by Alan Mann

Playing at the Odeon Theatre right now "until at least Thursday" is The Devil's Rain, a film, which despite a cast that boasts such names as Ernest Borgnine, Keenan Wynn, and Canada's own William Shatner with an "appearance" of Ida Lupino as Mrs. Preston, is doomed to spend the rest of it's immortal life as the thriller on Saturday afternoon television.

The movie advances, inhumanly, with little plot, as much acting, and even less suspense. One might say that the special effects were gruesome, so if you happen to have three dollars to spend, and two hours to waste, buy some molding wax and some cheese whiz, make thirteen figurines, one with horns and a beard, then dress them in black robes, place them in a frying pan at a low heat, and as they melt, sprinkle the occasional cup of water over them. It'll be as good as the movie.

Performing Arts Office

The Performing Arts Office is presenting six different series this year, three in association with the Department of Film Studies The International concerts, Grant Hall Series, will feature large ensembles and soloists. The Series starts off on Monday, October 20 with Janos Starker, one of the world's foremost cellists. His first appearance in Kingston was in March, 1974 when he performed unaccompanied This time he is to be accompanied by Alain Planes.

Then on Wednesday, November 12, the fifteen member Stratford Festival Ensemble, the resident musical group of the Stratford Festival come to Grant Hall followed, on Thursday January 22, by the Sofia Soloists. Formed in 1962, this Bulgarian ensemble of string players have toured Europe extensively as well as North America and Japan Conducted by Vassil Kazandjiev, the ensemble is considered one of Europe's finest chamber orchestras. The fact that the personnel of the Sofia Soloists has remained unchanged since it's formation contributes in no small way to the "magnificent corporate sound" of the ensemble.

Another return performance is on Tuesday, March 2 when the Prague Madrigal Antique, eighteen instrumentalists and singers with authentic costumes and instruments borrowed from the National Museum of Prague, perform their own style of medieval, Renaissance and contemporary music. The series finishes on Thursday, April 1 with the N.A.C. Orchestra making what is now becoming an annual appearance in Kingston, this time under the direction of Vladimir Ashkenazy, the Russian pianist, who will also perform as guest piano soloist All performances start at 20:30.

The Dunning Hall Series specializes in chamber music. It starts off on Monday, October 27 with the Philidor Trio, an ensemble of soprano, harpsichord and recorder baroque flute. Composed of former members of the New York Pro Musica, the Philidor Trio specializes in the music of the Baroque period, covering the vast range of styles and forms, from most of the countries of Europe. The Trio uses "in depth" programming for each of its recitals, which allows the audience to expience several aspects of a single style, composer, or period.

In its second concert, on Wednesday November 19, the Dunning Hall Series will present the York Winds, a wood winds quartet associated with the music programme at York University. This concert will feature a work by a young Canadian composer commissioned specifically by the artist for a premiere performance at Queen's. The quartet's repertoire ranges from the middle Baroque period to the avant garde Canadian.

On Monday, January 12, the Orford String Quartet will perform, with Anton Kuerti and Gary Karr. All three have received excellent reviews, and Karr is considered the greatest living virtuoso on the string bass. Another string quartet, the Guarneri, will play on Tuesday, February 10. This quartet formed in 1965, and has quickly established itself as a ranking quartet in the United States.

Finally, on Tuesday, March 9, the Dunning series ends with Tashi, a group of four American instrumentalists. From informal sessions the group has performed to share their music with others. They debuted in New York in 1973, and have received critical acclaim. Again all concerts are to start at 20:30 hrs. and further information is available at the Performing Arts Office at 547-6194 or in the P.A.O. brochure available at the Agnes Etherington Arts Centre or by keeping an eye out for the Performing Arts Office section of the Arts pages in the Journal.

Note: The three film series will be described in detail in the next issue of the Queen's Journal should be an itemized list of expenditures that the allowance will cover and it should be regionalized They reason that it costs more to live in Toronto than it does to live in Kingston, but at present a student of U. of T. receives the same allowance as a student at Queen's.

At present no grants allow a student to maintain a lifestyle as high as what is recognized as the poverty line. Therefore the AMS would like to see a program that allows students to maintain a better lifestyle and ends their competition with others on fixed incomes, like senior citizens, for the same housing.

Earl Scruggs Revue

A rainy night in Kingston

by Alan Mann

It was a rainy night when the Earl Scruggs revue came to Grant Hall, and many people braved the terrible weather to see an old style banjo player play some old style banjo music. Backing him up was a four man group, three of whom were his sons. Right from his opening, old style banjo fans were terribly disappointed

The warm up was good. Colleen Peterson, a pretty and rather talented singer pleased the audience with a variety of music on her guitar and on the piano. She included several of her own pieces, some works that go back to her Spriggs and Bringle days with Mark Haynes, and works by other musicians such as A. P. Carter. Although she was not as comfortable alone on stage as she might have been, she never got blocked or boring. It was after a brief intermission that Earl and the Revue walked on.

Lately, there has been a large "back to country" movement in the younger generation. This movement has brought back to fame such old timers as Papa John Screech, Blind John Davis, Woody Guthrie, and Martin, Bogan, and the Armstrongs. Earl Scruggs can also be considered as a member of this list. This movement has also caused a large gap to be formed among these various artists, those still living at any rate. There are those, like Blind John Davis, and Martin, Bogan and the Armstrongs who feel that the youth have come to hear their music, the music they've played for years; and there are others among them, like Screech and Scruggs, who believe that the artists should adapt their music to try to fit in with the general mood of the music listened to by their new fans. This can either be done well, as in the case of Screech, his fiddle and the Jefferson Starship, (formerly Jefferson Airplane); or badly, as in the case of Scruggs, his banjo and the Revue. Scruggs, according to advance promo, was supposed to have been "using his banjo to explore many other forms of music: blues, rock, jazz, modern-country and pop." The Revue's music was described as being "a hybrid for which a label has yet to be invented." The latter is probably true only to general politeness and manners, and as for using the banjo to explore other forms, the banjo is not a particularly bluesy instrument, nor does it fit particularly well with a Clapton imitation on the electric guitar

This is not to say that the concert was entirely without artistic merit; when Earl did occasionally play without being drowned out, the audience got what it came to see and hear, but such times were too few and far between to be well remembered.

The Revue's major drawback is a drummer with no rhythm and too loud a beat. The comedy in this is that the drummer is the only member of the troupe that isn't a Scruggs, the two guitarists and the pianist all being Earl's sons, and undoubtedly the major factors in Earl's conversion to the new style. Of these three, the only memorable one is Steve Scruggs, a good pianist, arranger, writer, and a fast banjo player

The younger and newer comers to this type of music enjoyed the show and went wild. The older fans were annoyed at both the boisterous crowd and at what had happened to their old hero. When the concert was over, the rain was still coming down.

Are YOU going to make the same mistake again?

As Minister of Education, Bill Davis encouraged the expansion of post-secondary institutions. The Conservatives are still planning to do tomorrow what should have been done yesterday. They have failed to plan for the realities of the seventies and eighties.

Ontario New Democrats believe we must anticipate and attack tomorrow's problems today.

Gaels falter in fourth, victim of Concordia comeback

by Tom Shand

In a game played at the Loyola Campus of Concordia University on Saturday, the Queen's Golden Gaels dominated Concordia offensively and defensively for most of the first three quarters but surrendered ten unanswered points in the final stanza to lose a heart-breaking 17-14.

Although many outsiders see their chances of reaching the upper echelons of the OUAA standings this fall as slim, the Gaels showed themselves to be a squad vastly improved from the injury ridden team of 1974 Head Coach Frank Tindall has lost the services of several key performers from previous seasons including Dave Hadden, Bruce Pollock, Ian Anderson, Raol Serebrin, Alex Morris, John Waddell, Peter McNabb, Keith Taggart and Mike O'Shaughnessy but for the most part their shoes have been filled extremely well.

The only flaring weakness in the Queen's starting line-up thus far has been the inability of Doug Latham (who has taken over from non-returning incumbent Raol Serebrin) to throw the ball consistently with any authority. Latham hit on only 8 of 23 pass attempts for 148 yds and also threw four interceptions. Latham has yes his flanker Bob O'Doherty (2 for 37) who had an outstanding afternoon. In addition sure-handed Greg Anderson (4 for 71) was at end.

The running game which last year, after the injury to Dave Hadden, was basically ineffective looks vastly improved. This season fullback Jim Duncan (13 carries for 81 yards) and halfbacks Kaczmarek (14 for 52) and Kerry Powell (9 for 35) have all looked most impressive in the early going.

Duncan has the material great backs are cut from as he apparently refuses to believe he can be brought down. His ability to spin off and break tackles can be attributed to a fine sense of balance. Rarely has Duncan tackled single handedly. His running mate. Gerry Kaczmarek, is a transfer student from St. Francis Xavier where he virtually dominated the Atlantic Conference.

In his four year stay at Antagonish, Gerry was a three time league all star and was three times judged by his teammates to be their MVP.

Frank Tindall, over his 28 years coaching the Gaels, has favoured a balanced attack and he appears to have a potentially strong offence with which to do this. The offensive line looks solid and so do the ball handlers. Latham's arm is the major question mark.

Queen's defence has traditionally been tough and this year is no exception. Led by veterans Darrel Craig, Norm Hagarty, and a strong secondary, the big 'D' held the Concordia attack to virtually nothing for three quarters. However the final quarter told the story as Concordia, led by the fine signal calling and strong right arm of Q.B. Wayne Morley and the brilliant running of highly touted halfback Wade Clare, tore apart the Queen's defence. With only 37 yards rushing to their credit coming into the fourth quarter it appeared that Concordia's only hope was through the air, but then for some unknown reason the roof caved in. Moving into a strong wind in the last fifteen minutes Concordia blew through the Queen's defenders for 81 yards on the ground, the drive climaxed by Wade Clare with only 1:31 left to play. Concordia had begun their scoring march on the Queen's 30 after Q.B. Latham completed two passes in the final moments in a desperate attempt to score but the drive was snuffed out when Concordia's John Montepelaire intercepted an errant pass at his own 35.

The Gaels show signs of being a strong contender in the east. The game against Carleton next Saturday at George Richardson Memorial Stadium is a crucial one as Queen's then plays home and home again, the second time against the top ranked college team in the country, the University of Toronto Blues.

Notes: Gaels hurt themselves with foolish penalties setting up two Concordia field goals in the early going...

Queen's secondary surrendered two long passes although one gain was nullified by an illegal procedure penalty. Both passes were thrown over the head of Darrell Penner, Gael's only all star last season. He is in the final stages of recovery from a pre-season hamstring pull and will no doubt get stronger as time goes on...

Bob O'Doherty resembled Johnny R. in running back an 80 yard punt return for a T.D. as he followed a wall of blockers down the left sideline. He also made a spectacular diving catch of a Latham pass for a 22 yard pickup...

Queen's defence failed on two short yardage 3rd down situations, one from the Concordia one yard line with time running out in the first half. Play selection at that instance was questionable as they tried a counter play to Kaczmarek, a play which takes a long time to develop and had not been effective on several previous attempts...

40 yard punt in a strong wind and was sharp in avoiding a big Concordia rush after a high snap...

Garney Henley will be replacing Frank Tindall next year as head coach of the Gaels, Henley will also Coach Basketball...

Scoring summary

Scoring For Queen's:

Field Hockey: At Molson Stadium in Montreal a pickup team started off their exhibition season by losing to St. Lawrence University from Canton N.Y. 2-0, McGill University 2-0 and the Quebec Provincial team 7-0. It was an opportunity for new coach Bonnie Benson (formerly of Lakehead University) to observe her players, many of whom were frosh, for the first time, in a game situation.

Football: The University of Windsor Lancers lost to the University of Western Ontario Mustangs 11-34 yesterday in the Ontario-Quebec Intercollegiate Football Conference opener for both clubs. Western's Mustangs were the 1974 College Bowl Champs.

In other games, McGill University Redmen beat Bishop's University Gaiters 31-7 at Lennoxville, Quebec; Concordia University trounced Queen's University Golden Gaels 17-14 at Montreal; and University of Ottawa Gee-Gees defeated Carleton University Ravens 54-17 at Ottawa.

Also yesterday, University of Waterloo Warriors downed McMaster University Marauders 29-16 at Hamilton; University of Toronto Blues scored a 10-3 victory over Wilfrid Laurier University Golden Hawks at Kitchener-Waterloo; and University of Guelph Gryphons edged York University Yeomen 23-22 at Toronto.

Our Gaels lost to Concordia 17-14.

Hockey Gaels starting soon

by Peter Watts

The hockey season is just around the corner and this year promises to be one of the most exciting college hockey campaigns in many years. It's mainly because of the expanded schedule and re-alignment of divisions that will see Queen's in a division with Toronto, York, Laurentian and the University of Ottawa. The Gaels will have four games with each of these teams along with single encounters against Western, RMC, Trent and Waterloo. Head coach Bob Carnegie has also put together three tournaments so it looks like close to a thirty game schedule for this year's Tricolour, the most in some time. One of the tournaments will be at Qeeen's on November 7th and 8th. It'll feature the Gaels, RMC, Laval University and University of Ottawa.

Wednesday night is meet the coaches night and all those interested in playing hockey this year are invited to meet Coach Carnegie and assistant Coach Gary Lisle at 7 p.m. in the upper lounge of the Phys Ed Centre. Then on Thursday night, all players, old and new, are asked to attend a meeting in the bleacher section of the Harty arena at 7 p.m. You're asked to wear shorts and running shoes. The year's schedule will be outlined and programs for off ice conditioning will be passed out.

Coach Carnegie plans to conduct a three day goalie camp beginning on October 8th. The regular workouts for all players will start on October 14th.

Attention all Jocks!!!

The Phys. Ed. 'Mixing Bowl' will be held in Lower Vic Hall on Friday Sept. 19th.
The admission price is 50c with a PHESA card and $1.00 without the PHESA Card.
All Phys. Ed. students are welcome. Get your PHESA cards this week.

WIC ly News

WIC, or more formally, the Women's Intramural Committee, provides Queen's women with an opportunity to combine fitness with fun. While the emphasis is on participation, many also enjoy the chance to compete in year, faculty, or residence groups. It is up to you!

In this issue of the Journal, we necessarily focus on Thursday's provincial election. Because this is a students' newspaper, we have concentrated only on issues of vital importance to students: housing, university funding, and student aid.

Here are interviews with Ken Keyes, Keith Norton and Lars Thompson (the candidates for Kingston and the Islands). We also present a taped discussion between student representatives of the Liberal, Progressive Conservative, and New Democratic parties.

We tell you what the Ontario Federation of Students is doing about this election, and let you know its stand on student issues. Your own student government's views and plan of action are here, too.

But because you can't vote on student issues alone, we won't tell you how to vote.

That's up to you.

We wuz havin' fun

Some people got no patience, ya know. Like the other day, we was in this pub downtown, and we was just havin a good time, drinking and singin'. So we gets up to do an Oil Thigh and the band (There was a band there) gets all mad.

Jeez, ya know we was just havin' a good time, like I said, and these guys gets all hot, "We got expensive equipment up here ya know". That's the line they lays on us. Like maybe they think people's really lissneen to 'em or something'.I can't believe it.

Like, its Frosh week and everything, and we was just havin some fun. And the bouncers: tellin' us ta get down when we was just standin' on chairs. Not even tables. Just chairs. I can't believe it. And the band. Jeez; they musta thought they was getting paid or somethin' ta play, the trouble they made. Like once they stopped playing just because we was doing an Oil Thigh in front of them and maybe we did knock over a microphone but it was just an accident.

Anyways I just wanta complain about this place, Iforget the name. They just don't want no-one havin' a good time or sumpthin'. "Sing if you want, but no standing on chairs" they say. Jesus. And then the band wants people to hear them too.I can't believe it.Don't they know that Queen's students (like we are) are allowed to do what ever we want? You'd think that other people should get respect or sompthin'.I can't believe it.We was just havin' fun. It even looked like the other people just want to sit and drink and listen and sing along and then think that they were having a good time. What a bore. At least we was having fun. Jesus. I can't believe it.

'Election action' protest

Dear Editors:
As a student whose AMS specific fee is helping support Peter Lane's "Election Action Committee", I wish to protest the clearly partisan viewpoint the group has seen fit to present. Don't believe me? Fact:An ad placed in the Kingston Whig-Standard by the committee claims that the NDP supports universal tuition, but does not note that its local candidate, Lars Thompson,opposes such a platform. It notes with great relish, however, that a similar conflict exists between the Liberal Party and its local candidate.

Obviously the committee, whose original purpose was to present issues and not tell students how to vote, has changed its mind. Unsigned, the committee's issue posters argue that the "quality of education in the province is severly threatened" and that "OSAP assistance levels are inadequate." No counter-arguments. No definition of terms. No nothing.

You're spending my money, Lane. Where the hell do you get off?

Davis ad misleading

Dear Editors:
On the isxth page of your last issue (Volume 103, Number 1) in the advertisement placed by the PC Youth Association of Ontario, there was a quotation of Buckminster Fuller. It reads as follows: "That young man has a better grasp of the future than any other politician I've met in North America." It is in reference to Bill Davis.

However, The Globe and Mail on Saturday, September 6th in an article entitled, Second Thoughts? Pamphlet plugs Davis tribute (page 4) had this to say about the ad: "The statement was made in 1971, apparently, and one might wonder if the 79-year old Mr Fuller is still so impressed with the Mr. Davis he heard then. The Ontario Government paid him $15,000 and $886.75 for expenses that year for his conceptual Project Spadina which proposed a futuristic development, housing as many as 12,000 people, in the Spadian ditch.

Mr. Davis unveiled the plans just before the 1971 election as his answer to what would take the place of the Spadina Expressway. Somewhere along the way it was decided the Fuller plan didn't stand up to close scrutiny. On Aug. 9 this year, Mr. Davis announced the Spadina ditch would become an arterial road south to Eglinton Avenue.

I would doubt, although I have not contacted Mr. Fuller, that he would appreciate the use of this quote any longer. It seems to me that the PCY have been somewhat misleading.

Norton ad confusing

Dear Editors:
We are a group of concerned Queen's students who are very unhappy about the confusion in the upcoming provincial election. With the problems of university spending cutbacks, resident building freezes and increased tuition under Bill Davis, after the last election incoming students should be aware of how to register their protest.

Keith Norton with advertisements in the Queen's Journal and The Golden Words has consistently avoided mentioning that he is a candidate of the Bill Davis Conservatives. Such a promotion is confusing the students, avoiding the issues and making us more aware of the fact that Norton cannot defend his party's past record on university issues. We urge you to remember Keith Norton is the candidate of Bill Davis and as such should be denied your vote. The Ontario Federation of Students has feared the possibility presented by another Davis government and the President of York and McMaster have called for anti-Davis votes. Do yourself a favour as students and dump the P.C. candidate in this riding.

Participation is the key

Dear Freshmen:
The Queen's experience is an unique and interesting challenge that will broaden your horizons while offering you a new encounter with yourself. Hopefully after arriving here you will experience a number of changes that will develop your awareness and increase your sensitivity towards life around you.

Having had an extensive Orientation Program to get you acquainted with the university will likely breakdown the "little fish in the big pond" attitude. This feeling will probably take time to overcome, but it will, however, allow you the opportunity to search for new goals.

It is during this time,that I hope you will remember that the key to suecess is participation. If simply to gain practical experience or to offer your expertise, I urge you to get involved during your stay at Queen's.

The A.M.S. is one of the major components which makes Queen's an interesting and extraordinary community for students to live in. The purpose of the student government is to meet the needs of its members. The Alma Mater Society, student government thrives on the participation of students willing to get involved in student affairs.

Therefore,I hope you remember that the key to a good time at Queen's is involvement, whether it be in the A.M.S., your faculty organization, clubs or sports. Whatever you encounter here, do not let your time be idly spent or you've missed its purpose. Good luck in your future endeavours!

AMS executive

Commissioners resign...

Disillusionment, frustration and academic load were reasons the Alma Mater Society (AMS) lost two of its Inner Council members this summer. Graham Findlay left the Campus Activities Commission, and David Honey resigned as Education Commissioner.

Honey appeared bitter and angry that a small group of people were running the student government. "Outer Council is just a facade," he told the Journal, "because Inner Council directs the whole show. The Executive runs it all."

Findlay said that during the summer, there were "tendencies for the Executive to take things into their own hands", instead of consulting the larger number of student representatives (Outer Council) and Inner Council.

Both claimed that heavy adademic loads were prime reasons that they resigned.

Honey said that External Affairs Commissioner Peter Lane, and AMS Vice-President John Wilson, were "certainly resistant to other peoples' ideas". He said he felt that Wilson was "putting himself up on a pedestal."

Earlier, Wilson commented that unfortunately "my image is one of arrogance."

Findlay said that the "confidence" that Wilson, Lane and AMS Vice-President Ian Nordheimer shared "made them not include others."

"Certain members of Inner Council felt they could manipulate and control Outer Council (and Summer Council)," remarked Findlay. He pointed to the "phony issues" which Lane and Nordheimer brought for debate to Summer Council meetings. One concerned the deportation of Rosie Douglas; the other, capital punishment

Findlay regretted that "policies, ideas and teams" were never developed in Inner Council this year. He said, "there really weren't any AMS policies I could grasp on to."

Honey said that the Inner Council is "definitely" a clique. "I'm never going to step into that office (AMS office) again. I've had it."

...and the executive shuffles

An Alma Mater Society (AMS) commissioners shuffle took place Sept. 16.

Peter Meech moved from his position as AMS Services Commissioner, to occupy the post of AMS Campus Activities Commissioner. Graham Findlay recently resigned as AMS Campus Activities Commissioner.

David Honey's resignation as AMS Education Commissioner was the reason that Brian Copeland, former AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner, moved into Honey's former position.

The Internal Affairs Commission is currently without a head. The AMS Executive is advertising to find a student to fill the position.

In a statement issued Sept. 16, AMS President John Gray said that, "It is the Executive's belief that the Services Commissioner position should be eliminated by a constitutional amendment which will be brought forward to Outer Council at the earliest possible time."

AMS Vice-President Ian Nordheimer commented that the move was done to "streamline" operations, and to separate the political and financial aspects of services.

Services include the Pub, the Queen's Journal, and Tricolor yearbook

Nordheimer explained that the Executive would take care of the political issues arising in services; while the Queen's Student Agencies director, Bernie Koch, would deal with financial aspects.

Gray: "massive attack on apathy"

John Gray, Alma Mater Society President, plans to lead his executive in a "massive attack on apathy" at Queen's. He plans to use advertising and publicity to "build up the image of the AMS", and to spark student intcrest in campus politics and student issues.

He said that the majority of people at Queen's are "neither informed nor concerned about things that affect them."

"There are too many people with algebra in their heads" at Queen's, commented Gray. "They are not alive when it comes to interesting things."

Financial constraint, the AMS police and court system are things Gray feels students should be concerned about, because these issues affect them, he said.

When asked why he was concerned about this, Gray replied that he and his executive "are there to represent students, and students' rights are at stake in issues like financial constraint."

OFS to hold conference at Queen's on Sept. 26

by Paul Steep

Included in every student's fees is one dollar and fifty cents that goes to the Ontario Federation of Students. O.F.S also claims to be the collective voice of university students in Ontario. Although you may think that it does very little that affects you personally, this is the organization whose job it is to lobby for you in the Provincial Legislature

O.F.S. will hold a province wide conference on the Queen's campus, Sept 26.

O.F.S. states as its objectives defending and advancing the common interests of individuals in the Federations' member associations. It also provides a forum through which member associations may come together to formulate and pursue common positions

The best example of this is the student strike of 1972-73 to protest against increases in tuition fees Today it is also playing an important role in defining student issues in the current election campaign

Peter Lane, A.M.S. External Affairs Commissioner feels that the O.F.S has come a long way from being a fractionalized group that housed everything from disenchanted Trotskyites to John Birchers, to becoming a viable and responsible union of students "It's position in the election has been a reasonable one They (O.F.S.) rejected a purely anti-Davis campaign as well as an N.D.P endorsement. Instead they presented a reasonable and positive campaign directed purely at student issues I think we will all be impressed by the quality of the debate at the upcoming conference."

Lane also said that OSAP levels increased this year directly because of O.F.S. pressure on the government

Because of its stand on free tuition and increases in the student living stipend, many students tend to dismiss the O.F.S. as a leftist group with little patience for other points of view. But Lane feels that its recent accomplishments and reasonable approach to the election make it unfair to label the O.F.S as "a group of whacked out radicals" O.F.S is organized under a group of six executive officers. These are elected from the delegates who attend an annual meeting. Each Ontario university is supposed to send two delegates to this conference.

The current delegate from Queen's is Craig Brown and one other will be chosen before the Sept. 26 conference.

In addition O.F.S. employs full time field workers, research assistants, secretaries and information officers.

Although the executive has the power to act on emergency matters, most policy decisions are made at a plenary session of all delegates. This will comprise a large part of the Queen's conference.

Lane expects O.F.S to move strongly in the areas of student housing and university instruction in the face of reduced finances. But outside of policy Lane feels that O.F.S is important for other reasons. "They provide a means for information exchange between universities and can act as a co-ordinator for student services Most importantly, they have the time, energy and the resources to represent our position at Queen's Park This is where the decisions are made and no university could inject into or receive all the information from the Ontario government that they can with O.F.S."

Between 80 to 100 O.F.S delegates will be at Queen's on the Sept. 26 weekend Students will be able to observe plenary sessions and hopefully meet with the delegates informally.

Billets for these delegates are needed Any student who can house an O.F.S delegate on that weekend should leave his name at the A.M.S. office in the Students Union

AMS retreat to be held on weekend

by N. Flood

Student moncy again supports the student government as it retreates this Saturday September 20 to wash down philosophical discussions with pizza and beer

Opinion is divided as to whether the money spent on its organization (chiefly on refreshments) will produce more than indigestion.

Some involved in the project appear less than euthusiastic about its prospects. John Wilson, A.M.S. Vice-President (University Affairs) told the Journal that he expected no great things to arise from the meeting

Brian Copeland, Education Commissioner of the Society, who was responsible for the organization of the retreat, echoed these feelings. He commented that the idea for the retreat had not been the result of any upsurge of need or desire for it on the part of the council members. Rather, he felt that while the original suggestion for the event had come from one genuinely interested individual, the other councillors had gone along simply because the meeting was an annual tradition

Copeland said that, "there was no commitment on their part and it will probably show up in their attendance on Saturday." He stated that he expected "nothing" of the event and that he felt it

Get back to the 20's

It was during the Roaring Twenties, roughly the period between Prohibition and Repeal, that the North American psyche came out of the closet and shed its puritan morality. Automobiles and contraceptives made things easier, and a kinky bearded medic from Vienna made us face up to carnal natures with strange new terms as libido and id.

Those were not the only new words in this innovative, precedent-shattering age. Bottlegger, speak-easy, blind pig, alki, bathtub gin, home brew, and hijack became household words----and all referred to the illicit traffic in liquor. Many political leaders and the temperance movement itself attempted to make sobriety popular; but finding a drink—or, for that matter, a gallon—of whiskey presented no problem. It was as easy as asking a bellhop, a hackie, or your friendly neighbourhood policeman.

HOMECOMING '75 re-captures the fervor and the mood of these times. The speak-easy, the jazz, the ragtime, and the "big band sound" combine in a weekend of Prohibition and offer a chance for you to wear high skirts and long beads and to re-live the era of Scarface, Al Capone and The Mound City Blues-Blowers. October 2,3,4 is HOMECOMING WEEKEND, when Alumni return, old friends reminiscence, and the opportunity arises for you to make costumes, floats, and old-time Twenties' drinks.

The Twenties were a wild, gaudy period. But people knew how to have fun! If you would re-capture the simpler joys of these times, get your Gael-Free-Boss group, year, floor or house together and don your Gatsby threads and shake up some Prohibition era drinks (recipes to follow in a future issue). Remember----shake, don't stir! Get together on a float for the big HOMECOMING PARADE Saturday morning out to the football game, and invite your "Moll" or your "Man" now. That's the way it was done in the Twenties!

AKRON, OHIO (ENS-CUP) ---- A 26-year-old confessed- dope dealer in Akron, Ohio, was sentenced to 570 to 1100 years imprisonment last week.

Joseph Curre pleaded guilty to 34 counts of conspiracy to sell narcotics. Judge James Barbuto issued the maximum sentence on each count.

But despite the long prison term, Curre will become eligible for parole in ten years.

Assholes

Dear Editors:
After having examined the contents of the Artsci newspaper entitled The Queen's Journal, Duncan Moodie tells us that the said paper possesses no balls. I refer to an article featured in the Golden Words, (Sept. 17, Vol. 10 Number 2) entitled "How To Crack a Smile". Am I to infer that there are a great many assholes in Engineering?

Library hours

Dear Editors:
We thought it appropriate to point out a small typographical error in Thursday's Journal (Volume 103, Number 1).

In your "Wat's Hapnin" column you listed an 11 p.m. closing time for Douglas Library.

The reason we point this out is that a similar error in the column last year resulted in cutting back library hours from 1 a.m. to 12 p.m. We await a correction in the next issue.

Besides the slip-up, we thought the paper looked great. Keep up the good work.

Yours sincerely,
Roy Kirkpatrick

Greasepole

Dear Editors:
As the person who bravely-foolishly (choose one) wore his U of T jacket to Saturday's "Greasepole" ritual, I'd like to heartily thank Science Constable O1 for gallantly coming to my rescue in the proverbial nick of time, sparing me a "bath" If said constable would reply via this medium, I should be pleased to stand him a drink, or two, or three, upon my next return to Kingston. Thanks!

AMS Election Action

Dear Editors:
I would like the opportunity to respond to some of the criticisms that have been directed at the AMS Election Action committee, and at me personally. The Committee was established by Summer Council at its last meeting this year. Our function was two-fold – 1) to see to it that students could be enumerated, and 2) to publicize the post-secondary educational issues of this provincial election.

Anyone who has been to the John Orr Room last week or this week can see the results of our activities in the first area – literally thousands of students who would otherwise have been disenfranchised have taken the opportunity to become enumerated. In the second area, we have distributed posters and leaflets, have written articles, placed ads in the Whig-Standard raised questions at all candidates meetings and have organized and held our own very successful all candidates meeting on campus.

We have focused on three major post-secondary educational issues - funding of universities, tuition fees and student support, and student housing. In all of our acitivties, we have attempted to avoid any hint of partisanship. We have presented the issues, stated what the various parties and candidates are saying, and we have stated previously approved AMS policy. Our one mistake, and it is one which I sincerely regret, has been that in the posters we omitted to state that they were sponsored by the AMS. To be truthful, we were more conerned that the issues be put across and simply forgot to mention the AMS. Anyone who has read our ads in the Whig or any of the rest of our material will recognize that we are in no way trying to hide the fact that these are AMS opinions. I must say that I find it particularly regrettable the same particularly childish and irresponsible individauls have seen fit to make a conscious effort to travel around this campus tearing down well over half of these posters. I consider that campaign trickery of the lowest order.

I must now address myself to some of the specific invectives aimed my way by Mr. Bonnell in your last issue ("Election action Protest"). I resolutely maintain that our campaign has been non-partisan – we have endorsed no party, we have critized no candidate. Mr. Bonnell notes that we did state the clear difference between the local Liberal candidate and his leader on the issue of tuition fees but did not note what Mr. Bonnell feels is a similar difference between the NDP candidate and his leader. This is simply because in the taped interviews that I did with both candidates, Mr. Keyes said flatly that "students should pay more for their education" while Mr. Thompson hedged. He said that he felt attitudinal factors were equally as important as financial ones in barring students from lower socio economic groups from attending university. He also said that every effort should be made to lower financial barriers. Indeed, in the all-candidate meeting in Ellis Hall, Mr. Thompson stated clearly that a reduction in tuition fees was necessary.

Another criticism Mr. Bonnel levels is that in the posters, no counter arguments or definitions of terms are given. First tliere is obviously no space on a poster to get into involved arguments and definitions. We simply wanted to get thepoints across in a concise, tight fashion. Secondly, there is nothing in those posters which is inconsistent with previously approved AMS policy.

Finally, Mr. Bonnell implies that we are trying to tell students how to vote – what utter rot! Surely Mr. Bonnell can see that simply because the NDP party has expressed similar policy positions to those of the AMS, there is no reason to conclude that we endorse the party itself. Indeed there are many other positions of the NDP with which I feel the AMS would strongly disagree. To suggest that we are advising students to vote on the basis of one issue only is pure misrepresentation.

Yes, Bonnell, we did spend your money. We have run a campaign that has finally brought post-secondary educational issues into the debate, and of that, the AMS can be pround. I think the money was well spent!

by John Bottomley

It is probably too late, but still a good idea, to take a closer look at metrication. The government is going ahead with its plans to switch Canada to metrics, in the near future, without having properly examined the program. As usual, the students are getting the shaft. These important questions remain unanswered.

First, how many hours will there be in a metric day? This is especially important at Queen's, with its complex slot system. With only 10 hours a day, it will be impossible to fit all our courses in. Programs will have to be cut drastically, and quality of education will drop.

Second, how many days in a metric year? With 100 days there will certainly be no time for reading week, much less for classes. With 1000 days, the day will be too short for anything. The old saying, "as honest as the day is long" will be absurd, when a day is only 6 Fahrenheit hours long.

Third, what about poetry. What is a poem without feet? Huh? And you can't even switch the feet to meters, because there are already meters in poetry, and they're different. What's a student to do.

Fourth, what about anatomy. Can you imagine first year students memorizing this song: Toe bone's connected to the meter bone...etc." Jocks maybe, but not docs.

Fifth, what about things like thermometers? Will they be thermofeet?

Think about it. Maybe we should switch to a new system of measurement based on educated guess and thumb-spans.

Senate committees open for application

Vacancies exist for members on several Senate Committees.

Full-time students in any year, and full time-faculty are invited to apply for positions, and members of the university community are invited to submit to the Secretary of the Senate the names of those whose interests, knowledge and experience seem to qualify them for such positions. Nominees need not be members of the Senate, but should have a special interest in the particular problems related to the responsibilities of the committees. It would be helpful to the Senate Nominating Committee, in selecting the most appropriate nominees, if the special interests and talents of applicants or prospective nominees were to be briefly described on the application form. The nominating Committee would also be willing to inverview any prospective nominee who might wish to appear before it.

Applications should be submitted to the Secretary of the Senate before Friday, October 3rd, 1975.

Anyone interested in applying for a position on a committee is invited to come to the Senate Office if they have any questions regarding the terms of reference or activities of a Committee unworthy of the amount of money being spent on it.

Application forms are available in the Senate Office, Room 225, Richardson Hall.

The retreat, which is designed to be attended by all members of both Inner and Outer Councils, will run from 1 to 6pm in the House of Commons, upstairs in the Student Union.

Ian Nordheimer, A.M.S. Vice-President (Operations) remarked on his hopes that both the report of recent OFS activities, and the newly released A.M.S. report on financial constraints, would be available for discussion. Other topics to be considered, he suggested, might include finances, faculty societies, and the Senate.

In general, however, Nordheimer emphasized that the retreat is not designed to be an opportunity to rehash or argue about the nitty gritty of A.M.S. operations. Both he and John Gray, President of the Society, hope that discussion will center more on the philosophical aspects of the Alma Mater Society- how it runs, how it should run, what people expect of it and how these expectations can best be fulfilled.

Gray said that it was his expectation that the retreat would "stir up some new ideas and provoke some thought."

In some years past, the annual retreat has been spent away from the campus and has taken up an entire weekend. Copeland shared this opinion and remarked that it was especially true in light of the behavior evidenced by council members on past weekend retreats. Earlier, Copeland revealed that, previously, lengthy retreats "have had a tendency to turn into drunken orgies."

Bitter Grounds:

Bigger and Better

Bitter Grounds is the coffee house on the Queen's campus. We're located in the Clark Hall lounge, and present performers every Saturday night (and occasionally two nights a weekend).

There will be a few changes this year. We hope to bring you performers from a wider range of the musical spectrum. So instead of concentrating on solo folk singers, we want to bring in some blues, bluegrass, jazz, and traditional folk performers as well. At the same time we operate under some constraints: we are affiliated with the Engineering Society and are expected to break even; at present we only have seating for 110 people; and in trying to diversify the music of the performers our costs will rise considerably. Last year our revenue sources virtually limited us to solo folk singers.

To present the type of coffee house we believe Queen's wants, and maintain the fine atmosphere and audience-performer rapport that we enjoyed last year we must increase our prices slightly. Last year prices ranged from $1.25 to $2.50 a ticket. This year we have set a weekly admission charge of $2.25. The $250.00 per night that this brings in is still not enough to, say hire a bluegrass band, so we will also sell memberships. These memberships are necessary for admission and will cost 75 cents. (So your first evening at Bitter Grounds will cost $3.00.) This gives us an extra $250.00 or so in reserve.

Another policy change is that we hope to present guest sets every week. We feel that there has been a shortage of places where Queen's students can perform. Those interested can arrange an audition with Bitter Grounds.

Bitter Grounds is a volunteer organization. We need interested people to help with setting up, cleaning up, the sound system, waiting on tables, selling tickets and so on. If you're interested leave your name and phone number at Clark Hall for Terry Hall c-o Bitter Grounds. Or come out to our first meeting, Tuesday Sept. 23 at 6:30 in Clark Hall.

This Saturday we are proud to present Doug McArthur. Doug is a gifted songwriter and entertaining performer who was very well received last year at both Bitter Grounds and Arts Festival. His fine album, Letters From The Coast, captures the warmth he brings to the stage.

See you Saturday night.

Human Sexuality course

Dear Editors:
Last year for one month in the fall and spring the Birth Control Centre at the Grey House, sponsored with the AMS Education Commission a human sexuality non-credit course one evening a week. Due to a number of unforeseen problems, like abrupt cancellations by some speakers and room changes, not all the sessions scheduled were held and some of those held were sparsely attended. The format was usually a presentation by someone or some too knowledgeable in the topic followed by open discussion. Titles were as follows:
1) Sexuality and the Law
2) Contraception
3) Venereal Disease
4) Homosexuality
5) Pregnancy and Childbirth
6) Sexuality and Communication
7) The Ethics of Abortion
8) Sexuality in Differing Cultures

The co-organizers of last year's course received virtually no feedback from those who attended. Therefore three questions to you, the interested, involved reader:
1) do we need this type of human sexuality course in the first place?
2) what would you like to see discussed?
3) any other suggestions?

Help us so we can help you. (By the way Nancy works in the Grey House and at the moment I'm a grad student). So if this part of your education is important to you, or you feel it should be important for others, please write to me, at the Department of Microbiology.

AMS uses sexist advertising

Dear Editors:
I am writing this letter in reference to the sexist advertising I have found so rampant on Queen's University campus. To be sure, I have found it most offensive and I could not be sectioned off into the typical slot of the Femmesymp.

I am directly referring to the pink leaflets that are being handed out in the Students Memorial Union, bearing the headline "AMS concerts suggest that you try our new fall line," displaying women in lingerie. Obviously it was intended to be humourous and I presume that the main intention was to catch the students attention. Perhaps it will appeal to the men for various sundry reasons and no doubt the women will seek to compare. Yet, I found this attempt at commercial art (which, incidentally, my student fees are probably helping to pay for) fit only for a merchandising scheme and certainly not to promote concerts. I feel somewhat disappointed that the AMS has such a low level of consciousness concerning such a political issue. Who would ever think of using men in their jock straps to push campus activities? Admittedly, the comparison is strained; still the concept is equally ludicrous!

Setting the Women's Liberation 'hip rhetoric' aside, (in quotes only to give it meaning) assuming that particular question could alienate, I would like to approach my topic from the quality viewpoint. Surely the imaginative capacity at Queen's can create promotional material of a higher calibre. I wonder if the problem they are facing is one of losing their audience or sheer expedience in order to churn out leaflets on time.

In any case, the calm veneer and nonchalance of 'business as usual,' despite the year being 1975, is disheartening. Not only is this a progressive age elsewhere but universally tagged to be Women's Year. It has, in fact, been a rude awakening to me to suddenly realize that something needs to be done.

Sincerely,
Amy Hanen

Clean up Frosh Week, AMS

Dear Editors:
Another initiation week comes to a close. Another liberating and humanising experience has graced the minds and bodies of those deemed most fit to develop and manage this society of ours. Professors smile indulgently at herds of drunken blue-dyed sheep that trot by and proclaim, "it gives team spirit" and "some of them need this sort of thing." Doubtless the instilled obsequiousness does benefit oppressive educational methods and such tolerance is quite understandable.

But should we as students be so tolerant in condoning the authoritarian indoctrination of our fellows: is it determined that we will allow our oppressors (internal and external) to divide and conquor us into artsifarties and engineers?

I think there is a desire among the majority of students to spare incoming freshpeople from the dehumanising and destructive practices they are forced into. But as the woman on the local radio talk show said, "no organization in Kingston wants to do anything about putting a stop to the organized vandalism that hits Kingston each year." The organization that has the greatest responsibility to Queen's students and the Kingston public in this matter is the A.M.S. It's hot to handle. It's not administrative. It's very political. What about it, AMS?

Needed: new frosh outlook

Date: Orientation week '75
Time: 8pm - 3am
Place: Downtown and residential Kingston
Action: Queen's students smash a car.

Science students spray blue paint on the door and fender of a 1973 Oldsmobile.

At Division and Princess Sts., a gael group oil thigh around a Toyota, and kick in the door. Damage exceeds $100.

A poplar tree, growing for two years behing Goodwin Hall, is broken down at the roots.

A valuable antique is stolen from a florist in Portsmouth.

At University and Earl Sts., a frosh group keeps children and adults in one house awake until 3am, and urinates on the side of the house.

At one house on Stuart St., a woman reports her children cannot sleep because of the noise. And "it gets worse every year," she says.

Evidence: Complaints made by Kingston residents to the Principal's office and student government (AMS).

Conclusion: Orientation really means upsetting the people who live around Queen's.

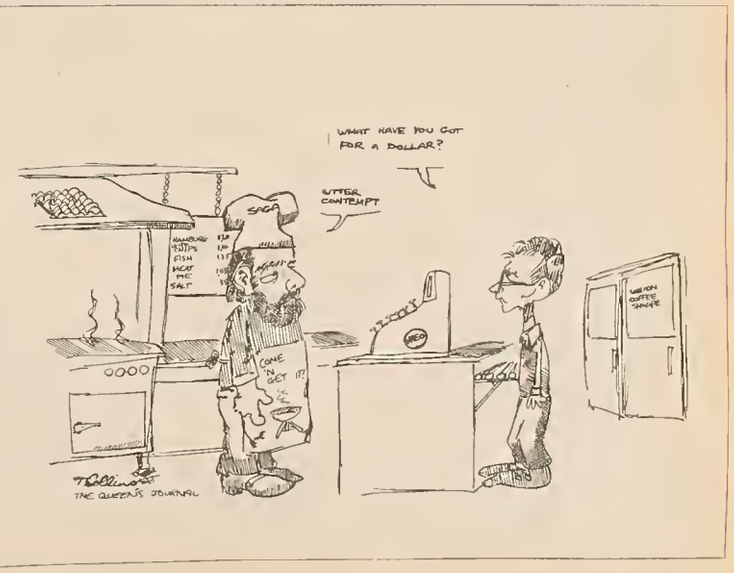
Comment: For years, frosh have been forced to get drunk; to oil thigh in the middle of Princess St.; to forget what is right and what is wrong; and to ignore that Kingston residents even live here.

But why? All in the name of Queen's spirit?

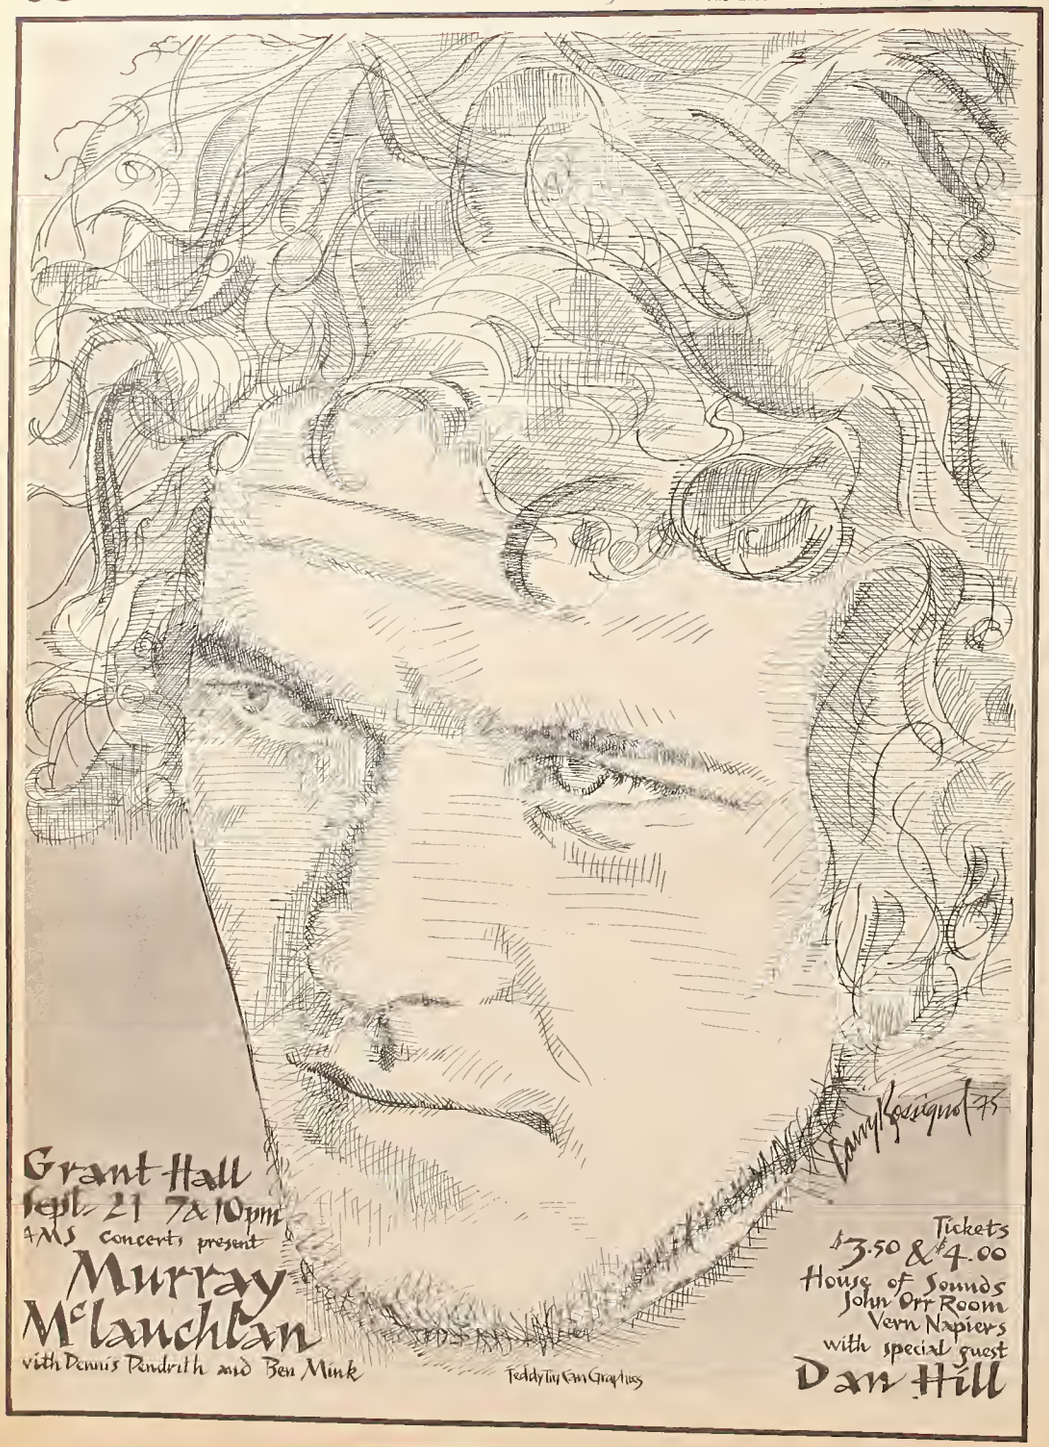
Other aspects of orientation go a long way to build up Queen's spirit in frosh. Shinerama, and other charitable group projects not only generate spirit and friendship; they also help the Kingston community.

John Gray, student government (AMS) president, has plans to meet with everyone in charge of orientation, to discuss noise, vandalism and Queen's spirit. He may set up a contingency fund to compensate Kingston residents for damaged property. Gray also cautioned that the "wild sentiment" may have to be confined to campus.

A commendable attempt, but definitely not a solution to the problem. Once it is generated, the drunken, noisy and destructive Queen's spirit is impossible to confine to campus.



What is needed is a total change of attitude. A pro-Kingston outlook must be developed for next year's frosh. More projects which aid the community should be vital parts of the orientation programmes in all faculties.



Perhaps the strained relationship between Kingston and Queen's students comes from the students, not from the people of Kingston

If you gripe, do it right

The food situation at Queen's has been long misunderstood by most students. For many years the caterer, Beaver Foods was criticized often wrongly as the instigator of large price hikes in the price of food sold, to make exorbitant profits; the shortening of coffee shop hours to cut costs; and the poor quality of food provided at the various outlets on campus. Over the summer months Saga Foods took over the food service at Queen's.

Should any criticism arise in the area of food at Queen's, we suggest than any comments be directed where they will do the most good. Saga Foods is strictly a food management firm and is responsible for the quality and service of food. The Queen's University Food Service, under the directorship of Robert Webb, is responsible for setting food prices and the hours that a food outlet will operate. The university pays a fee of $1.5 million to the food management firm in exchange for the daily operation of the various food outlets on campus. In theory the university is the one who make the profits or absorbs the losses from the food services, at Queen's; but according to Robert Webb, "There are no profits, only losses".

A.M.S. Concerts

Singer from the Street

This Sunday night at 1900 hours and 2200 hours, in Grant Hall, A.M.S. concerts presents Murray McLauchlan with Dennis Pendrith and Ben Mink, with special guest Dan Hill.

Dan Hill is a Canadian entertainer well deserving of the acclaim now coming his way. The 21 year old singer-guitarist is a frequent star of many of the Toronto spots such as the Riverboat.

Dan's material is all original. That says one thing about him. And much as many songwriters can get boring, what with tearing great chunks out of their soul and hanging them out to dry, Dan never does. He's a careful, calculated writer whose lyrics, though introspective and very personal, echo many of the sentiments of his, and our, age group. His honesty within his material world make him an important artist if that were all he had.

Fortunately, though, that's not all he has. Dan has a voice that starts somewhere about six inches below his shoe soles, and picks up resonance and timbre every inch of the way up to his mouth. He's also a fine guitar player and a conscientious arranger. The sum total of what Dan has going for him is enough for him to be a very important voice in Canadian music.

Murray McLauchlan came to Canada at age 5 from Paisley, Renfrewshire, Scotland when his family moved to Toronto. After much travelling and a few hardships, he got his first big break when Tom Rush recorded McLauchlan's "Child Song" and "Old Man's Song", but it wasn't until Albert Grossman, the bespectacled godfather of the music industry, gave him his nod that doors opened for Murray McLauchlan.

In the fall of 1971, Murray's first album, Song from the Street, came out. Earlier that same year the Canadian Radio-Television Commission legislation enforcing the 30 per cent Canadian content ruling came out, so it was slowly becoming possible to be a professional musician in Canada. True North Records, the collaboration among Cockburn, McLauchlan, Fiedler and Finkelstein was pulling together. McLauchlan then put out another album.

McLauchlan's third album, Day to Day Dust, released in November 1973, brought him three Juno Awards. Now with the release of his fourth album, Sweeping the Spotlight Away, McLauchlan is embarking on a major North American tour which will take him to virtually every major centre in Canada, and then back into the United States, where he is gaining a huge following and will no doubt continue to increase that following as positive reaction to this new album grows.

"A lot of people have a tendency to put you into a bag. People assumed after the publicity for my first album that I was some kind of a dirty-mouthed street punk. They don't allow for some kind of growth. On the second album, they're the same kind of songs, but with a different approach. They seemed to mature a little bit. I'm a lot more careful about what I do now. I'll take the time to refine an awkward phrase." (from an interview in Morrissey's Tavern in Toronto).

Tickets for the concerts are available form $3.50 or $4.00 at Vern Napier's, John Orr Room and the House of Sounds.

Queen's Modern Dance Company

Bring Your Own Soft Shoes

Queen's Modern Dance Company under the direction of Miss Sandra Aitken is going into its third year of performance at Queen's. The Company being founded in 1972 by Miss Aitken is a university sponsored performing group specializing in modern dance and dance theatre.

AUDITIONS:
Tuesday, September 23, 9:00 p.m.
Wednesday, September 24, 5:30 p.m.
Dance Studio
PHE Centre

In the past productions have ranged from a modern dance interpretation of The Legend of Dionysus to a boistrous floor show in the Cabaret setting. The company has drawn enthusiastic reviews from the Whig Standard and Journal critics.

"highly sophisticated, beautifully framed production"
"visually sensitive"
"emotionally stunning"

An ambitious project is planned for the new year and new members are cordially invited.

Company members can expect to learn as they work together, and while experience is necessary anyone interested in the dance should introduce themselves to Miss Aitken.

The dance company is a highlight of the Kingston cultural scene and involves people in all artistic pursuits. Anyone with a contribution to make in any area of the arts should also contact Miss Aitken at the School of Ph.E, Room 218 or Phone 547-2680.

Indian Film Series

by Ram Rao

Asked once about his first movie Pather Panchali, whether he thought the story had any message essentially Indian or Bengali, Ray replied, "I don't like morals or messages. This story says true things about India. That was enough for me". Satyajit Ray has come a long way from being the obscure producer-director of Pather Panchali to being one of the great movie-makers of our time.

Ray's films are a total expression of his creative genius. As one critic summarised, " In the restrained style he has adopted, Ray has become a master of technique. He takes his timing from the nature of people and their environment; his editing is the discreet, economical transition from one value to the next; his camera is the intent, unobtrusive observer of reactions. The camera is composed constantly with the eye of a graphic artist, his sound track with the ear of a composer." Early in his career Ray was deeply impressed by the works of Flaherty and Renoir, and it is perhaps from them that he gets his poetic sensitivity and perceptive simplicity of observation that make his films universal. But in his choice of themes and handling of his subjects Ray's Bengali middle-class heritage and the mark left on him by Tagore, the poet and architect of renaissance in Modern India, are unmistakable. Thus it is not coincidence that Pather Panchali should have been adjudged the best human documentary at Cannes (1955).

The pace of Ray's films is slow, and at times tests the viewer's patience. In some sense this is Ray's way of withdrawing from the tempo of our technological age and being concerned rather with what Ray calls "the rhythm of people moving individually and as a whole, in a pattern.....to get the feeling of movement of life itself." Talking about the whole idea of change he says, "There are no neat transitions in life. Again, there is no moment of evident transition, say, from childhood to boyhood, or to youth." Ray is at his best handling the subjects he knows best: characters from middle-class background and traditional culture. More recently he has moved further away from the influence of Tagore and begun to work with other themes in other styles in which he has yet to prove an equal mastery. But in Days and Nights in the Forest a departure from his earlier themes, Ray is at his best once again showing a group of city executives on a country week-end away from the suffocating atmosphere of Calcutta.

The India Association at Queen's University should be commended for putting together a festival of Ray's movies this Fall. To the aesthetic film-goer these movies will be a treat, and to those Westerners obsessed with the extremes of privilege and poverty in India it will be a pleasant change to explore the unknown realm of middle-class life in India.

Story of the Blues

Jazz virtuoso Dizzy Gillespie (great-grandson of a slave who was born the daughter of an African chief) traces the development of the blues from its beginnings and shows its influence on his own art in a two-hour blues special on The Entertainers, Sunday, Sept. 28 at 1:03 p.m. EDT. The show will also be heard on CBC Radio's FM network, Sat. Sept. 27 at 8:03 p.m.

The program, prepared by Lilly Barnes and Greg Gallagher, avoids any chronological or academic approach. Without neglecting either tradition or innovation, the program weaves a more personal and improvisatory fabric in order to enhance the Spirit of the Blues.

In addition to Gillespie, other blues artists featured are Muddy Waters, John Mayall, Willie Dixon and Koko Taylor who talk of their personal experiences with the blues onstage and off. Ralph Gleason, columnist for Rolling Stone and a record producer, talks of the impact of the blues on North American culture.

Presenting their inimitable brand of music are Bessie Smith, 'Ma' Rainey, down-home folk Blind Lemon Jefferson and Sonny Boy Williamson, as well as contemporary minstrels such as B.B. King and Taj Mahal.

John Mayall's comment, "I think the blues are as alive and raunchy as they've ever been" is amply illustrated on this CBC Radio Show for Sept. 28th. Producer for The Entertainers is Ann Hunter.

Films on Campus

In conjunction with the Department of Film Studies the Performing Arts Office is presenting three different and interesting film series. The first film of the New Cinema Series, Claire's Knee will be shown tonight at 8.00 pm in the Ellis Hall Auditorium. The New Cinema Series was designed to make the more recent works of the major established directors, such as Pasolini, Tati and Brault, available, as well as to introduce promising newcomers from different countries. The series should provide some idea of the directions the new cinema is going.

The New Cinema films are to be presented every second Friday night with the alternate Fridays going to the Hollywood Classics Series). This series takes a look at the ways the American films of the 1930's confronted, disguised, avoided, or transcended the economic woes of the Depression years.

The third series is a look at the various forms of the Japanese Cinema. Ellis Hall Auditorium again houses this series to be presented on Sunday evenings, also at 8:00 pm. The series covers the wid range created by the Japanese cinema, from film styles running from samuri epics to Zen-like meditations. The series will survey the Japanese cinema focusing on the work of Japan's most famous director, Akira Kurosawa.

Claire's Knee (France 1970), to be seen tonight, is considered to be the most impressive of a series of delicately observed moral tales from France's most literate director, Eric Rohmer.

On Sunday evening the Japanese Cinema Series presents the first of its films, (Dodes' Ka-Den (1970), Kurosawa's latest film, a work of truly rousing humanism that celebrates the vivid dream lives of those that inhabit modern Japan's lower depths.

Admission at the door for each of the films is $1.50, but subscription prices for the series are $9.00 for all eight New Cinema Series films, the same for the eight Hollywood Classics films, and $12.00 for the 11 Japanese Cinema films. For further information about subscription tickets, or the films themselves, contact either the Performing Arts Office, 547-5786, or the Department of Film Studies, 547-5573.

Theatre 5

A theatrical supermarket

Welcome to Brewery Lane Theatre! John Morton, brewer and distiller circa 1850, would be astonished, if he could see what has happened to his former warehouse. From the carpet on the floor to the spotlights in the ceiling, the attractive old limestone building at 370 King Street West is alive again!

The reason? Theatre 5 has established itself there as a Regional Resource Theatre Centre, or as the Theatre Officer at Canada Council described it, a Theatrical Supermarket!

We have something for everyone. The seven-twelve-year-olds who want to begin their drama classes...we'll be delighted to see you on Saturday mornings. Teens and young adults who want regular classes in movement, mime, speech, improvisation, and all the other fascinating crafts involved in making theatre...7 p.m. Friday is your time. The theatre-goer, interested in ancient skills adapted to new ideas...Friday and Saturday at 9 p.m. are Performance Nights. And of course, it wouldn't be Theatre 5 without Children's Theatre...at 2 p.m. every Saturday afternoon (starting September 27 with a delightful A.A. Milne story, "Prince Rabbit"...fun for the little ones, and a sly humour that should please the middle-school set.)

The Performance Night programme for the year begins with 'Canadian Odds and American Ends," which opened the Leacock Festival of Humour in Orillia..."summery as straw hats and strawberries" (C.P.). Then comes "Adamant Eve," a programme of wisom, wit, and music about women today and yesterday..."Christmas at Brewery Lane," a feast of fun and song for the holiday season..."Dear Liar," the private life of a theatrical genius..."Sittin' on the Snake-rail Fence," the history and mystery of Eastern Ontario.

On Sunday...history comes alive for the churches with "The Book, the Bush, and the Dove," "The Great Experiment," and that famous duel for devils and angels, "The Screw-Tape Letters" by C.S. Lewis.

Telephone 613-546-5460 for information about all this, about our school tours, our Convention Entertainment, our Community Resources Programme, and our series of classes for special groups.

Travelling on the Underground Railway

Great Canadian Rock Tours proudly presents two more big concerts. First, on October 7, Jethro Tull, then on Thursday October 23, (Rod Stewar and the Faces with Ron Wood). Both concerts are in Maple Leaf Gardens, Toronto, and the $23.00 for each concert includes highway deluxe coach, return to the Gardens, and the usual great seats.

Tickets are available at the House of Sounds, Sam the Record Man, Shoopers Record and Tape Mart also Ryan's at the Napanee Mall & Roluf's in Belleville. Any further information can be received by calling Dave Finlay at 544-9213.

Track and Field 1975-76

Veterans return

The track and Cross Country Gaels have virtually the same teams returning as last year. The major loss is veteran Cross Country Captain Bill Bryden, who was Queen's top distance star and steeplechase record holder. Several field event specialists will not join the team until the indoor season, notably Shot Champion Kevin Thompson. The return of Tony Verhoeven and Don Price to Graduate School will strengthen the Gaels considerably in the 400 metre Hurdles as well as middle distance. The Gaels have, however, a young and well balanced group of returning veterans covering both Track and Field events. The gaels should continue to show strength in the sprints, with greatly improved depth in the distance events. Sophomores Mike De Guida from Niagara and Max Barr from Kingston should help at the 5000 and 10,000 metre distances. On the Track, Paul Spence is ranked high in Ontario in the 800 metres and will be a vaulable addition. Rookies Duncan Card (1975 OFSAA 100 metre champion) from Etobicoke Collegiate and Tom Page from UBC, both ranked among the top 10 in Canada, will bolster the sprinting element. Adam Schumacker and Ian Gale, two outstanding distance runners from Ottawa, and Howie Ferguson from Perth will give Queen's Cross Country Team its greatest potential ever. Don Kramer from Saskatchewan (Western Canada Intercollegiate Champion) will strengthen our field contingent.

The women's team has everyone returning and it should have its best year ever with close to 30 hopefuls turning out. Injuries to Pam Scothorn will weaken their field team this fall, but promising rookies such as Alison Mitchell from Cornwall Collegiate and Anne McMillan from Burlington should make them a contender in 75-76. Queen's hopes to maintain its position among the top three schools in the tough OUAA-OWIAA Track Conferences. The OUAA-OWIAA Championships this year will be hosted by Laurentian University on October 18 while Guelph hosts the OUAA Cross Country on November 1.

The Gaels first event is an open all-comers affair on Friday, September 19, at 4:30 p.m. at Richardson Stadium.

PHE Sports Skills Program

The Queen's Physical Education Department will be offering this fall, Session 1 of the Sports Skill Program. This program presents to students of Queen's a wide variety of activities at your preferred level. These 5 week courses run from Sept. 29 to Oct. 31st, 1975 and the registration fees are $4 for full time students and $8 for part time students, faculty, staff and spouse members. There is an additional $8 fee in the Bronze Medallion and Award of Merit courses for literature, examination and award.

Registration for those interested is on Sept. 22 to 23 from 1-3 p.m. in the upper lobby of the Physical Education Centre. Registration for any classes which are not filled will be taken on Sept. 24, 25 in Rec. Office (102A) between 12 and 4 p.m.

Spotlight on Judo

Kodokan Judo evolved from the Japanese fighting art of Jujitsu, which had its origin hundreds of years ago. Jujitsu became a popular method of self-defence during the Tokugawa Period in Japan, due to a decree banning the wearing of swords. The art was practised secretly in many schools before then, and ancient records show that many of its principles were based on Chinese philosophy. There is no real proof, however, that Jujitsu originally came from China to Japan.

Jigoro Kano, the founder of Kodokan Judo, was born in 1860. He started to study Jujitsu when he was eighteen, and learned from many masters at three different schools. In 1882, he established the KODOKAN, and began to teach his method, which he called JUDO. He realised that Jujitsu was an excellent method for training the body and mind. The teaching at the Kodokan was a culmination of all the good points he had learned, plus his own. He called his method Judo, however, to distinguish it from the Jujitsu schools, some of which were teaching violent and dangerous actions. Also, Jujitsu had largely become a disreputable spectator sport, in which fees were charged to watch a bout between themselves and Sumo-wrestlers. The Kodokan, starting with only nine members, rapidly grew in size and reputation. In 1886, a tournament was held in Tokyo between fifteen Judo men and fifteen Jujitsu men. The Kodokan won every fight except two, which they tied. The technical side of Judo was basically completed in 1887, while the spiritual aspect was perfected in 1922, when the Kodokan Cultural Society was established in Japan.

Today, Judo is one of the largest indoor, all-year sports, with participants numbering in the millions. Judo became an Olympic sport in 1964. Anton Geesink, of the Netherlands, was the first open-weight Olympic champion.

Fighting, but tempered by Philosophy

Judo may be translated as the Doctrine of Gentleness. There are three basic principles of the sport: Ju, or "gentleness", Seriyoku-Zen'yo, or "maximum efficiency with minimum effort", and Jita-Kyoei, or "mutual welfare and benefit". Ju is the principle of yielding when pushed by an opponent, so as to make the attacker lose his blance. The classic example of this is that a man of ten units of strength pushes another of only seven units. When pushed, the smaller man yields to the pressure, and the larger man is off balance, where his strength decreases to three units. The small man only has to use half of his strength to defeat the larger man now, and he still has power in reserve.

Seriyoku-Zen'yo is sometimes called the "all-pervading" principle of Judo. It can be applied to physical health and training, mental health and training, and also studied as a way of living. Through proper Judo training, and meditation on this principle of maximum and efficient use of the body and mind, the task of living should become easier. A Judo player learns to think rationally in any given situation and use his personal power in the most effective way.

Jita-Kyoei is the highest aim of Judo, and is reached by practising "maximum-efficiency". It is "the supreme goal which can be attained only by those who, having thoroughly mastered the art and spirit of contention, have transcended all notions of victory and defeat." The idea is to perfect oneself, and by doing so, a person will "contribute to the welfare and benefit of mankind." Master Kano "enjoins his pupils not to use, in the exercise hall, any method that may injure the opponent because such violence to a person goes against the spirit of mutual welfare and benefit." Again, he teaches that they should observe in their social life, the principle of mutual aid and concession, as well as the spirit of mutual welfare and benefit so as to regulate the relation of oneself with others...the ultimate phase is that which points out the ideal state to be marked by the Judo-ka. It is a world of harmony, a world of peace, and a world of love, or, an absolute state of existence, in which, as Buddhism teaches, "self and the universe are in a body", and where self and others fuse into one. It represents a pinnacle of Oriental philosophy, it embodies the lofty ideals of Christianity, and it is the supreme principle of mankind."

The symbol of Judo is a willow-blossom, and represents the fact that when a strong wind blows, the willow tree bends and yields to the pressure, and therefore, does not break. When the wind ceases, the tree returns to its normal position and continues growing. This is the same as the principle of "Ju".

NOTE: The first two parts and all quotes are from Illustrated Kodokan Judo, Kodansha, Tokyo, 1955.)

Your Belt Indicates Your grade

Judo has a system of rank ranging from beginners to experts. The way the rank is denoted is by the colour of his belt. In Canada, the colours, in order from lowest to highest, are white, yellow, orange, green, blue, brown and black. Correctly speaking, all coloured belts (MUDANSHA) are beginners, and black-belts (YUDANSHA) are the advanced players. Each rank is called a KYU for the mudansha, and a DAN for the yudansha. The following complete chart will help explain the system:

6 Rokkyu - White
5 Gokyu - Yellow
4 Yonkyu - Orange
3 Sankyu - Green
2 Nikyu - Blue
1 Ikkyu - Brown

Queen's Judo Club

The Queen's Judo Club meets every Tuesday and Thursday from 9:30pm to 11:00pm. All are welcome to come out and learn (this includes beginners).

Randy Genoi, demonstrating a throw, above, is the black belt instructor of the club. He has also instructed the Royal Military College club, army personnel, correctional officers and several schools and youth organizations throughout the city. Randy has participated in over forty major tournaments through Canada and the U.S.A. He would welcome your participation in the Queen's Judo Club.

1 Shodan - Black
2 Nidan - Black
3 Sandan - Black
4 Yodan - Black
5 Godan - Black
6 Rokudan - Red and White, or Black
7 Shichidan - Red and White, or Black
8 Hachidan - Red and White, or Black
9 Kudan - Red, or Black
10 Judan - Red, or Black
11 Juichidan - Red, or Black
12 Junidan - White (Double-width)

Today, there are only a few Judan's living, and no one higher. The only person to reach Junidan was Prof. Kano, the founder. The title "SHIHAN", which means something like "Doctor", is given to anyone who achieves the rank of 12'th Dan.

The grading syllabus will vary a little from club to club, but basically, the Kodokan GOKYO, a list of forty basic throws, is followed. A yellowbelt must know the first eight techniques, and each KYU the next eight successively. Groundwork, the competition record, practise record, amount of enthusiasm and interest, perfection of breakfalls, and general attitude also play a large role in advancement. The leap to a dan-grade is more strictly controlled by the Canadian Judo Association. The candidate must be tested by a provincial grading board, composed of experienced blackbelts. The following standards will be for a male seeking a shodan:

Minimum age: 16 years.
Requirements:
A.
1. 3 years of Judo with one year of IKKYU, plus 12 points, or
2. 4 years of Judo with 1½ years of IKKYU, plus 10 points, or
3. 5 years of Judo with 2 years of IKKYU, plus 8 points, or
4. 6 years of Judo with 3 years of IKKYU, plus 6 points.

Women have equal rights in Judo

A Women's Judo Division was created by Judo-Ontario and began to take shape during the second half of 1974. The aim is to create an all round programme and opportunities for women and girls in competition (shiai and kata), recreational judo, officiating, administration and teaching.

Because of Ontario's size and uneven population advantage was taken of the regionalization of Judo-Ontario and a woman from each region was appointed to represent the women and girls of that region, and to develop their programmes locally according to the needs and aids available, with the Ontario Director of Women's Judo co-ordinating and helping whenever, and wherever possible. This committee forms a means of gathering up and disseminating information on a wide scale. Meetings are held twice a year, other contact is maintained by mail, and recommendations made to Judo-Ontario Council when it meets.

Because of this programme there has been in increase in the number of clinics organised by women, and instructed by women; for women, and in many cases, men too have attended. While these clinics were primarily for ju-no-kata, there were also training clinics for shiai in preparation for the Ontario Championships. Women have been encouraged to attend referee clinics whenever possible.

Miss Keiko Fukuda, 6th Dan of Women accepted an invitation to come to Ontario and teach Ju-no-kata, Seiryoku zen'yo kukomin taiiku, and Joshi Goshin-ho at a clinic in May 1975. With Fukuda Sensei's help we hope to learn enough to hold a successful Ju-no-kata contest in November 1975, and in time to add other kata, leading to a full fledged Kata competition for women (and who knows? maybe men too) if they are interested.

For the first time senior women were able to compete at the Ontario Championships held on 8th March 1975 at Oshawa. From these partieipants an Ontario Women's Team was selected to compete this weekend at Trenton N.J. U.S.A.

The appointment of a Women's Coach is in the hands of the Coaching Division.

Women have been training and practising refereeing, judging and scoring at the regional level in preparation for officiating at the Provincial level. The first opportunity came at the Ontario Championships Women's competitions.

AMS lists priorities to OFS

Peter Lane, chairman of the AMS committee on the Ontario Federation of Students, said Sunday that a great many Outer Council members still have no understanding of OFS. "They still think of OFS as the radical left...a group obsessed with giving students a free ride." Lane went on to say that this opinion was based on misinformation, and arose largely out of OFS's policy of free tuition for all university students.

Lane's committee has just published an interim report that deals with the issues AMS feels should get the immediate and full attention of OFS. Among those issues was free tuition. Lane prefers the issue to be referred to as universal accessibility. The guiding principle behind the concept is to lower financial barriers so that all qualified students can attend university, regardless of their financial status.

According to Lane this is a position that the AMS has examined in detail on numerous occasions and has always endorsed universal accessibility.

However Lane pointed out that despite all the work AMS has done in this area "every six months or so someone comes along and says that free tuition is a lot of bunk, and AMS has to re-examine its position again."

Lane hopes that this committee will help solve what he says is basically an image and information problem with the OFS. He feels that after serious consideration AMS gave its approval to OFS's stand on free tuition and that it shouldn't have to constantly re-examine the same issue.

To aid in informing the Queen's campus about OFS the report recommends the establishment of an OFS office on campus.

It went on to list as priorities an analysis of the proposed increases in tuition fees, revisions in OSAP levels, student housing, grad student support, level of BfU support and formula funding, student employment, stipends for health care students and the coordination and integration of student services. These are all short term issues. The committee felt that it was important to provoke the OFS to act on immediate problems.

Besides free tuition the AMS report listed as long term priorities an analysis of the trimester system, an assessment of the instructional process in the university, university financing, admission standards and an analysis of tenure and leave.

Among the long term issues Lane gave particular importance to the problem of grad student support. He feels that support levels are inadequate for a grad student. He points out that grad students are more mature students, often married, with children and that they therefore have a different lifestyle from undergrads; a lifestyle that OSAP levels fail to support.

At Queen's Lane pointed to the departments of History and Economics as two areas where there was not nearly enough money to support a graduate

SVB News

40 Social Service Agencies in Kingston depend to a large extent on volunteer power: many on "student volunteer" power between September and April. Last year over 350 students assisted various programmes, from day care centres, to prison work to Girl Guides and swimming instruction. From Juvenile probation to lunch, after school or evening drop ins, as well as hospital work.

The Student Volunteer Bureau invites all interested people to drop in to our office in the GREY HOUSE between 12:30 pm and 4:30 pm Monday to Friday OR come and see us at SVB Nite in Stirling Hall A, B, or C at 7:30 pm.

We would love to break 400 this year. Please help us and the people of Kingston who need student volunteers.

Pickle problem puzzling

by Dave Raymont

During the past provincial election many groups took advantage of the unsettled political atmosphere and came forward advocating particular plans and policies. The CSAO, the OSSTF, and OFS were prominent among these groups. Lesser known, but working with equal dedication was the new Pickles Liberation Movement. At the start of the election campaign Pickles Canada Managing Director, Aaron Dille, noted: "The Pickle People are full of righeous wrath which they have heretofore bottled up. We have no alternative but to unleash the Big Green Machine. The people of this Province must be made aware of the particularly platitudinous platforms of the perfidious political parties purporting to portray a popular position pertinent to the perpetuation of a participatory parliament." (August 27)

Last Thursday I called the Pickle's Canada number in Toronto, and interviewed field operative Little Gerkin for CFRC's public affairs program Overview to be aired September 21. Here is part of that conversation:

CFRC: Public reaction has been good towards Pickles?

LG: It has been platitudinous, and that, of course, is pleasing.

CFRC: What prompted Pickles to form a pressure group?

LG: Well certainly it's a pickle pressure group. The impetus was simply the desire of more freedom for Pickles, ah, certain freedom from past confines you might say. Problems with transparency, that sort of thing.

CFRC: I see. Do you think this might start a chain reaction? Asparagus action groups, and the like?

LG: Well it's hard to go that far for other vegetables. They've had a somewhat privileged position vis a vis Pickles. Pickles have been put down since pioneer times. Very few other vegetables have that to contend with; our past is proof of the need for Pickle freedom.

CFRC: What have you been able to gain for your group so far?

LG: A certain amount of recognition; we feel our great Canadian green machine has shown that there are other colours in the political spectrum than blue or red.

CFRC: Are there Pickle organizations forming in other countries about the world? Perhaps a Pickle world movement?

LG: Well we suspect there will be; I don't think it's really gotten that far yet. For example: we began in Toronto, and I think with four or six weeks we had moved as far as probably Oshawa. We certainly reached the outskirts of Oshawa, that I'm sure of. Whether we can make it overseas...it's a long swim for a pickle.

Spokeperson Gerkin concluded the interview by re-emphasizing his party's Pickle platform. He noted the pleasing prospects for the future as Pickle consciousness sprouts strongly. He promises a dilly of a fight.

Briefly...

A quickie

"One of the best we have ever had" is how D.L. Davies, Assistant to the Registrar, described Registration held last week. Davies attributed the smooth registration to the number of veteran staff on board and the diligent efforts of all staff involved. Roughly calculating, Davies estimated that better than one student per minute was registered on Wednesday and Thursday. What next Mr. Davies....possibly time trials?

Rector's role

For those new to campus, or for those who just woke up, the rector of Queen's is Bruce Trotter. The rector is a student elected, administrative "ombudsman" and member of the Board of Trustees with a three year mandate to represent the interests of the students of the university whatever they might be.

Trotter is currently welcoming letters and problems in the AMS Office, Students' Memorial Union. Once a few submissions have been collected, he will start a weekly column in the Journal as he deals with student problems.

Oops!

The Journal would like to apologize for two errors which appeared in Tuesday, Sept. 19 edition. On the front page, two pictures of Graham Findlay and David Honey were mislabelled. The picture on the left of the page is of Honey, and the one on the right is of Findlay.

Secondly, on the page eight AMS Organization chart, a list of services were wrongly placed under the Education Commission instead of the External Affairs Commission. Legal Aid, Tele Clinic, TAK, SVB, Birth Control, VD, and Abortion Referral Centre, the Heart Fund, United Appeal, and the Drug Centre fall under the responsibility of the External Affairs Commission.

by George Benson

Well we've really done it now! The 1972 Federal election results have virtually been repeated on the provincial scene. And what's more, the only real solution is another election.

At present, nobody's happy. The Conservatives, for the first time in our generation offer us minority government. With 34 percent of the popular vote, they can't expect to present themselves to Ottawa as the spokesmen of Ontario. No, instead, they must walk arm in arm with the New Democrats, who are now crying "We're number two", when in terms of popular support are still the third Party of Ontario.

The opposite holds for the Liberals, except in their case the picture is even more disjointed. Expecting to capture the focus of parliamentary power for the next four years, the Party joins the other "Liberal Losers" now placed at the bottom of the Canadian Political League. In other words, the Liberals can presently only claim true provincial power in Prince Edward Island and Quebec.

Now that a negative pessimistic mood has been set let's destroy it. Or let's just make up our minds that, at most we only stand to lose majority government for the next twelve months.

Prediction one; the Conservatives will begin to rejoice next year as Billmania again returns to set up Davis for another four years.

Prediction two; the New Democrats will destroy themselves through socialist policy and unfortunately continue their political fate as the yo-yo party. On this occasion Ontario stands to lose in terms of leadership. As we witnessed in the recent campaign, Stephen Lewis seems to have matured into a well-rounded politician. And what of farmer Bob? After twelve years in active Liberal politics, it would be a shame to lose his experience. Yet the Globe & Mail reports that he is a born loser, so I guess that's it for him.

Prediction three; the Liberal Party will once again resume it's role as Official Opposition well before September '76.

Now that an artificial stable optimistic mood has been set - Let's destroy it! Prediction four; suppose for the sake of political debate John Turner inherited the leadership of the Provincial Liberal Party?

I think I'd better stop here and contain myself.

program. Because of this Lane maintains that Queen's is losing some of its best students and that this will ultimately reflect itself in the quality of the education we receive from the university as a whole.

The committee also recommended an analysis of tenure and leave. Lane felt that whereas this administration policy once meant academic freedom for its professors, today it has in some cases degenerated into a means of insuring job security.

Lane hopes that this report will provoke OFS into looking at and responding to the problems that Queen's feels are important. Those recommendations which are received and adopted by Outer Council will be put forth by our OFS delegate at the upcoming conference on Sept. 26.

Leonard Cafeteria will be available for only three non-residences events per term and only if Grant Hall is already booked, says Andrew Overchuck, Inter-Residence Council chairman. Two events have already been booked; applications for the third will be accepted until Oct. 10.

Events organizers will have to hire two additional AMS constables to guard the doors from the cafeteria into the residence.

Overchuck explained that while this has been IRC policy for several years, recently it has not been enforced.

The deadline for applications for second term events is Nov. 30.

In the past, explained Overchuck, students whose rooms are above the cafeteria have been disturbed by frequent late-night events. Also, damage to the cafeteria and other parts of the building has been a problem, said Overchuck.

The value of the tables and chairs in the cafeteria recently was estimated at $75,000, he commented.

Applications to hold events in the Leonard cafeteria must be made to the mens' residences business office in Brockington Hall.

Housing

Unionize

TORONTO (CUP) — The ability to afford suitable accommodation often determines whether or not a student will attend college or university, says the Ontario Federation of Students.

OFS spokesperson Dale Martin said that although the cost of attending a post-secondary institution continues to be the prime deterrent to universal accessibility, board and lodging comprise the largest expenditure faced by students.

"An immediate concern is the absurdly low board and lodging allowance under the Ontario Assistance Program," he said.

With vacancy rates of one per cent or less in most Ontario centres; rents skyrocketing at anywhere from 15 to 50 per cent per year; and food costs increasing at over 20 per cent per year, Martin says the need for an immediate increase in the "living allowance" and the tying of this directly to the cost of living "becomes obvious."

"As this school year progresses, it appears certain that more and more students will be forced to decide between a place to sleep and their stomachs."

"Ways must be found to join with existing groups to articulate the particular needs of student tenants, while at the same time adding the student voice to those already demanding improved housing.

"In no way must students find themselves in a position of competition with the rest of the community for limited living space," he says.

According to Martin such a situation would seriously jeopardize the chances for any positive change by directing the attack away from the real culprit, the provincial government.

Everybody is welcome, so why not come out and see what Queen's student government is all about.

The A.M.S. is working for YOU.

- john bollomley

A ghostly Alfie Pierce in the Queen's Journal morgue wearing a tam instead of his Standard-Whig.

From the john

"Alfie's ghost" has reappeared, according to some people, this time with a vengeance. An unidentified Queen's student was found dead outside the Alumni Office on Saturday the 20th of September. A coroner said she died of natural causes, but cited a noteworthy lack of blood in the corpse. "There's a noteworthy lack of blood in this corpse," he said.

It was impossible to conclusively assign a motive for the killing. "Perhaps he just resents the publicity" said one spokesman for the Whig-Standard, who asked to remain unidentified. "After all, how would you like to have your name spread all over the papers without your consent?"

Another popular theory is that "Alfie" is getting revenge for last year's dismal football record.

We tried to catch the elusive and possibly dangerous ghost by setting up cameras in the morgue - where old Journals are kept - because we figured that he would most likely appear there. At midnight (of course) we were rewarded. An eerie glow appeared, sending the whole staff running in terror. Alfie then claimed that he was being framed and posed for a picture. He wanted to know why the papers couldn't let an old ghost rest in comfort. "You know, the haunting business isn't all the fun its supposed to be. I'd rather be out cheering again than be stuck in this building just going around saying "boo" at people. It's not much fun, believe me."

Police, of course, are pooh-poohing the whole theory of ghostly vengeance saying: "We don't believe in ghosts and anyway, Alfie was nice. We really liked Alfie. He was our friend and we really thought he was great and I hope he reads this and doesn't come to get us, because we really liked him a whole lot. Please print this."

"Alfie seemed really friendly, for a murderer. I don't think he did it. He wouldn't hurt a fly" theorized Journal staff member Lynn 'Baby-face' Atwood. As this seems logical, the murder was probably committed by a vampire.

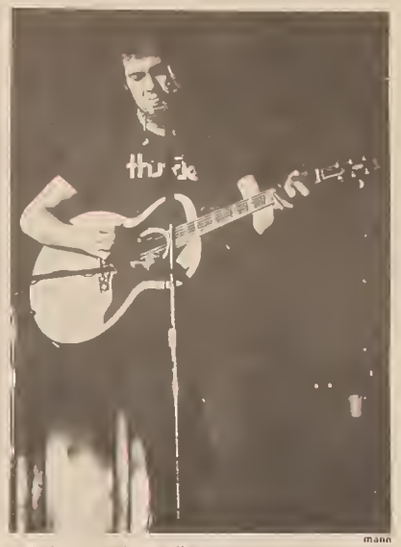
Murray McLachlan



Singer from the Street

by Paul Luke

For those who've grown weary and suspicious of the hysterical hype which is almost invariably garnished upon Canadian artists, both where it is warranted and those cases where it is merely merchandising drool, be assured that there is truth in the acclaim which heralds an appearance by Murray McLauchlan. His is an expanding talent, an ever-growing sensibility, and an increasingly unique style whose creations are shrewd fusions of musical accessibility and lyrical conviction. The man's first concert on Sunday night was a seamless delight.

As for the guest artist Dan Hill, only an idiot would deny the appeal which his performance generated, but because of the glaring shortcomings of much of his material it is difficult to wax enthusiastic. There is a constant sense of words which the music wears poorly, of a heartfelt but sharply limited expressive capability, and forgettable melodies urged from a discount Tin Pan Alley. His songs are largely confessional in nature. Unfortunately their not infrequent warmth and comfortable intimacy were somewhat chilled by indistinguished melodic foundations. One does not question his sincerity nor even his concern over his own integrity but good intentions alone cannot save such turkeys as "In the Shadow of the U.S.A." a callow mixture of personal retrospection, glib references to the states and a disposable melody. If Hill equates catchy melodies with selling out, he'd best reconsider. An artist who wrests and consolidates his control over his audience's attention is the one who can make a melody reinforce the lyrics, rather than at best barely servicing them.

Hill couldn't look for a better model than Murray McLauchlan. McLauchlan's carefully wrought songcraft is belied by the irresistable exuberance which characterizes their performance. The highlights of his work are perhaps those penetrating portraits of people commonly overlooked by less tough-minded singer-songwriters; the kid who gets fifty cents for shining shoes -and knows it's spent as soon as he gets it, the buy in "Honky Red" who drinks because his wife's a tank and his kid's in jail, the drunken friend doing some shoulder-crying about a marriage which didn't take, the ridiculed loser whose only lover for years was his hand. These and the others were all impressively deft mixtures of humour and pathos served up with Ben Minks' colourful but unobtrusive mandolin and violin accompaniment and Murray's own chunky guitar and growling harp. The peak of the concert was the performance of a stunning new McLauchlan composition, "On the Boulevard," which should be a smash single if there is any justice left on top forty radio. That song typifies McLauchlan's predominantly urben-inspired material and its hard-nosed elation, not without its darker side, and is a high-water mark of his tireless quest for excellence.

The Party

Mrs. Rhys, assistant to the chairman of graduate studies, called to see if Lucy had received the notice about the party at grad house that the department was having for its graduate students. Lucy searched through some notes and papers from Friday jammed in the textbook by the sink. She had. In that case could she bring along a casserole, nothing fancy. It was on the tip of Lucy's tongue to ask if the male graduate students were being asked to bring food, but she decided against the question. Probably Mrs. Rhys hated having to do this kind of soliciting; it was hardly one of the prescribed duties of an assistant to a chairman or even of an ordinary secretary.

The night of the party Charles decided at the last minute that he didn't want to go. He wouldn't know a soul. He wouldn't know what to talk about. He had never done any graduate work. He didn't even feel like drinking. He might accidentally do something to disgrace her now that she had finally made it into the graduate programme as a fully accredited student. Lucy was afraid of all of those things too, but didn't want to go by herself. If you were fortunate enough to have a husband, you might as well flaunt him. She repeated this opinion to Charles, who brightened somewhat. She watched him adjust his tie in the mirror. "If anyone asks you just say I am fulfilling a lifelong ambition going to school here and that I plan to teach here one day." He glowered at his reflection. She thought a suit was too dressy for the occasion but had been afraid to suggest more informal attire for fear he wouldn't go at all. She herself, in a smart black dress, knew she would match him in overdress but would be out of place among the long fndian cotton gowns and peasant skirts.

At the grad house through the glass in the door she saw people standing in small groups with drinks in hand. She wished she could hear music but maybe records were unacceptable, too plebian for this sort of party. Charles held open the door and she stepped over the threshold, casserole ready, feeling ridiculously like her grandmother taking refreshments to a church supper. Charles hung their coats in the entry way. "I'm going ahead to the kitchen," she said. "I'll be just a moment." He muttered a cautious protest but she left him standing there. Anxious to dispose of the food she hurried down the passageway only to run into Mrs. Rhys, who greeted her effusively and placed the casserole in the centre of the table where it was surrounded by a dozen more edible-looking dishes. Then she took Lucy's hand and led her back down the hall, introducing her to people in transit in a gushing loud voice. Lucy hastily grabbed Charles and presented him. He looked sullen. Mrs. Rhys swept them over to one side of the main room to a couch where two couples were sitting. Grateful and relieved that Mrs. Rhys had inserted them so readily into a group, Lucy stretched out her hand, prepared to converse charmingly. Then, "Do make the Wilsons feel at home." said Mrs. Rhys. This remark branded them; they were the poor children at the birthday party, the socially inept ones who weren't at home in these surroundings. To make matters worse, she realized that she had been forced into the company of the Louths. Mr. Louth was the department head, the man whom she had had to see during her preparatory year. She remembered how he had stared down his nose at her as if she were a low form of invertebrate whenever she came with an inquiry of any sort. He was looking that way again, as if he couldn't quite place her. She couldn't remember the other couple's last name - was it Flatt, or Flam, or Flagg? What had Mrs. Rhys said? Anyway he was an up and coming professor in the department; she had once interviewed him about the course he was offering, but then hadn't taken it. Perhaps he wouldn't remember. A fat little beady-eyed creature he was, in his fisherman knit sweater - looking like anything but a sportsman. His wife, equally plump, had one leg in a cast and after greeting Lucy, resumed her conversation with Mrs. Louth, "So my mother said, anyone who is crazy enough to go in for sky diving deserves a broken leg." This sounded interesting. She wanted to address some questions to the woman, but couldn't remember her name. Could it be "Fat"? Not likely. In the silence Mr. Fat asked Charles, "Whom are you working under, Wilson?"

"I'm a teacher," said Charles.

"It's Lucy who is the student."

"Oh yes, I've seen you around the department" said Fat, peering at her briefly. "Which do you teach, elementary or high school?"

"High school." Lucy hoped that he and Charles could find some basis for conversation. She wanted to pick up on the sky diving topic but didn't like to start a sub-conversation among the women;it would be pretty gauche at a gathering of this calibre. She concentrated on listening to Charles and Mr. Fat. "My biggest complaint" Mr. Fat was saying, "is that you don't teach them to read and write. I don't care whether they know any subject matter or whether they have any research techniques at all. We could give them all that if they only had some competence in the simple use of the language."

"Basic literacy." Mr. Louth nodded. Tensing visibly, Charles briskly launched into his standard speech on the topic which placed the blame for the declining standards squarely on the elementary school system. "They've thrown out the three r's in favour of a fun approach, and it's finally coming to light at the university leve." Lucy felt that he was being unfair, but didn't know what to say. Certainly when she had taught school she had tried to stick to basics, but then again, she had never had a role in planning the overall approach. Smiling deprecatingly, she ventured to say, "We poor elementary school teachers have no one to pass the buck to but the parents." There was a slight pause and then Louth asked Charles, "Who is the head of the department out at Vista View School?" At the same time Mrs. Louth leaned forward and exclaimed, "How glad I am to hear a teacher admit it! We had the worst time from Sharon's teachers from the time she started school until Arthur took his sabbatical last year." She launched into a description of the sufferings to which their Sharon had been subjected at the hands of madly educated teachers. Lucy nodded from time to time, a fixed smile on her face. Could she make an escape? There was Bob Low over by the door, one of the few students she had had a chance to talk to. Beside him was a hugely pregnant girl, presumably his wife, for he guided her gently to a large arm-chair and got her a ginger ale. Shortly afterwards she was surrounded by several other young women whom Lucy assumed were other graduate wives. She recalled with a smile that among the papers she had received at registration was a leaflet outlining the activities of the graduate wives club. She had offered it to Charles, in fun, but he had not been amused. Should she go over and attempt to infiltrate their conversation? Judging from the bits and phrases she had overheard it centred on the dearth of decent living accommodation and babysitters. Down at the far end of the room Susan Forbes, a bright young woman whom Lucy recognized from one of her seminars, was leaning on the fireplace making gestures with her lovely hands, obviously engaging the attention of three male fellow students. Professor Hickson, who taught the class got up and joined the four. Lucy wished she had the courage to walk down and approach them, but she hesitated to do so. She was drab and dumb compared to Susan; she did not want to oblige them to listen to her out of charity.

It dawned on her that Mrs. Louth had directed a question to her, which she had not heard. Mr. Louth and Mr. Fat had apparently exhausted the deficiencies of the public school system or else had been bored; they were heading for the bar. "No, we've never lived in England," Charles answered for her. "Would you like a drink, Lucy?" "Why did you abandon me to those pompous vultures?" his look scolded her. She agreed to a drink and Charles left.

"As I was about to say, Sharon's school in England was a complete change. They did a lot more in the domestic science sphere. I do feel that a girl can't possibly learn too much about homemaking whether or not she pursues a career." Mrs. Fat agreed Lucy nodded, seeing a depressing mental picture of the overflowing laundry basket under the sink at home. Of course now that she was back at school her schedule was more flexible and it was easier to cope with the household chores. When she had been teaching it had been rough; she worked all day and then had a housekeeping job waiting for her at night. Granted, Charles had helped. Still, she remembered how, when it was his turn to make dinner, he could starve her out, would watch T.V., mark papers, anything until in hungry desperation she would leave what she was doing and fix something to eat. When she pointed out his tactic to him he would protest, "But you're so much better at it than I am." It was simpler just to do it herself

It didn't look as if Charles planned to come back. He had disappeared. The professors were nowhere to be seen either. She watched Mrs. Louth's mouth move, and at the first lull said brightly, "I'm going to see what became of our drinks. Will you excuse me?"

As she crossed the room she saw Mrs. Van Heide, one of her favourite people, and tried to catch her eye. She had enjoyed Mrs. V's course last year although the student advisors hadn't recommended it. Mrs. Van Helde had not yet built up a reputation; she had just come back into the academic world after raising her children. Lucy had been intrigued by the idea of a female professor and had found the class satisfactory, perhaps because of its small size. This year Mrs. V. was teaching night classes to extension students. Lucy passed directly behind the sleek black head but it was too busy nodding vigorously to the small grey man smoking a classic academic pipe. She passed Bob Low and spoke to him "Hello Bob."

"Hello Mrs. Wilson," he said

She found Charles sitting on the bench beneath the coats in the entry. He looked up sourly at her. "Enjoying yourself?" he demanded glumly Lucy's first urge was to say "Yes, aren't you? Then go home," but it would be a lie. His obvious inability to mingle annoyed her, but she had brought him here, and her own social deficiencies were the ones that had brought them to grief.

"Let's go home" she said. Mrs. Rhys' voice bubbled over her shoulder. "Leaving so soon, Mrs Wilson?" she shrilled with concern. "Why we haven't even had supper yet'"

"I'm afraid we must," Lucy said in a low voice. "Charles isn't feeling well."

"How unfortunate. And your first gathering among the other grad students. I had so hoped you would all get to know each other."

"I'll just have to do that during the course of the year" Lucy smiled. "Good night."

As Charles hurried her down the stairs she wondered if she ever would.

Ebb Tide

I feel this time
The pain of clear sight,
For clouds which give security
Are blown away from view,
And sun blazes through my eyes
Making me quiver in its liquid stare
Unblinking and unending;

For now, though clouds may reappear
it's only moments, fleeting,
My mind is filled with light of sun
Melting cloudscape through,
And leaving agonizing blue;

And once I wished to see that sky,
But now I feel too weak to view
And wish for peaceful cloud again;

O youth have you deserted me?
I wish for illusion to cover me.
Delusion, give security,
Allow me not the mind to see
The insant depth of reality.

Performing arts presents

The Special Events series, presented by the Performing Arts Office, opens tonight with a concert given by the Vaghy String Quartet at 8:30 p.m in Dunning Hall The Quartet will perform Mozart's Quartet in D Minor, K421, Bartok's Quartet No. 5; and Beethoven's Quartet No. 1, Opus 59.

Then on Friday, September 26, the series presents Anjali in Convocation Hall at 8:30 p.m Anjali is a Canadian who, for the past ten years has made the classical dances of India the centre of her life. The Ottawa Journal says of Anjali, "this young beautiful Canadian makes traditional Indian dance, often long and incomprehensible to the uninitiated, at once exotic but understandable."

The series also will include Jose Molina Bailes Espagnoles at the Grand Theatre, October 2 at 8:30 p.m. This show presents a wonderfully exciting programme of Spanish Dance in all its modes - splendid costuming, inventive choreography and some of the best music in the Spanish repertoire - with eight dancers and four muscians. The group conveys theatrically the sensuality of flamingo or the quaint flirtatiousness of the regional dances. On Friday October 17 the Grand Theatre will house Mia Anderson's acclaimed one woman show based on Canadian literature, Ten Women, Two Men, and a Moose. Then, on Tuesday November 4, Toronto Workshop Productions presents, for its second national tour, Ten Lost Years, a theatrical adaptation of Barry Broadfoot's best selling book of the same name.

The series winds up on Monday November 24 with Le Treteau de Paris' presentation of Racine's Phedre in a classic staging. With a cast of the finest actors from Paris, the production is at the Grand Theatre and is untranslated.

For further information or for tickets, contact the Performing Arts Office at 547-5786.

Claire's Knee

Sandra Bernstein

Judging by the first offering in the New Cinema Series, Eric Rohmer's Claire's Knee, it would seem that one of the directions of contemporary film is the nineteenth century.

Set in a vaction community on a lake surrounded by mountains, the film concerns itself with a few Pushkinesque characters who seem for the moment as isolated from the outside world as Rohmer does from the post-Griffith cinema. The characters are attractive, idle, bored, vain and ripe for fixations born of weakness - all except Aurora, an authoress with whom Rohmer seems to identify.

Aurora decides to set cross-generational lecheries going, to observe the results and use them in her short stories. Her prim guinea pig is her old friend, Jerome, 26, engaged to be married, and holder of a confused belief in love without will.

Rohmer has a knack for portraying poignant, all-too-familiar moments in relations between the sexes, as well as a kindly sensitivity to the rites of passage captured in this film. His actors are able to convey much, often ironically, through facial expressions. Also, our perceptions, of Jerome in particular, change in a similar way to our impressions of McCabe in McCabe and Mrs. Miller.

The problems for us lie in the fact that Rohmer's principal means of expression is through conversation, and because the print this series received was dubbed, we are left uncertain as to the precise ambiance Rohmer originally created For instance, one could hypothesize that the film has a novelistic structure, giving a story in strict chronological order, punctuated by frequent date titles which mark off "chapters." The English version supports this theory in that the characters generally speak in a stylized manner, as if in a nineteenth-century novel; their conversation is too literary to have a natural flow. We cannot, however, be sure that this is a just translation from the French. Because Rohmer relies too much on telling rather than showing us, to some extent he limits his audience to francophones.

It is largely this literary style that makes Claire's Knee a curious anomaly in the current cinema. The possibility of film explored in it is that of not exploring the possibilities of film.

Much as we enjoy Rohmer's insights and intimacy, the modern film-goer is too conscious of what his work lacks - expressive cinematography, awareness of the theory and political dimensions of film-to be satisfied with his virtuoso handling of projects of such limited scope. He remains a master of the charming miniature.

The next screening will be of a British film, Bronco Bullfrog, on October 3.

Ballet Ys

The Toronto dance company, Ballet Ys is coming to the K.C.V.I. Auditorium on Friday, September 26th at 8:00 p.m. Ballet Ys (pronounced as in 'peace' and is a Celtic word meaning "of the times") is under the artistic direction of Gloria Grant and combines classical ballet technique with modern dramatic dance styles to produce a unique art form. Its repetoire includes a number of specially commissioned works.

Ballet Ys was formed in 1971 in response to a particular audience demand, filling the need for a concert-size ballet company which can perform in the smaller centres and communities. Says artistic and technical director, Les Spits: "We would like to adopt part of the philosophy of Maurice Bejart and get ballet away from its elitist association. There are some very well trained dancers coming out of the National Ballet School, and not all of them end up in the company. Unfortunately, in the past, there's been a feeling at the school that if you don't make it into the National there's nothing else worth doing in Canada."

For the past five seasons, the company has operated under a variety of names with a company of seven dancers, ballet mistress Karen Bowes, and a staff of technicians, travelling around with its own dance flooring and complete sound and lighting systems to various audiences.

Operating funds have been received from various sources including the Canada Council, the Ontario Arts Council, Alcan and the Gulf and Shell Oil companies.

PERFORMING ARTS EVENT

Ravens grounded

by Tom Shand

Torrential rains bombarded George Richardson's gridiron on Saturday, attracting two thousand half-crazed football fanatics who were led to the flood by an army of bright yellow helmets. The sad conditions made the possibility of seeing a well-executed game of football seem most remote; nevertheless that is exactly what we saw as the Gaels played solid ball to defeat Carleton Ravens 4 to 1 and their record at one and one.

Carleton has lost several key players from last year's team, including Q.B. Pete Stenerson and all-star running back Joe Colvey. Last week they were shellacked 54-17 by by-town rival Ottawa U. and although the game was much closer than the score indicated, it was only because of the strength of the Ravens passing attack This was not to be the case Saturday as the only aerial gain all afternoon did not come until midway through the final quarter when Raven Q.B. Mark Lee connected on a gorgeous 42 yarder to flanker Fred Pinnock.

The Gael's offensive game plan was restricted not only by the weather but also by the loss of veteran Q.B. Doug Latham with a thumb injury which he picked up in practice last week. It is not known at this time how long Latham will be out of action. With rookie Paul Shugart taking over from Latham, coach Tindall stuck to basic bread and butter football.

Once again the Gael's offence depended heavily on the power running of fullback Jim Duncan from Montreal who, with 32 carries for 135 yards on Saturday, has now assessed 216 yards in two games. In Duncan, the Gaels have the big back they need to replace Dave Hadden, who, incidently, has earned a starting birth in the Toronto Argonaut backfield.

The Gael's offence, while not spectacular, did an excellent job of avoiding turnovers with the exception of one snap which never got back to punter Will Kennedy. Queen's ground game moved for 191 yards and accounted for all of their offensive yardage, and surpassed Carleton's total yardage by ten.Gael's also gained ten first downs as opposed to six for the Ravens.

However, it was the Queen's corps who deserved most of the credit for Queen's 4-1 victory. Noticeably outstanding were defensive end Bob Freeman, linebacker Dan Kitchen, and cornerback Bill McIver who thwarted Carleton's last-minute attempt with a brilliant interception.

It was a crucial win for the Gaels as they travel to Varsity Stadium to play the Blues next Saturday, and then, on successive Saturdays, return home to play U. of T. and Ottawa U., both exceptionally fine teams.

Notes: Gaels improved on short yardage plays as good on third down gambles. Will Kennedy made good on one of three field goal attempts set-up by a Raven's no yards penalty at 2:03 of the fourth quarter. He also scored a single on a wildly bouncing punt in the third quarter. Carleton's only point came in the first quarter as they neglected to try for field goals twice from the 30 yard line and missed on one slightly longer attempt in the second half. It's still a mystery as to why the Raven's didn't try to pass more in the second half when the rain had fizzled to a drizzle.

This weekend is Toronto weekend, followed on Oct. 3, 4 & 5 with Homecoming.

Waterpolo

The Queen's water polo team opened its season with an exhibition tournament at York University. Queen's first game was against McMaster, long time O.U.W.P.A champions. The final score was 7-4 in favour of McMaster. Top scorer for Queen's was Chris Whately who accounted for two goals while Paul Nolan and Dave Ardell scored one each. Queen's second game turned into a defeat with an upset victory by Western. At the end of the first quarter Queen's was tied with Western 1-1, Queen's goal coming from team captain Mike Fox. The final three quarters saw Queen's shut out by the Western goalie. The final score was 6-1 for Western. In the last game, the Queen's team redeemed itself by producing an 8-6 victory over Windsor. Improved passing and better swimming netted Queen's eight goals; Mike Fox scored four times, Chris Whately twice, Dave Ardell and Bob Brisebois each scored one. More waterpolo action for Queen's will come on October 4 when Queen's University hosts a tournament.

Soccer golden

by Gary Harvey

The Queen's Golden Gaels soccer team started the season off on the right track by winning their season opener 3-1 last Saturday afternoon against Brock University. The game was played on the West Campus field under very wet and muddy conditions, hindering the play of both teams. In the first half, however, the Gaels managed to control the game extremely well and their efforts were rewarded with three unanswered goals. The first one was scored early in the game by Gary Harvey after some hard work and a good cross by Bill Ersil. The Gaels second goal was not long in coming as Bill Ersil potted the rebound from a hard close-in shot by Don Barragher. After a bit of a dry spell (figuratively speaking), Bill Ersil notched his second goal, near the end of the first half. Forward Jim Monaghan deked out Brock's left fullback and then beat the Brock goalkeeper with a good angled shot; the ball unfortunately stuck in a puddle directly on the goal line where Ersil made no mistake and blasted it into the net. In the second half the Gaels still outplayed their opponents but failed to score on any of their numerous good chances. The Brock team seemed fairly disorganized for most of the game, but gave the Gaels a bit of a scare in the second half when forward John Nills scored an open net goal after the Queen's goal-keeper failed to clear the ball on a breakaway. All in all, however, it was a good start to what hopefully will be a very successful season for the Gaels.

Last Wednesday afternoon, the Gaels played an exhibition game against St. Lawrence College of Kingston. The Queen's team was victorious in this game by a similar 3-1 count. Goal scorers for Queen's were Jim Monaghan (1), and Gary Harvey (2). The lone St Lawrence goal came on a penalty shot in the second half.

At the beginning of this year's training session, the Gaels did not appear to be as strong personnel-wise as they were last year. The loss of several valuable players such as Peter Dickie, Dave Robertson, and Nic Drysdale has definitely hurt the team. Only eight players have returned from last year's squad: defensive veterans Chris Clarke and Ron Heidebrecht, halfbacks David Prescott and Don Barragher, forwards Bill Ersil, Jim Monaghan, and Gary Harvey, and fullback Brian Sawyers who is presently injured. Fullback Terry Lister has played for the Gaels before but took the year off last season. There are nine new players with the team this year and they include Dave McIntyre, Bruce Howkins, Ron Daly, Graham Durkin, Joe Lucas, Horst Rabeneick, John Burke, Ross Ealey and Mark Bennet. The team played a very good game last Saturday and are looking to improve quite a bit more for their next home game this coming Saturday against Trent University at 2:00 p.m.

Rugby

Practice begins

by Jim Fergusson

The continual action and physical nature of Rugby makes it enjoyable for most athletes. The Queen's Club practices at West Campus at 5:45 most weekdays. Although official practices have already started, the team is never formalized so any individual who perseveres has a chance to make either the first or second teams.

The past season was an extremely successful one for the Queen's Club. Both ehe first and second teams won their league. The second team also won the provincial final, but unfortunately the first was defeated by Guelph in their match for the championship.

For anyone interested in seeing some live rugby, the first home game is on Saturday, September 27 and will be played at West Campus. There are always a few rugby enthusiasts on the sideline who would be glad to explain the game to you. Your support would be appreciated.

"save the surface and you save all"

Dear Editors:
I read with interest your front-page quotations of John Gray in Friday's Journal. I wonder if it has occurred to Mr. Gray that he made a glaring tactical error in allowing his words to be published. When he says, "There are too many people with algebra in their heads"; at Queen's, he seems to have forgotten that Queen's has at least one thousand engineering students, and perhaps one thousand people studying Mathematics, Computing, Physics, Chemistry and other related subjects. All of these people are involved with or fascinated by "algebra". Few of them will take kindly to hearing that their field of study leaves them "not alive to interesting things" By disparaging "algebra", Mr. Gray has gained the immediate distrust of perhaps 25 percent to 40 percent of the students. Does he feel so completely secure in his position as a big toad in a small pond that he can afford to alienate this large a portion of the people he serves? Or has he simply not yet learned that because petty student-council politics interests him, it doesn't necessarily hold much fascination for people capable of more fruitful activities? Lest Mr. Gray get excessively arrogant, I would remind him that his sphere of operations is just one level above high-school student government, one level below municipal politics, and perhaps four levels beneath international diplomacy.

Parenthetically, why is Gray so concerned about the image of the AMS? The modern concern for images smells of both egotism and deceit.Or is it just a case of "save the surface and you save all"? A good paint company slogan, but a treacherous approach to community service. Why not spend the student's money improving the actuality of the AMS? Perhaps then people will spontaneously think of John Gray as a good man.

Cordially yours,
Brian F. Whittaker.

A critisism of Orientation '75

Dear Editors,
Orientation Week '75 gave me the impression of being less organized than last year's week I became a gael because a friend's gael partners were organizational gaels and could spare little time for the group and help was needed. Why don't organizational gaels be rovers and devot themselves to organizing while the responsibility of the group are left to assigned gaels?

Another general criticism I had was that there secmed to be fewer diverse events, with too much emphasis on parties. Obviously one cannot cater to all tastes but many "frosh" aren't very interested by continuous parties. Fewer events led to a concentration of people and many frosh spent hours in lineups; and after all, Frosh Week is for the frosh not the gaels.

Where were the signs all down Division St. welcoming the frosh? And "Welcoming", itself, was less inspiring in Bartlett Gym rather than in Grant Hall. Few freshmen from previous years forget their evening in Grant Hall. The clash with Lighthouse was regrettable

Many gaels complained of not knowing what was happening - the handbooks out of date two days after printing and served only as a general guide. The only accurate information was supplied by last minute bricfing.

Since Frosh Week '75 is over I direct my suggestions to the directors of Frosh Week '76.

Good luck.

A won-way to Tierra del Fuego

Dear Editors:
Think what you could do with 675 dollars! You could go on a four month bender, you could denote it to the Geology department so they could found an institution for the purpose of teaching rocks to talk or you could buy a wone way ticket to Tierra del Fuego. Such were the suggestions of the rugby club in their efforts to persuade students to support their annual tuition fee raffle. As in years past, students have been generous in their support. To the many students who bought tickets, buttons, T-shirts and whatever else players tried to sell, we thank you. To the university for their permission to have a booth in registration we thank you also. For those who wish to continue their support, our first home game is against Guelph (last year's champions) on September 27 2.00 pm at West Campus.

Gratefully

The Foundation of the AMS

by T. Collins and J. Gray

The rules governing students at Queen's have become somewhat more relaxed since the college had its beginning one hundred and thirty four years ago.

Back in the mid 1800's there were rules for just about everything you can think of. No swearing, smoking, drinking or talking unnecessarily to the kitchen staff. Students had to abide by rules dealing with promptness and punctuality. For example, morning prayers at a quarter to 9 am; devotions would follow dinner in the evenings. On Sundays, regular church attendance was taken for granted. These were only a few rules that punctuate the Presbyterian heritage of Queen's. Other rules of importance were absolutely no late payment of bills or no leaving the college after hours by unusual means. The hoarding house doors were locked at 10 p.m.

In 1851, a group of students got involved in some property damage and were fined and 'admonished in Public Hall'. They didn't pay and stayed away from lectures. The Senate wrote to their parents.

In 1853, a student stayed out until 3 am after making his way over a fence and through an open window. He refused to say where he had been or what he had been doing.

It is noted by D.D. Calvin in his book, Queen's University at Kingston that boys in those days who attended Queen's were from independent, rural stock and quite self-reliant.

From this spirit emerged on January 12, 1858 a memorial from the 111 students of that day to the Senate that requested the Alma Mater Society be allowed to exist in order to, among other things, protect student interests and debate topical subjects.

The Alma Mater Society is the oldest student government of its kind in the country. Incorporated in 1898, (this was forgotten a few years ago when the AMS was again incorporated, presumably because both the government and the AMS has lost all record of the Incorporation papers) the AMS had been allowed the right to manage all affairs of a non-academic nature.

One of the Society's primary functions initially was to act as a medium between the Alumni and the University. This purpose is now handled with computer precision by the Alumni Association.

The AMS court was developed early in the life of the Society to enforce the laws on campus. It was reportedly born in a vacant lot behind a brewery. A judge would be selected, a student brought forward on trumped up charges and fined. They then spent the money on beer. Later, though more formalized, the AMS court swore in witnesses on a dictionary in the name of one of the janitors.

In the 1930's the AMS court made its most serious and important ruling ever. A general meeting of the AMS was called to hear debate on whether or not fraternities should be allowed to exist on campus. 1000 students filled Grant Hall that night. The Frat houses provided to members cheaper and better accomodation than the local boarding houses before the days of Queen's residences. However the Arts-Levana-Theology ticket ran for and won the AMS executive positions on an "anti-frat" platform. After the debate the students voted 462 to 210 in favour of abolition.

Subsequently 24 students, including four football players, were called to answer charges of fraternity membership in front of the AMS court. The defence council asked for a postponement of the hearing because they had only been given one day to mount a defense. Refused, the council and his 24 defendents walked out in front of the 800 Queen'smen who had come to watch.

Convicted on charges of contempt of court and fraternity membership, the 24 were forbidden from taking part in any AMS politics, athletics, and social events.

The four football players were part of a team appeared destined to win the Intercollegiate title that season for the first time in four years. Coach Ted Reeve decided not to replace the four and went on to win the title with the remaining "fearless fourteen". Had they not won, the students were predicting a reversal of the AMS ban on fraternities.

Source material for this article came from clippings in the Alumni Association files and from old bound copies of the Journal and Tricolor. Our appreciation is extended to Mr. Murray Gill and Mr. Herb Hamilton of the Alumni Association for their cooperation in producing this column.

Plans for OPIRG

by Ross Bartlett

Plans are continuing for the establishment of a chapter of the Ontario Public Interest Research Group (OPIRG) here at Queen's. One of the major forces behind the group on campus is John Wilson, Vice-President (University Affairs), of the AMS.

The main force behind the provincial organization is Montreal Canadien goaltender, Ken Dryden. He hopes to found chapters (based on a similar group set up by Ralph Nader) in most of Ontario's universities. Assisting with the Queen's chapter is Pat Schmidt of the Queen's Legal Aid Bureau.

Currently, the group's main problem is funds, and so they are asking $5 from each student. This requires a campus-wide vote, and Wilson hopes to see a referendum brought before Queen's students in November. This money will be refundable if the student disagrees with the aims or workings of OPIRG.

There will, however, be no formal publicity campaign. As Wilson says "We'll have to rely on word of mouth because as of yet we have no funds. Unless some private person donates, say fifty dollars, any posters will be coming out of our pockets."

Despite his hockey schedule, Dryden will be making at lease one more visit to Queen's before the referendum.

Wilson stressed that "organized consumer action is an area of concern for just about everybody.

"It burns my butt to see things like the mercury poisoning issue in Northern Ontario and the government doing nothing about it. The matter is bounced back and forth from Toronto to Dryden (the town) and the attitude seems to be, they're only Indians."

Wilson said he felt that "consumers are strong enough to fund organizations to fight that sort of stuff." Students, particularly university students, have a high enough consciousness level not to want that sort of stuff going on."

Wilson stressed that OPIRG's constitution is constantly revised in response to the wishes and demands of OPIRG members. It is through this method that the original fee of ten dollars "was knocked down and a proviso entered that the money would be split fifty-fifty between the local and provincial groups."

When asked why students are being approached to fund the operation, Wilson replied, "grants are usually inconsistent. Governments prefer to fund short term projects as do private sources" - for terms of usually no more than two years. This is "completely ineffective -- you can exist one day and not the next on the whim of your funders."

Also, students are a readily identifiable group, "with a degree of interest", said Wilson. Also, "there are numerous resources which can be used at no cost if students are involved, such as labs, and libraries; indeed all the wealth of knowledge of faculty and students, the true intellectual community."

OPIRG however is not "specifically for students." What the student must decide is whether "a Nader's Raiders type group is worth five bucks or not. There is not a guarantee to investigate student issues."

There are two other groups at work in Ontario at present. One, at McMaster, was begun this spring so it is too early to determine its value; but the other, at University of Waterloo, is very successful, remarked Wilson.

"They're doing a lot of good work in the field of environmental issues." The group has now "moved to investigate the food industry - especially that controlled by George Weston Ltd., which includes drug stores as well as many other operations."

Does Wilson expect to get that referendum passed? "Yeah, students will probably receive it well but of course it's up to the voters."

Canadian North: Students unhappy

Present higher education opportunities for native and non-native residents of the Canadian North are not adequate, according to a report released this week by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada (AUCC). However, while programs available in Canadian universities do not always address themselves to the real needs of northern students, they are not the major source of dissatisfaction.

The real problems centre around the psychological and cultural dissonance which northern students experience in urban centres and large institutions. Although some technical training is available locally, the majority of students from the Canadian North must travel to urban centres in the South.

Students complain of the impersonal atmosphere, home sickness, inadequate financial assistance, lack of proper preparation in northern schools to meet the requirements of the universities and the resulting fear of failure, and the lack of employment opportunities following graduation. They miss close interpersonal relationships and the opportunity to relate to professors and other students in a close human way with the chance to be accepted for themselves, to think differently, creatively and culturally and to be valued for this ability.

The study also found a strong negative reaction to research activities in the North Northerners cited the approach of field-workers, the unavailability of reports and the lack of follow-up to the research as evidence of this.

Special programs and projects initiated by universities to involve northern people in higher education have achieved some success but, due to lack of communication and understanding, have had little impact on the total situation.

Queen's graduate dies

Dr. Bristow Guy Ballard, OBE graduate of Queen's University and past president of the National Research Council of Canada died this weekend. He was 73.

A native of Fort Stewart, Ont., Dr. Ballard graduated with a B.Sc. from Queen's in 1924. For the next five years he was on the staff of Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, Pennsylvania, where he worked on railway electrification.

In 1930 he was appointed to the electrical engineering section of the National Research Council's physics division. When this section became a full NRC division of radio and electrical engineering in 1948, Dr. Ballard became its director.

During the war Dr. Ballard's work on the development of electrical equipment and minesweepers to combat magnetic mines resulted in his being named an officer of the Order of the British Empire.

In 1954, Dr. Ballard was named vice president (scientific) of the National Research Council. He became NRC president in 1963, a position he held until his retirement in 1967.

Queen's University presented Dr Ballard with an honorary doctor of science degree in 1956. He also received honorary degrees from the Assumption University of Windsor, Memorial University, Nova Scotia Technical College, the University of Victoria and Strathclyde.

He was awarded the Ross Medal of the Engineering Institute of Canada in 1949 for his publication entitled "Recent Canadian Radar", and in 1953 he received the Coronation Medal. He was an honorary member and past president of the Engineering Institute of Canada. He was a fellow of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, and an honorary member of the Instrument Society of America. He was a member of the Board of Directors and past president of the Canadian Standards Association.

Ballard was president of Queen's Alumni Association from 1965-67. He was also a member of Queen's University Council for many years

Queen's University principal Dr Ronald L. Watts makes the following statement:

"It is with deep regret that I have learned of the death of Dr. Guy Ballard, graduate of Queen's and past president of the National Research Council. His

Air Canada, Beware!

OTTAWA (CUP)—A member of the Carleton student council is convinced that Ontario students can afford $5 million dollars for a used Boeing 707, set up a corporation to fly it, and then persuade students to use it.

Dan Perley, the Vice-President of Internal Affairs of the Carleton student council, is so convinced that he has visited the Boeing plant in Seattle and talked to senior executives of the company. They claim the plan is feasible.

The Ontario Federation of Students disagrees, and has told Perley in a letter "the principle of such a corporation is not feasible, the costs being prohibitive."

Perley now feels OFS is not responsible to the average student.

Nor is his council very enthusiastic about the proposed Student Air Corporation. Council president Dave Dunn says that with financial cutbacks and other student problems, getting into the airline business would seem to be "a contradiction".

John Gray, President of the Queen's University Alma Mater Society, commenting on Perley's proposal, asserted that the AMS had thought of the idea a year and a half ago but unfortunately never heard from the Olympic Lottery Committee.

Perley is undaunted, and continues to investigate his proposal. His plan is to start with one plane, make a profit by the third year, and then buy more planes - new ones this time.

Perley says students would get cheaper flight rates than by commercial airlines and that running an airline would improve the image of students by showing them to be "responsible."

Someone who took a lighter view of the student airline controversy recently posted bulletins around the Carleton University centre reading:

Wanted. Commercial pilot. No experience necessary. Will train. Contact Dan Perley."

He got one reply from a commercial pilot with three years experience.

A Club for War Games

by Susan Scobie

An interesting and somewhat unusual new club at Queen's is the Diplomacy Club. In its second year, it provides those who like to re-enact military history with a chance to get together for evenings of competative war gaming. The club meets every Friday night in the Grey House on Queen's Crescent, where a couple of boxed games are available for play.

The club is formally recognized and sponsored by the AMS, and there is a membership fee of $1 per year. According to its current president, John A. Ryder-Burbidge, there were 67 members last year; about 25 of these were regular participants. Meetings usually average about 20 players. Female members are always welcome.

Several games are available for use. Some are quite complicated mental exercises, but there are more simple ones for the beginner. The games are strictly based on military strategy, and some can be played as belonging to any time period. A detailed knowledge of military tactics or wartime events, however, is not necessary.

For many members, war games are a hobby. For others, the club provides an opportunity to get together with others for an evening of fun plus mental stimulation. Last year, a competition was organized with its RMC counterpart, and it is hoped that this can be arranged again this year. New members and beginners to war gaming are always welcome.

Ballard,

distinguished career in war and in peace brought honour to his Alma Mater and to his country. He spoke strongly of the engineer's obligation to bridge the gap between science and the humanities, and his actions supported this belief. As a member of Queen's University Council and as president of the Queen's Alumni Association, Dr. Ballard for many years demonstrated his loyalty and concern for this university. Honours and awards were bestowed on him from many Canadian and international organizations. The death of this eminent son of Queen's is a great loss to Canada."

Not all northerners believe the solution to the problem is the development of higher education opportunities in the geographical North. If changes in the present situation could eliminate the sources of dissatisfaction among northern students and parents, it is likely that northerners would support a system of post-secondary programs in both the North and the South.

Those who do favor the development of opportunities in the North insist that programs must be of excellent quality, that northern certificates and degrees must be recognized as equal to those of the South, that students must retain the coice of education in the North or elsewhere and that jobs must be available for graduates. They also believe that the southern model of the university is not workable in the North; while some qualities of a centralized structure are desirable, the issue of students being close to home remains a prime concern of many northern people

The report, entitled Northern People and Higher Education: Realities and Possibilities was commissioned by the AUCC to investigate the ways in which higher education affects the peoples of northern Canada and to assess the role of Canadian universities in relation to northern education and research. Information concerning higher education facilities in Alaska is also included, allowing for comparisons between a northern State which has had these facilities for many years and the Canadian North where facilities were only being planned in 1974

The report represents phase II of an AUCC study of the universities and the North. Phase I consisted of a published inventory of northern-related activites at 35 Canadian universities. It divided these activities into classes, research and special projects.

Phase II of the study was conducted by Ms. Del Koenig of the Institute for Northern Studies, University of Saskatchewan. It was financed by grants from the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, the Donner Canadian Foundation and the Ford Foundation.

Democratic government at Queen's

An opinion: Charles Cuffari

Senate, that 'ivory towered' body which one hears to little about, actually runs this institution. It is subservient only to the Board of Trustees. Yet what exactly are its functions? The first and foremost is to "determine all matters of academic character which affect the university as a whole, and to be concerned with all matters which affect the welfare of the university". This gives it broad and sweeping powers which encompass other aspects of life at Queen's than pure academics. This is witnessed by the massive number of Senate committees, yet others are related to tenure, Campus planning, Fine arts, residences, scholarships, student affairs and athletics.

A year on the Senate has developed severe doubts in my mind as to whether or not students in general care or even know what happens in Senate. What are the problems facing this campus? They are not the lack of: trees, dances, and football games; nor are they the outrageous food and bus prices, housing shortages, or lack of pub space. What they deal with are academies. A boring subject, eh? Especially when one has a paper due tomorrow and one only wishes to get drunk after finishing it. Let the administration worry about what's going on. I'll just work on my courses and forget about everyone elses' problems!

If one assumes that people come here for an education of sorts, then one could also assume that they are interested in the quality of education which they receive. Assumptions, however, can be wrong. It is evident that there is a lack of interest in elections, O.F.S., financial constraints (remember last year's open forum?), and last but not least, the Senate. Granted, there are a number of students who become extremely involved in the operation of this university; but is this a license for the majority to shirk all responsibilities which democratic society expects?

'Student apathy' during the past year has been described in various ways. Webster's defines the word 'apathy' as "lack of interest or concern". In the case of Queen's, it must be admitted then that the term applies. The question which arises however is why? Perhaps the problem stems from a lack of moral responsibility. Who cares about this place once his or her term is up upon graduation? Are we just a bunch of kids chewing up the vegetation, leaving the ground bare for ensuing flocks?

Financial constraints

Financial constraints have brought this problem to a head. What happens to the library in 1980 when there is no longer room to stock books? Goodbye purple room? Changes are imminent in this University which quite possibly will affect the essential qualities which it has possessed for many years. Cutbacks are always nice, be they academic, support or administrative staffs. What about life sciences as part of the medical faculty, or would it be better that Arts and Science just split into two faculties?

The administration of this university has mushroomed. Everyone needs more funds. This is witnessed by the library's constant pleas for funds in order to keep up with present issues of periodicals. Many within the University seem to be so intensely involved with current issues and problems, that they forsake attempting to look into the future. Should foresight have shown five years ago, that the rosy days of government generosity in the late sixties would not last forever? Perhaps further study of the functions of the offices at the vice-principal level as suggested by the Principal's committee on Financial Constraint, is a necessary step to the top if only to set an example to the rest of the university.

Criticisms and ideas

Well, so much for only a few problems. Now its time for pleading. Your ideas, problems, and criticisms are necessary. When one reaches the voting age in society, one's responsibilities are not limited to just casting a vote. The same applies here. Any remedies to the problems facing Queen's might come about due to the influx of new ideas. Perhaps my stand on the matter is too idealistic. If so, I am sorry. I find it hard to envisage just what the future for Queen's might hold. The insolvable problem of university funding tends to cloud my mind on this subject.

Any senator can be reached through the Senate office in Richardson Hall, or through the AMS office or respective faculty societies. The Gazette may be an extremely dry publication, but it tells exactly what the university government is doing. Perhaps a Senate column in the Journal is necessary, in which Senators (both faculty and students), and Senate committee chairmen and members address various issues. If the problems are brought forward, then the rest is up to you. Senate meetings are held on the third Thursday of every month at 3:30 p.m. in Richardson Hall. They are open for all students to attend on a first come first served basis. Tickets to the gallery are issued at the senate office. You might find the meetings boring, but as a student at this problem plagued institution, it is a function of your interest to attend. Anyway, find out what is going on. If you have a gripe then contact someone on the Senate. If not, this 'democratic system' of ours just won't work.

Frosh Week

Rivaly and destruction

by Toni Mohr

Numerous articles have appeared in the Journal and in Golden Words which have taken a critical look at this year's Orientation Week. While all of them aptly described the various acts and events which duly warrang condemnation, I don't think any really got below the surface to look at the basic philosophy of which these acts are the result.

I see three aspects of the week that contribute to this philosophy: first, the stress on faculty; second, the gullibility of the incoming freshmen; and third, a personal interpretation, that Orientation Week is a chance for most Frecs and Bosses, and many Gaels, to embark for a short time on a power trip.

The stress on faculty is, in itself, not disturbing. One's faculty is a point of association; fellow engineers have common interests and timetables which draw them together somewhat inevitably. It is when this association develops into an exclusive clique lashing out less in humour than in real dislike at a member or members of another faculty that the question arises - has this stress on faculty not gone far enough? "Real dislike?!" someone says. "It's all in fun!", which is why a brawl nearly erupted over the refusal of some members of Arts '78 and '79 to refrain from standing on the Applied Science '78 crest in front of Jeffery in mid-Frosh Week.

Group pressure

In most any group, the various Queen's faculties not exeluded, scapegoats are found to be the butt of ridicule and belittlement, so that the group can raise its self-esteem. Again, that's O.K. in itself. But the old maxim, "everything in moderation," seems to lose its viability under the influence of group pressure. So "knit-one, pearl-two..." turns into "Let's get the Artsci's!" and tempers flare in defence of some half-understood faculty alignment.

The faculty phobia manifests itself most pointedly in the actions of incoming freshmen. Insecure in a foreign environment, possibly "out on their own" for the first time, the frosh follow the every word of their new guardians as if it came from above. Frosh go to great extremes to satisfy the demands of their Frecs, Bosses and Gaels. Hence, "get the biggest thing you can find" results in the high-jacking of transports; other demands are met in a wave of crass vandalism and theft that lands young men and women in jail.

The lack of concern shown by the upperclassmen in warning freshmen of their responsibility as citizens leads them to naturally believe they have some sort of licence to break the law. The strong desire to be accepted in their new home may lead the freshman to do things that he would never have thought of doing before. The pressure from his Frec, Boss or Gael, and the pressure from his fellow freshmen persuade him to follow the crowd without seriously questioning his own actions. The result: a rightly angered local populace, a misguided new set of Queen's freshmen, and the setting for a repeat of the same lawlessness and organized vandalism a year hence.

At this point it is necessary to remark that, at least for the past two years, my observation has been that the Arts and Science Orientation Committee has made a concerted effort to change the dominance-subservience philosophy, and has taken some steps towards breaking down the faculty barrier. Unfortunately, this cannot be said for the Commerce or Engineering Orientation Committees. They, especially Engineering, have actively supported the power trip syndrome as a necessary attribute of the Frec or Boss. And here is the major problem: vandalism, theft, extreme faculty rivalry and severed relations with Kingston residents will not end until the upperclassmen stop viewing the week as a chance to vaunt their power drives and begin to see it as a chance to welcome, and really orient new students to university life.

I believe that the focus of the Engineering Orientation Week, and in some respects the Commerce, should be altered radically. To do that, the organizers should look behind the acts and events to the present underlying philosophy of Frosh Week. My interpretation of that philosophy is on paper here. Is it really the right kind of philosophy to maintain? No, it is not.

The rest of this article is for those people who agree with me. Below are some specific suggestions which, it is hoped, will put us on the road towards making that first week what it was first meant to be.

a) the abolishment of the scavenger hunt as it now stands: it is a license to commit crime.

b) a change in the focus of most events away from the consumption of alcohol as a goal in itself. That drug serves as a catalyst for the performance of thoughtless acts.

c) abandonment of the dress requirements, which serve to again accentuate the dominance-subservience aspect of the week.

d) selection of the Frecs, Bosses and Gaels on the basis of what they can do to welcome and orient the new student, not dominate and ridicule him.

e) the mayor of Kingston should be invited to speak to the Engineering freshmen at the beginning of the week. Until the Engineering organizers show their responsibility in this field, the task should be assigned to a non-partisan body, perhaps that body explained in the following suggestion.

f) the creation of a body, non-partisan in nature, to hear complaints from freshmen allegedly subjected to undue treatment, and to listen to complaints from Kingston residents. This body should have some power to levy fines.

g) a general awareness on the part of all upperclassmen that new students are different in only one way: they are new, and hence do not know (but want to learn) as much about the university as those in other years. They are not inferior, and do not deserve to be treated likewise. Freshmen should be treated as individuals, and should be encouraged to contribute to their group what they can on that basis, as opposed to living up to an image based on an errant philosophy. This is by far the most important, and all else hinges on this.

We must look at Orientation week in terms of its original purpose, to welcome and to orient, not to inspire rivalry and to destroy.

Financial Constraints

by Nancy Flood

Financial Constraints: ominous sounding words which have become all too familiar in the past year. The response to these words and to the economic climate which spawned them has been widespread and varied.

One of the first groups to attack the problem at Queen's was the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, which published a report on May 22, 1975. This report contained recommendations which could greatly affect Queen's faculty, support staff and students in many ways in the years to come.

Included among these recommendations were such things as increasing tuition, raising service fees (such as those for the use of the athletic facilities and the health service) and instituting a system of recovering the costs of lab equipment and materials etc. given out to students from the students themselves.

The existing economic problems have their origins in a history of declining financial support and rising costs. The Report states "In the years since 71-72, the increase in the value of the Basic Income Unit (BIU; unit value per student from which government grants are calculated) (2.0 percent, 3.4 percent and 7.1 percent respectively) did not keep up with the increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI) (4.8 percent, 7.6 percent and 10.9 percent). In those three years the CPI has risen by 25 percent, while the BIU value has risen by less than 13 percent. In real terms, basic operating income was reduced by 9.6 percent per BIU," states the Report.

Rapid decreasing government support of Ontario universities led to the appointment of the Committee on Financial Constraint in December 1974. According to the Report, the Committee attempted to answer questions such as: "How can costs be reduced in absolute or relative terms? How can this be done with the least effect on the quantity and quality of the university's functions of teaching and learning, research and public service."

Beside such comparitively innocuous suggestions such as selling off any excess furniture to be found around the campus, the Report presents some far reaching recommendations. Among these is a note about an increase in tuition. Though student fees are presently frozen by the government and 'regulated' by a complex system in which a university that tries to increase tuition has its provincial government grants cut accordingly. Thus, in its projections and in its consequent the Committee has made no provisions for an increase in fees. It does note, however, that "There could be a very significant trade-off from some of the drastic reductions recommended in this report if a way could be found to increase the net revenue from fees by say, $100 per student. (It does without saying that any unilateral increase in fees would have to be accompanied by the provision of increased funds for scholarships and student aid in order to support those students who might otherwise be prevented from attending Queen's)."

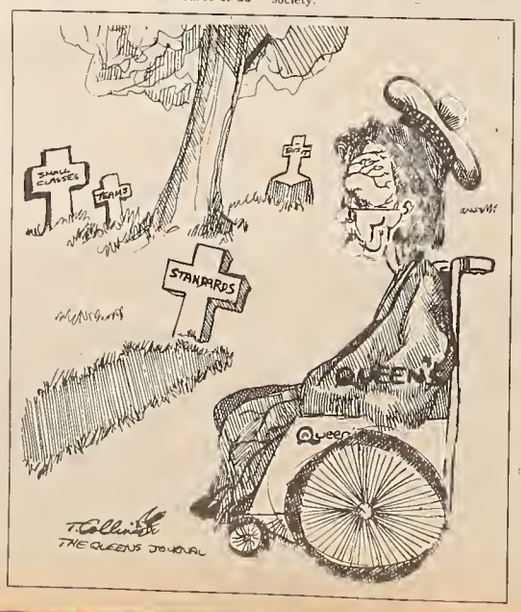
The "drastic reductions" envisioned in the Report are many. Among them are additional cut-backs in academic and support staff. Already, the university has experienced reductions of this sort.

Over the two year period 72-73 to 74-75, while the number of full time equivalent students increased by 9.1 percent, the number of equivalent full time academic staff increased by 2.2 percent only, so that the student-staff ratio increased by 7.3 percent. The support staff actually decreased so that the student-support staff ratio increased by 12.0 percent.

Reductions in academic staff are necessary, according to the Report, and so "the University must adopt a firm policy of non-replacement with exceptions only in those clear circumstances in which the reduction of staff complement would lead to the withdrawal of an essential program or service." Necessary hiring would take place by term appointment, "except in unusual circumstances, and at the most junior level suitable to the need."

Out and out termination of academic staff should be avoided for as long as possible, recommends the report because of the effect these would have on staff morals. It goes on to say however, that in preparation for the time when terminations become unavoidable, a study should be made of the tenure issue. The purpose of this would be to make the necessary distinctions between academic freedom and job security; to see how each fits into the present conception of tenure and the need for it.

The Report not only recommends staff cut-backs but goes on to specify the gory results such action would have: "Academic staff will have larger groups of students; students can anticipate less individual attention from hard-pressed staff, and will have to exercise greater individual initiative; staff and students can anticipate paying more for the various services they receive; and those members of the Queen's staff whose duties are not in the teaching function will inevitably find themselves spread more thinly as they try to maintain the level of service they have given students and staff in the past."



Fears held by many that an increase in enrolment here would be another recommendation of the Committee have been proved ungrounded. The report sees this avenue as "a doubtful source of additional funds." In addition it recognizes the manifold effects such an increase in student numbers would have on the housing situation, both on and off campus. It suggests that any benefits which might accrue from increased enrolment would be far outweighed by the disadvantages of such a move.

Other recommendations are less pleasant however. It is suggested that students and staff be charged more for services such as Bus-it so that university subsidies may be reduced or eliminated.

It also suggests that the AMS consider reduction or elimination of intercollegiate athletics so that $20 students now pay to the University Athletic Fee could be reallocated to another student service.

All in all, the situation looks bleak. Nobody seems to love universities these days and cutbacks in support have led to the Queen's budget of 1975-76, with its deficit of $1.1 million. The Committee, when calculating the methods of eliminating the projected deficits up to 1980 (over 11 million by then), labeled the University's problem "an unfair challenge". The Report recommends that the university try to convince the appropriate bodies and the general public of "the inequity of current policy and of the inevitable down-grading of the university system if the policy is continued."

"We believe," the Report continues, "that the university system has entered a period of severe stringency, and the messages from the Ontario government and elsewhere clearly demand a process of cutting back that is much more than "trimming the fat." Whether this can be accomplished without permanent damage to the system will depend upon the spirit and the skill of the universities in meeting the present problems, and on the ultimate view of the role of universities taken by society."

What about Dan Hill?

Dear Editors:

I REACTED VERY NEGATIVELY TO Mr. Paul Luke's commentary on the McLachlan concert which also featured the appearance of Dan Hill. I doubt very much that Luke has had previous contact with Hill or his music. Certainly Dan Hill cannot be equated with Murray McLachlan, (as it seemed to me Luke was trying to do) since they are two different people with two different musical styles. McLachlan also has the advantage of having been in the performing circuit for a considerably longer period of time than Hill. I felt along with many others in attendance that Hill communicated his sincerity and honesty through the sensitivity of his music and lyrics extermely well. Dan Hill is only beginning.

Another comment on the artiele is that there was absolutely no mention of the fine work done by McLachlan's bass player Dennis Pindrith, whom I feel deserves recognition.

Shelagh Davis

Yes, what about him?

Dear Editors:

Paul Luke's apparent adoration of Murray McLachlan (re: Singer from the Street, Queen's Journal, Tuesday, Sept 23) would perhaps explain this lack of appreciation for the fine performance by Dan Hill at Sunday Night's concert. Without saying that Murray McLachlan's act was anything less than "a seamless delight" I should think that Hill made the concert truly worthwhile.

I found Dan Hill's music and presentation of same to be excellent, and am disappointed that Mr. Luke found it neeessary to devote one-third of the article condemning his performance. The fact that music stores in Kingston were sold out of Dan Hill albums by Monday afternoon may be more indicative of how he was received by the majority of the audience.

Dear Editor:

I have now been a student at this esteemed establishment for two weeks and in those two weeks my notice has been drawn to a problem of immense proportion and one that could seriously affect the future of this University and maybe even this nation! Do I have to spell it out? Cannot you people see it or am I the only sane person left in this institution? I am talking about, of course, SOCIALISM. Oh yes, you may scoff but it is no laughing matter. In issue No. 2 of the Journal there is even a letter from six people actually admitting that they would vote NDP in the provincial election! There are "Free Portugal" signs all over campus and a Communist newspaper was to be seen in Chown Hall! I came here hoping to find a respectable University with a serious aroma of study- what do I find? A hotbed of radicals! Don't you realize these people are out to take over the world - rape young girls and beat up old men? If things aren't changed by tomorrow I'm leaving. I mean it.

If the present situation looks grim take heart, the future may be worse

by Peter O'Malley, Canadian University Press

In the year 2001 there will be 16.3 per cent more post-secondary students in Canada than in 1974. If this increase were gradual and steady, educational institutions and government policy makers could fairly easily make provisions to adapt.

But, according to an educational statistician with Statistics Canada, the increase will be anything but "gradual and steady", and he predicts that enrolment patterns between now and the end of the 20th century will have a significant impact on the life of the post-secondary community.

In a paper presented to the Statistical Science Association of Canada, Zolten Zsigmond of the Education, Science and Culture Division of Statistics Canada, warns of "the potential hazards the future holds" if education planners fail to consider "demographic facts and their possible impact" on post-secondary enrolment.

What makes rational long-term planning so complicated, and so important, he argues, is the roller-coaster appearance of the line graph projecting enrolments over the period from now until the end of the century.

Whereas in 1974 there were 567 thousand post-secondary students in full-time attendance at colleges and universities across Canada, by 1982, according to Zsigmond's estimate, this figure will increase 18 per cent, to about 670 thousand.

This projection is based on the increase in the size of the 18-24 age group, from which 80 per cent of the post-secondary student population is drawn. Zsigmond assumes the participation rate - the proportion of that age group that attends post-secondary institutions - will remain at the current 20 per cent level until the end of the century.

As the 18-24 age group rises and falls, so will post-secondary enrolment, according to Zsigmond.

Which is why the enrolment situation will dramatically reverse itself after the 1982 high point. Those born during the "baby boom" years will have already passed through the 18-24 age group and the post-secondary system, and the size of the group will then begin to diminish in accordance with the decline in fertility rates evident since the 1960's.

Zsigmond predicts the low-point in enrolment will come around 1992, when roughly there will be 520 thousand students, 22 per cent less than 1982.

After 1992, says Zsigmond, demographie trends based on census data indicate that enrolment will once again start to increase to about 660 thousand, just slightly above the 1982 figure.

The problem of planning for growth in the post-secondary sector is clear. For every 100 students that need teachers, classrooms, and other services in 1974, there will be 118 in 1982, only 82 in 1992, and 116 in 2001.

If planners attempt to target to accommodate all the students needing facilities in 1982, they will have exeess capacity after that date until the 90's.

And if they opt to plan for no more students than will be around in the 1982-92 period, institutions will find themselves short of resources before and after that ten year period.

Zsigmond outlines some of the possible implications of demographic change and enrolment levels on the post-secondary sector.

One is that the enrolment fluctuations will not affect all programs equally. Those faculties in which enrolment is determined more by the availability of facilities than by the number of applications, such as medicine, dentistry, and other professional programs, will be less affected by demographic patterns than general programs.

"It is the general faculties, particularly arts and science, that are likely to feel the effects of the population decline", Zsigmond writes.

"First year admissions (in these programs) depends largely on the number of secondary school graduates there were the preceeding spring. When the 18-24 year old age group starts to decrease, so will 'general' enrolment".

The attitudes and actions of administrators will also be effected, he says. They will have to ask themselves "Is it reasonable to curtail current growth to cope with future decline? Should some programs be eliminated and academic staff reduced?"

And an important requirement Zsigmond says, will be "more effective and realistic budgeting" in the future, and replacement of the "usual single year planning: currently imposed by governments on post-secondary institutions.

According to Zsigmond, those whose lives are apt to be most affected by the enrolement decline are teachers. If the current national student-teacher ratio of 12:1 persists to the peak enrolment year, 1982, about 8,400 more teachers will be needed. But should this number of teachers be sustained the ratio will have fallen to 9.3:1 by 1992.

Unless the ratio is lowered as enrolment declines, by the early 1990's there will be about 12,500 "surplus" teachers - 26 per cent of the present total full-time post-secondary teaching staff. And most of these will be in the general faculties.

Although the most economical solution to the problem from the administrators perspective is to cut back on teachers and course, Zsigmond says teachers and their associations would likely become more militant as their security is threatened.

"The years ahead are apt to be more marked by vigorous bargaining over salaries, tenure and class loads", he predicts.

Zsigmond is skeptical that the enrolment decline he sees for the 1982-92 period will result in decreased costs in terms of the system as a whole. Education, he feels, manages to make use of any increased resources and operating costs are unlikely to drop proportionate to enrolment.

He cites the inflexibility of fixed costs, tenure, faculty unionization and the fact that the declines will be mostly felt in the relatively cheaper general programs as reasons. Capital costs, however, are predicted to slow down "if authorities plan ahead"

But even if the institutions themselves find it difficult to reduce expenditures, Zsigmond feels that government - which pays 80 per cent of the post-secondary bill - might have cause of their own to become more active in reduction expenditures in this sector.

Again arguing from demographic trends, Zsigmond points out that, as the size of Canada's 18-24 year-old group declines, the number of persons 65 years and older is on the increase.

"This means greater expenditure on hospitals, medicare, pensions, and senior citizens housing" and, he suggests, a decline possible in the post-secondary sector as a government spending priority for reasons aside from the decline in enrolment.

Then so what about enrolment problems

What all this means to the current crop of post-secondary students, and those to come along in the future, depends on the decision reached by educational planners as to how to accommodate future trends, a subject for speculation.

Based on past decision, the surest bet would seem to be that government will not pump in sufficient funds to provide the resources needed to handle the increasing enrolments forecast until 1982.

To do so would mean "excess capacity" after 1982. Less resources, erowded facilities, and increased class-size (or more "term" contracts for faculty) would seem to be a more orthodox government response.

A deteriorating quality of edueation will result when an increasing number of students are provided with a constant level of educational resources. This is not the only result to be expected.

Student housing conditions, for instance, will likely worsen. What institution would build student residences to meet the 1982 enrolment level, knowing full well they will not have the students needed later on to pay off the mortgage?

Another result of increased enrolment is that the number of graduates will also increase until the mid 1980's, meaning the already reduced value of the degree in the marketplace will continue to decrease.

And those students who contemplate careers in academia had better perish the thought, or start shoving tenured faculty aside in preparation for that day in 1982 when the student-as-commodity begins to grow scarce.

This predicted deterioration in the quality of education and the reduction in its market value, it should beremembered, is occuring at the same time as federal and provincial governments are demanding that students borrow more money to pay for it. So student loan repayment will become an increasing burden, and the default rate is likely to increase.

Those students who come later will not be in such a bad predicament. As the cost-per-student increases they will need rich parents or bigger loans. But the product they buy should improve in quality.

The reduced student-teacher ratio, the many years of teaching experience of those tenured faculty who remain, and the wide-open spaces in classrooms and cafeterias could provide an enjoyable learning environment, even if it is a little less than dynamic.

And as they graduate in ever decreasing numbers, they will find that graduates have once again become somewhat scarce on the job market, and are able not only to get jobs, but to command high incomes.

The situation described above for students in the 80's does sound somewhat reminiscent of the "good old days" before the expansionary upheavels of the 60's and 70's, when post-secondary education was a comfortable preserve for the comfortable few.

However, after 10 years, in 1992, the demographers show that once again the 18-24 age group will be increasing in numbers and pressing for entrance to the post-secondary system.

Are they likely to be let in? Will post-secondary education again see enrolment increase? Or will government policy see to it that the "participation rate" is lowered so as to avoid another round of expansion?

The question is political rather than demographic because to say the university age group will increase is not to say that enrolment itself will increase. Student aid policies and academic admission standards are just two of the devices that can be used to determine actual enrolment levels.

Admission standards are a good example. In Ontario for instance, the great hue and cry about the allegedly low academic qualifications of students being admitted to colleges and universities did not gain momentum until the government had shut off the financial tap.

All that is really indicated by the now popular appeal for increased admission standards is that the system feels there are too many students, given current resources. "Raise the standards" simply means "eliminate students".

Will such devices be employed to reduce the participation rate when the 18-24's start increasing in number again in 1992?

Government policy will decide. Goverment may listen to those who will argue that the failure of our economy to absorb the post-secondary trained manpower of the 60's and 70's means we can not afford another attempt at "mass" post-secondary education, and urge that the "cooling off" of the system as a result of demographic trends in the 80's be continued by deliberate policy into the 90's.

And others will argue that the failure of our economy to provide jobs for graduates was just that - an economic failure, not the failure of the education system. They will urge government to maintain and increase the participation rate, so as to make post-secondary education "universally accessible".

In any case, the winning side will be those with the strongest political base, who may or may not be those with the best arguments. They will determine the future of post-secondary education of Canada.

The Lingering Whiff of

by Tom MacGregor

Like the silent whiff of smoke drifting across the screen to let us know John Houston is not alone, Chinatown stays with the viewer long after he has left the theatre. The macabre mind of director Roman Palanski is applied to the detective mystery genre to produce its most creative aspects. He presents a mystical, haunting movie steeped in Deja Vu.

This is a multi-level film. Set in the 1930's with the presence of John Houston it starts with the flavour of The Maltese Falcon. We have here a private eye's investigation into a murder which may not be a murder, after being hired by a lady who may not be who she says she is, and leads to the search of a girl who may or may not be her sister. On a personal level, we have our protagonist desperately fighting off a deju va as romance begins to mingle in his work. On a metaphysical level we have the title weaved around the story like a liet-motif or the evanescent memory it is. Too bad Polanski ruins subtlety with the last line

Jack Nicholson is at his best presenting a character unsure of his ability to rise above gathering divorce evidence, who believes tough lines are part of the job but who seems to lack conviction in delivery. His performance is well matched by Faye Dunaway whose mysterious beauty is well in tune with atmosphere of the film.

Looking at the Dunning line-up it seems certain the best was first. Next in the Dunning Series is American Graffiti (1973) starring Richard Dreyfuss.

Dunning Flicks are presented by the Cineguild every Thursday night in Dunning Hall Auditorium. Films are shown at 7:00 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. with the admission being $1.00 at the door.

Indian Dancer

Anjali

ANJALI (Anne-Marie Gaston) began her ballet training at the age of eight in Canada. Later she studied the Martha Graham technique of Modern Dance with the New Dance Group of Toronto.

After completing a B.A. and B.P.H.E. at Queen's University in 1964, she went to Madras, India, to teach with the Canadian University Services Overseas Programme (C.U.S.O.). Fascinated with the temple sculture illustrating Indian dance, she resolved to study its living form, Bharata Natyam. At the same time she studied Hartha Yoga.

Returning to Canada in 1966 she gave popular performances and lecture demonstrations at universities, Indo-Canadian friendship societies, art galleries, The Colonnade Theatre with the Garbut Roberts' troup in Toronto and Expo '67 in Montreal. In 1968, she was a member of the folk dance group that represented Canada at the Cultural Olympics in Mexico City.

A Canada Council Arts Bursary in 1969 enabled her to return to India for a further two years of studying Bharata Natyam and Odissi. During this tenure, she visited Orissa as a guest of the State Government and presented two performances of Odissi. In February 1971, she participated in the East-West Encounter at the Max Mueller Bhavan in New Delhi, both as a panelist and performer.

Anjali is appearing tonight at Convocation Hall, Theological Building at 8:30 p.m.

A slide show and commentary will be presented after the dance presentation.

Tickets are $3.50 general, $2.50 students and senior citizens and are available from the Performing Arts Box Office in the Art Centre

Dances of the Times

The Toronto dance company, Ballet Ys is coming to the K.C.V.I. Auditorium on Friday, September 26th at 8:00 p.m. Ballet Ys (pronounced as in 'peace' and is a Celtic word meaning "of the times") is under the artistic direction of Gloria Grant and combines classical ballet technique with modern dramatic dance styles to produce a unique art form. Its repertoire includes a number of specially commissioned works.

Ballet Ys was formed in 1971 in response to a particular audience demand, filling the need for a concert-size ballet company which can perform in the smaller centres and communities. Says artistic and technical director, Les Spits: "We would like to adopt part of the philosophy of Maurice Bejart and get ballet away from its elitist association. There are some very well trained dancers coming out of the National Ballet School, and not all of them end up in the company. Unfortunately, in the past, there's been a feeling at the school that if you don't make it into the National there's nothing else worth doing in Canada."

For the past five seasons, the company has operated under a variety of names with a company of seven dancers, ballet mistress Karen Bowes, and a staff of technicians, travelling around with its own dance flooring and complete sound and lighting systems to various audiences.

Operating funds have been received from various sources including the Canada Council, the Ontario Arts Council, Alcan and the Gulf and Shell Oil companies.

The Great Canadian Short Story

by John Bottomley

I went out last week in search of the most typical Queen's student I could find. (Romance: The Great Quest). But it was very hard. I had to give up. (Tragedy: failure). But I figure, who cares. (Satire: mocking of hero concept) with this thought I smiled and woke up in spring (Comedy: Rebirth, dawn and spring images).

Hollywood Classics

Hollywood Classics: The Depression Years - one of three film series jointly sponsored by the Department of Film Studies and the Performing Arts Office - begins Friday, September 26th with a screening of Mervyn LeRoy's I am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang at 8:00 p.m. in Ellis Hall. This Warner Brothers classic of 1932, one of the studio's first 'prestige' pictures, stars Paul Muni, Glenda Farrell, Helen Vinson and Preston Foster. LeRoy, director of Little Caesar in 1930, achieves a ruthless expose of social injustice, utilizing well the talents of Paul Muni, then famous for his role in Hawks's Scarface. The film, released during the year when the U.S. economy was suffering its lowest ebb and the average citizen was feeling its worst effects, centers around a returning World War 1 veteran whose economic vulnerability and the horrifying process by which he becomes a condemned man are powerfully observed. The book on whieh the film is based is claimed to have been written by a man who was himself similarly treated and still in hiding when relatives had his work published.

Through the use of stark shadows and claustrophobic sets, the film becomes almost overwhelmingly oppressive in atmosphere, effectively conveying the plight of its wrongly imprisoned anti-hero. The ironic and intricate workings of fate are almost coldly observed by LeRoy, whose work - at least during the early Thirties - seems at times amazingly cynical, with a noticeable bitterness towards women as well as institutions The violent potential within the script is effectively realized often by not showing it directly on-screen. A particularly memorable example is the flogging of the prisoners, which is conveyed to us through the use of shadows, reaction shots and sound alone. I Am A Fugitive From A Chain Gang provides a good example of the Warner Brothers studio style and socially conscious productions of the early Thirties.

Mekanique needs oiling

by Alan Mann

According to the programme passed out at the Theatre Mekanique performance of Georg Buchner's play, Woyzeck, the play "is based upon the life of Johann Christian Woyzeck, who was hanged in 1824 for the impassioned murder of his mistress, Mrs. Woost. From the story of the crime of passion, Buchner constructed a bitter indictment of society. Woyzeck the character is a man of the lower classes. He is the recipient of the evils of a corrupt and decadent society. The play revolves around Woyzeck, and outlines the extent that society can manipulate a man". While it is true that the play as written deals with this theme, the play presented on Wednesday night by the Theatre Mekanique fell well short of any such moral discussion.

As a starting company, Theatre Mekanique chose an ambitious play, and the nine players played some twenty characters, with one actor taking as many as five roles Although this is not an unusual occurance in smaller companies, the effect so many role changes had in this case was to confuse the audience to the extent where no one really understood who was who when. Actors changed roles between sympathetic characters and unsympathic characters. One never new whether to expect scorn or love, cynicism or compassion. One never knew why things were said, or even who was saying them.

The play, as written, deals with three separate days of Franz Woyzeck's life, each about a year apart. It is as these three years pass with no change in Woyzeck's life style or improvement in his plight that the pathos and the tragedy of the play are set up. The plight seen at No. 8 Princess Street was almost comical were it not for the awareness that the actors were trying to convey sorrow, anger, self-pity and other such tragic emotions, that is when they tried. When Woyzeck dies at the end, one is left with the question, "So?"

The production style itself was fascinating and showed that director, Jana Kendall had done much work with her play and some of her actors Larry Moore as Woyzeck put on the best performance, not only in the play, but probably in his reeent career, although there were times one wondered if in reality Larry didn't find his character a bit too humourous. John Frizzel appeared on stage with his latest stage voice and character and Judith Thompson, playing the mother of Woyzeck's son and the better followed of the camp followers ran through the emotional gamut from A to B pulling out all her stock faces of great emotional anguish Dale Mieske is worth of mention mostly however because of his ability to sing the ditties in the play, but this ability only made him stand out the more.

The best thing to come out of Theatre Mekanique's production is the knowledge that at least some people in Kingston are aware of the fact that theatre consists of more than British comedy and American musicals.

Woyzeck continues until Saturday night with tickets available at the door Starting time is 8:30 pm

Vaghy Quartet's New Season

by Cynthia David

In the basement of Dunning Hall, a dramatic pause reigned Moments later, without introduction, Kingston's Vaghy String Quartet began a new season at Queen's

Tuesday evening's performance included string quartets by Mozart, Bartok and Beethoven, an ambitious program which required from the musicians and listeners a fierce concentration. The Vaghy ensemble, of international fame, have been Artists-in-Residence at Queen's since 1969.

The Quartet in D Minor, K. 421, one of Mozart's finest and most popular works, opened the recital. A flowing grace combined with a driving energy distinguished the four movements, but the musicians captured perfectly the stately elegance of Mozart's era in the third movement, a light but reserved Menuetto to satisfy any conservative taste. For those more daring, however, the Vaghy's second offering, Bartok's Quartet No. 5 provided a wider variety of tone and garish colour.

It was a dark and stormy night. Bela Bartok, a 20th century Hungarian composer sat at his desk compsing music which could easily adapt to any modern crime drama. Swept into a state of frenzied activity, the music at times sounded like a passing streetcar The second movement reinforced this tension with its long sustained notes creating a haunting background for the plaintive violio melody. An intriguing mixture of lound, awkward sound and the syncopated rhythms of Bulgarian folk-song followed. Throughout the work the versatility of the stringed instruments was fully explored. The last movement of Bartok's Quartet No. 5 demonstrated the composer's sense of humour, as the four dignified professionals on stage began playing deliberately out of tune to ereate, as the programme noted, an example of "bad Hungarian cafe music", to end the interesting and unconventional work.

The conecrt concluded with Beethoven's Quartet Opus 59 No. 1, the first of three quartets composed for a Russian ambassador in Vienna. One of the most difficult of all string quartets, this work is a tribute to the genius of Beethoven and displayed the technical excellence and skill of the Vaghy Quartet Their music was always rich and alive, while the subdued Adagio provided lyrieal solo passages for all four musicians. In the 19th Century the form of the three Beethoven quartets was unaceeptable to the performers and public. One professor and musician at the Paris Conservatory apparently showed his disapproval by throwing his copy of the Quartet No. 1 on the floor - and stomping upon it!

A brilliant finale brought the evening to an exeiting conclusion. The appreciative audience proved that classical music is not a dull pastime reserved for the few, rather it holds an appeal for everyone, and the Vaghy String Quartet offers students especially a unique opportunity to hear a group of Canada's finest musicians

The second Vaghy concert is scheduled for February 25 in Dunning Hall. Be there!

Rugby victorious

by Dave Purdy

The Queen's rugby teams emerged victorious from the woods behind McMaster University last Sunday, continuing last year's winning tradition. Before a crowd of under five thousand, the second XV opened their season with a resounding 27-6 win. Queen's first XV, not to be outdone, responded by trouncing McMaster's firsts 36-12.

The eventual outcome of the seconds' game was evident from the outset. After kicking off, the Queen's pack proceeded to roll directly over the McMaster forwards, leaving behind a track of shell-shocked opposition. many McMaster players continued to wear dazed expressions throughout the remainder of the game and well into the reception held afterwards.

The opening half saw the Queen's forwards continue their aggressive play, and along with a speedy group of backs, they made regular excursions into the McMaster end zone. First half tries went to Ken Covo, Don McLean, Tom Yovanoff and Taylor Gray. The second half was somewhat of a letdown as Queen's appeared to be rather disorganized (some may have been bored). Tom ("Yogi" to the fans) Yovanoff scored the only try of the half. Scott Campbell kicked two converts and a penalty for seven points.

The opening half of the firsts' game was much tighter. The smaller, but tenacious McMaster forwards kept the Queen's attack from gaining momentum until Reid Drury finally scored the game's first try. Then "Thunderthighs" Honsberger rumbled in to extend the lead to 8-0. A quick converted try by McMaster narrowed the score to 8-6 near the end of the half, however, and coach Gavin Reid appeared visibly nervous. Queen's allayed his anxiety in the second half, overwhelming a tiring McMaster side and piling up 28 points. Second half tries were scored by Doug Campbell, Bill Payne, John Rutka, Reid Drury, Dave Bonker, and Bill Buchanon. Peter Kopp kicked two converts. After the game a McMaster player was heard to mutter, "Those guys were pretty good!"

This season, like last, Queen's appears to be the team to beat. Their first home game will be Saturday, against Guelph, at West Campus. Guelph, who edged Queen's in last year's final, promises to be strong opposition. Asked for a prediction of the outcome, coach Reid exclaimed, "Walk...jog...three-quarters speed...now sprint!" A mysterious man, coach Reid. The seconds' game Saturday is at 12:30, the firsts play at 2:00, so come out and support Queen's winningest team. Spectators are advised to arrive early in order to get the good seats while they last.

The Queen's cross country team started off their fall season of competition in fine form this year with a solid first place finish at the annual Guelph Open this past weekend.

This was the first year the team has attended this particular meet and it proved to be a very rewarding experience as they finished at top of the eleven team field defeating many of last years top teams in the OUAA's.

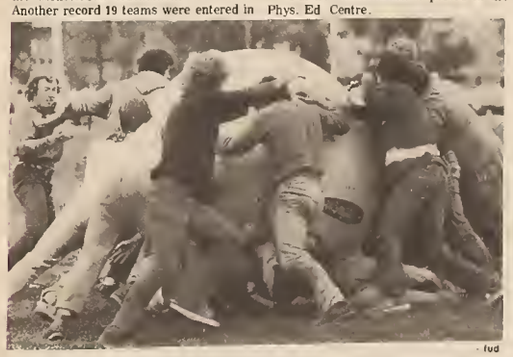
Grant McLaren of Canada's national team was the meet's individual winner for the Guelph team in a very quick time despite the wet conditions and uneven terrain. One promising note is that the top five Queen's runners finished in the top twenty in the 81 man field and this indicates great depth on the squad this year.

Especially impressive were two rookies on the team: Adam Shoemaker and Clauss Rinne who placed fourth and fifth respectively. Returning veterans Bob McCormack and Mike DeGuida also ran strong races as did Murray Hale, a new addition to the team this year from Waterloo. Max Barr also indicated he has returned this fall in good shape after some fine distance raced this summer.

The cross-country gaels will be returning to action this Saturday for the R.M.C. Invitational which starts on the college parade square at 2:00. Last year Queen's won the team championship for the first time and they hope to defend their title against the strong opposition expected from Toronto, Guelph and R.M.C.

P.S. Maybe Walter can win another trophy.

Bews News



Monday night the 1975-76 Bews season got underway with the Tug-O-war tournament. A record 18 teams were entered in this competition. In the preliminary round Commerce '76 beat Arts '79 2-0 and Law '78 beat Commerce '79. In the first round Commerce '76, Law '77, Commerce '78, Civil-Math, Arts '77, Bus Grads and Commerce '77 all won by 2-0 scores and Mechanical beat Science '79 by default. Law '77 then beat Commerce '76 after losing the first pull, Civil-Math beat Commerce '78, Arts '77 beat Mechanical and Bus Grads beat Commerce '77 in two pulls each. The semi-finals saw Civil-Math beat Law '77 2 pulls to 1 as Arts '77 beat Bus Grads in two pulls. In the finals the well co-ordinated Arts '77 team beat Civil-Math again in two straight pulls. In the 4 matches that the Arts '77 team contested, they didn't lose a pull. Congratulations to Coach Geoff Goad and his squad on a good team effort.

On Tuesday night the first rounds of the Monsterball tournament were held. Another record 19 teams were entered in this event. For those of you who have not seen this game before, the game is played with a 6 foot canvas ball. Teams consist of 10 players and their object is to propel the ball over the other team's goal line. The field is one-half of the football field. Players can block members of the other team.

In the first round of this year's tournament Mechanical, Commerce '77, Phys. Ed.,Arts '78, Science '79, Arts '77, Meds and Arts '76 all registered victories. In the second round Commerce '77 beat Mechanical, P.H.E. beat Arts '78, Arts '77 beat Science '79 and Arts '76 beat Meds.

So the semi-finals were played at 7:30 on Wednesday. Commerce '77 met P.H.E., last year's runner-up. The game was won 1-0 by Phys. Ed. Arts '77 went against defending champs, Arts '76. The game ended in a victory for Arts '76 by the score of 1-0. The finals were then played and Phys. Ed became the Bews Monsterball champions by a 1-0 score.

Focus misplaced

The Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint was released in May, when the great majority of Queen's students were away from campus. Included in the report were penetrating and controversial recommendations of where spending should be cut. An outline of the recommendations appears on page 8. Reprinted below (slightly rewritten) is the Journal's editorial response to the report (from May 29 Journal).

The Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint ends where it should have begun. The final two paragraphs mention that course offerings and teaching methods should be reviewed; this should have formed the focal point of the Report. As academic salaries make up 50 percent of the operating budget, and as instruction is assumed to be one of the University's main functions, a review of instructional processes should have received considerable attention by the committee established to examine and suggest solutions to the problem of diminishing financial resources.

Very little has been done by Queen's deans, administration or Senate regarding evaluation of instructional processes, so it's not surprising that this received so little attention by the Constraint Committee. However, research into this area has been carried out by others, including the Ontario Universities Program for Instructional Development (working under the auspices of the Joint Committee on Instructional Development of the Committee on University Affairs and the Council of Ontario Universities.)

This program, which is 2½ years old and until this summer was directed by Dr. Harold M. Good (of Queen's biology Dept.) held a workshop in November, 1973 to discuss priorities which the program should adopt for 1974. Ideas emerging from this workshop, which was attended by 70 staff and students of Ontario universities including Queen's, included needs for:

–more precise enunciation of the University's objectives at all levels (institutional, course, lesson).

–more critical evalutaion of students, teachers and programs, with evaluations carefully applied to these objectives.

– more varied formats for presentation of programs; for example, independent study courses available intramurally - perhaps as alternatives to the present form.

– Instructional Development Committees or Centres on each campus.

People at Queen's continue blindly to believe that a proliferation of specialized courses is an asset to the University's academic quality. Standards for measuring quality of education continue to be class size and student-professor contact. How can we just believe that a medium-size lecture class is preferable to a large one? Ontario government suggestions that universities should consider cutting out some departments, programs and courses which are offered at other universities, are met with violent reactions by people who feel that this would lead to a University of Ontario. But if under the current system universities are having trouble maintaining quality of individual programs, then why is this idea not being considered at this time?

Various teaching methods have yet to be given an intensive review at Queen's. While old, traditional methods involving lecture, seminar and tutorial have been clung to, very little has been done towards discovering or implementing new methods of blending these alternative methods.

One idea which should be considered is that of bringing back more reading courses which would help save money paid to faculty members for lecturing, and would free them to spend more time in discussion with students.

Independent study programs, of which this is only one example, have been studied by the Ontario Universities Program for Instructional Development. Dr. Good summarized various viewpoints on independent study, which have been expressed at conferences and meetings organized by the Program:

1. Accessibility - even people who live too far away from the university to attend normal classes are eligible for enrolment in a correspondence type program.
2. Independence - students develop the ability to think on their own; they retain more of what is learned.
3. Economy - professors do not have to lecture, but can spend time discussing the students' studies with them.
4. Budget - potentially larger "classes" justify greater amounts of time and expense for course preparation and for materials.

The educational objectives inherent in these viewpoints appear to be instilling in students the ability to think cirtically and independently, to retain what has been learned. Are these wise objectives? Are they shared by Queen's? Just what are the "priorities intended" which have been referred to in the constraint report? An answer to this question is hard to find.

It is obvious since instructional processes have not received due attention by the Committee in its preparation of the Report, and because Queen's educational priorities have yet to be concretely defined, that this Report should be sent back for more work. The Committee should take the summer to get in touch with the Ontario Universities Program for Instructional Development and to study their ideas and suggestions.

The argument that there is insufficient time to examine this issue must be ignored - we cannot afford to pass up this chance to do what is long overdue and what will have a great effect on the quality of education - to examine educational priorities and instructional processes at Queen's.

"small toad in a small pond"

Dear Editors.

As a reasonably keen observer, but a non-participant of student politics at Queen's, I feel that Brian Whittaker's remarks in the Tuesday Journal are just a bit "offside". I don't feel alienated by Mr. Gray's remarks of last week, and I am a member of the chosen 25 to 40 per cent. Much to the contrary, I feel that the remarks are fully justified. A surprisingly large number of students at this university concern themselves with little more than their academics. I am not saying this is wrong - it is their perogative.

Mr. Whittaker, if one must be so petty as to interpret Mr. Gray's remark in its most literal sense, then may I suggest that you are a smaller toad in a small pond, and quite possibly one with a chip on his shoulder as well.

The AMS consists of about 10,000 students. Each contributes approximately $70 (non-academic fee) and so Mr. Whittaker, for one who is so good at algebra, your petty student council politics involves the administration of approximately $700,000 annually. Together with other assets the AMS becomes a multi-million dollar operation. This, Mr. Whittaker, is a long way above any high school and is on a par with a great many municipal governments.

I have also noticed that Mr. Whittaker is not interested in student politics and I hasten to point out, he should be! If the present period of financial constraints continues, the ultimate result may be a substantial reduction in his "algebra" students and a good many others as well. The AMS student government needs all the support it can get. It does not need unconstructive criticism and I emphasize unconstructive. Mr. Whittaker, if you don't like the direction or functioning of the AMS student organizations then damn well get in there and do something about it.

A note of grave import

Dear Editors,

If you'll pardon the expression, you're dead wrong about a couple of things you printed on Tuesday. You shouldn't even joke about me being a murderer. Unless the students are smarter today than they used to be (and not just drunker) somebody will read too fast, put two wrong ideas together, and in a few years it will be in Queen's history that I was a murderer. Could put a bad complexion on me.

Apart from that, I don't mind the publicity. Never did. It's true the haunting business isn't much fun, but it's better than nothing. It could be more interesting if more people in the Union had time for me. Most don't remember me and wouldn't recognize me if I bumped right into them. Principal Wallace tells me they don't recognize him, either. One guy I did get right in front of the other night called me an old black bum. That's worse than being drawn with bears' feet. It hurts.

And I'd appreciate it if you wouldn't say stupid things about me going around saying "boo". I've never done that. Not even that other paper said that.

Lyn Atwood is right. I'm really friendly and I didn't do it. If I could hurt anybody I'd let that John Bottomley have it, him with his stinky darkroom chemicals and his lousy bagpipes at three in the morning. The first time he woke me up and I went down to get a good look at him, I said to Captain Curtis, "There's a noteworthy lack of blood in this corpse." Yrs. very truly,

AMS slams Watts' report

by Sarah Yarnell

Debate was tedious.

Everyone had to have his say.

But as Thursday night's AMS Outer Council meeting nudged the wee hours of Friday morning, Queen's studen's student government enthusiastically approved the report of its committee on financial constraint.

The 57 page document slammed the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, and protested that students were being forced to bear too much of the burden of the University's financial squeeze.

Dana Johnson, chairman of the committee

"The cutbacks which the Principal's Committee has recommended would, we feel, damage considerably the opportunities which a student has to learn; we are offered fewer tutorials, fewer and larger labs (no better equipped than in the past), fewer hours to use the library, and fewer hours of teaching time. This we cannot, and will not, accept." This, committee member and GSS rep Dana Johnson called, "the essence of the AMS report."

The AMS Committee emphasized that, "significant change in the instructional process will be necessary, in order to maintain quality in times of constraint." They lambasted the faculty for resisting reform of the instructional process, and accused them of being "on the whole, unprepared to deal creatively with the limitations of constraint."

"We musst look at core courses, at greater interdisciplinary and multidisciplinry research at all levels, at greater use of independent study programmes, at the incidence of course overlap, at changes in the number of courses offered, at streaming, at the reduction of the number of classroom hours, and at an increase in student-directed learning. Central to any modifications will be a continuing evaluation of the instructional process, an evaluation which is sensitive to educational needs and critical of current practices."

The AMS committee recommended "that substantive action now be taken by individual members of the faculty, by departments and by Faculty Boards, based on an extensive and critical review of course and programme offerings, in order to improve the quality of the instructional process at Queen's."

The Principal's Committee implied that current budgetary allocations for equipment are sufficient, however the student committee denied this. "We must emphasize that returning equipment budgets to minimum levels must be a very high priority."

"These deficiencies in basic equipment are all the more galling when

Hard to swallow

Part of the AMS financial constraint report recommends that the Student Health Service should become "little more than a referral service," and should be funded fully through OHIP. Dr. H.W. Greenidge, Director of the Health Service, finds these suggestions hard to swallow.

"By referral service, I don't know what they mean", he said. "It doesn't make sense." Greenidge explained that in many cases already, students are referred to a specialist following examination by a doctor at the Health Service.

He stressed that it would be impossible for the out-patient clinic at KGH to handle the student load. The Health Service sees about 150 students daily, Greenidge estimated. "They would wait for days ..they just wouldn't be seen." Already, KGH is having problems handling the great number of Kingston residents lined up at the clinic each day.

Greenidge also explained that the Health Service is not funded fully through OHIP because OHIP will not pay for all asepcts of the Service, including the six bed infirmary located in Victoria Hall.

50% liquor tax to start

by John Bryant

On October 1 of this year the University Administration will begin collecting 50 per cent of the profits from student events at which liquor is served. This action results from the Administration's desire to recoup the $22,400 expenditure it allegedly made in order to comply with the most recent LLBO regulations.

The tax, coupled with significant reductions in the maximum capacity of campus watering holes, has given rise to fears that the quality of social life at Queen's will be seriously jeopardized. The new 'canteen' licence, which Queen's was granted when revised LLBO regulations went into effect in January of this year, authorizes the university to control and administer the sale of alcoholic beverages on campus, and to earmark profits to any group it sees fit. Apparently, the administration has determined that it is the fittest beneficiary.

R.J. Kennedy, Vice Principal (Administration) outlined University policy regarding the sale of liquor on campus in the September 23 issue of the Queen's Gazette. Kennedy's statement regarding the "50 per cent tax" is particularly vague and needs clarifying. The tax of "fifty percent of the surplus from student events" referes to the "bar" surplus, not the event surplus. This means that the administration skims off 50 percent of an event's surplus before its organizers have taken care of such expenses as constables, advertising, or hall rental.

This policy, along with reduced maximum capacities, will most certainly have an adverse affect on the many campus events which depend on "profits" in order to break even.

Already the Science Formal Committee has been forced to cancel a dance in Grant Hall, originally scheduled for Friday September 19. Citing the high cost of producing such an event, the three hundred person limitation for the hall, and the 50 percent tax on 'surplus', the Committee decided it just wouldn't pay to go ahead. The Committee made the decision in July 1975, before the Administration decided, after negotiations with the AMS, to delay imposition of the tax until October 1.

At Thursday's Outer Council meeting, student reps voted to formally protest the 50 percent profit-sharing scheme.

Two more resign

Two more Alma Mater Society commissioners have resigned, adding further to the executive's problems in recruiting new personnel. Bernie Koch, commissioner of the Queen's Student Agencies, and Brian Copeland, Education Commissioner, have handed in their resignations; both gave different reasons for their decisions.

Copeland said that he resigned yesterday for personal reasons. He found that he had to devote too much time to the AMS, and was resigning so that he could pay more attention to his studies. Copeland feared becoming addicted to AMS affairs.

While Copeland gave personal reasons for his resignation, Koch said that he felt uncomfortable working in the 'unhealthy environment' of the AMS. He claimed that he was not properly informed, and all the major decisions were being made by the executive. In particular, Koch felt that Vice-Presidents John Wilson and Ian Nordheimer had "turned people off" the AMS.

In reply to the latest resignations AMS President John Gray insisted that his executive was capable of continuing service. However, he felt that many changes would have to be made to the structure of the AMS, and that his executive was strong enough for the job. "My commitment to the AMS executive for a second year was not merely to babysit, but rather to bring the AMS and its structure in line with the 1970's".

Queen's houses conference

by Giles Gherson

Much of the suspicion, reputedly entertained by Queen's students, concerning the OFS, must surely be aseribed to a fear of the unknown. Delegates from the OFS member institutions, convening here this past weekend for the OFS fall conferenee, formulated post election policy in a commendably businesslike fashion.

As expeeted, some time was spent in review of the election and its ramifications. The OFS election strategy is geared to achieve an identifiably united student electorate, which can then be refleeted in a powerful OFS lobby. The result of the election did generate some optimism that Queen's Park would now be more reeeptive to OFS lobbying pressure. Nevertheless, deficiencies in the implementation of a co-ordinated election strategy, as well as the disenfranehisement of many students arising from enumeration difficulties, were eonsidered detrimental to the student cause. Steps were taken, in the form of three motions, to redress these problems.

Other issues dealt with were, for the most part, eoneerned with finance and housing; problems that are perennial but pressing. One feature of the finance policy was the integration of three traditional areas of concern; namely the unfairness and inadequacy of OSAP; the expected unpegging of tuition fees to the BIU by the government; and the reduction of government finanee to universities - into a general finance campaign strategy.

As expected, some time was spent in review of the election and its ramifications. The OFS eleetion strategy is geared to aehieve an identifiably united student electorate, which can then be refleeted in a powerful OFS lobby. The result of the eleetion did generate some optimism that Queen's Park would now be more reeeptive to OFS lobbying pressure. Nevertheless, deficiencies in the implementation of a co-ordinated eleetion strategy, as well as the disenfranehisement of many students arising from enumeration difficulties, were eonsidered detrimental to the student cause. Steps were taken, in the form of three motions, to redress these problems.

Other issues dealt with were, for the most part, eoneerned with finance and housing; problems that are perennial but pressing.

One feature of the finance policy was the integration of three traditional areas of coneern; namely the unfairness and inadequacy of OSAP; the expeeted unpegging of tuition fees to the BIU by the government; and the reduction of government finanee to universities - into a general finance eampaign strategy.

It was considered that this policy would be more successful than a diversified single issue eampaign by each institution.

Other finance motions inelude the lobbying of the legislature against the unpegging of tuition fees to the BIU, complemented by media campaigns.

One Queen's motion on the quality of education complemented the general finance strategy. It calls for the establishment "as a first priority; the issue of quality of education in Ontario's post secondary institutions". The Queen's delegates considered that in order to substantiate the OFS position and its opposition to cutbacks, research into the objectives of the post-secondary educationaly process must be undertaken. This was considered fundamental to any meaningful discussion of the threat to the quality of education in this province.

The housing policy motions gave vent to little debate. One of the most important themes in this area was the acceptance by the OFS of rent and control principles.

Associated with this was the resolution that rents should not be determined by a free market situation, but rather according to income. Another motion called for OFS involvement in tenant associations.

Ironically enough, the one particularly contentious issue was that of OPIRG. Due largely to miseoneeptions held by several of the delegates, on the role and status of PIRG groups on campus, this issue was blown quite out of proportion, especially considering OPIRG's early stage of development. This first motion sought to give student councils the right to control PIRG on eampus. It was staunchly upheld by York, aghast at the possibility of a non-student group acting beside eleeted students groups on campus.

Queen's, most ably represented throughout by Craig Browu and Peter Lane, took the middle line that such a group presented no threat to the student eouneil provided there was adequate consultation between the two bodies. However, an amendment to this effeet was defeated and the motion passed to the visible displeasure to the MacMaster and Waterloo delegates.

A second motion, designed to aehieve a happy relationship between OFS and OPIRG was carried. It should be noted that the conference was organized for the most part, by Lyn Whitaker, onetime Queen's Chief delegate to OFS.

Of special significance, because it provides for substantive action, was the motion dealing with the inadequacy of student aid. This in turn broaches upon the issue of "universal accessibility" to university, a concept so dear to the hearts of OFS delegates, and not least those from Queen's. In short, briefs on individual campus policy will culminate in a unified OFS position to be presented to a region I student aid hearing in Toronto in mid-January. This hearing will be supplemented by a "mass meeting" of OFS and provincial authorities, for additional impact.

students see members of faculty devoting some of the equipment budgets to the proeurement of expensive and underutilized equipment for graduate or personal research. Sueh purchases strike us as a terrible misuse of resources; some members of faculty seem blissfully unaware that a period of financial constraint exists."

The committee further urged "that a very high priority be given to increasing allocations for library acquisitions." They stressed that "we have already seen a steady deterioration in quality of the library system, and we feel tht now is an opportune time to reorganize, and upgrade these facilities."

The Principal's Committee had recommended curtailed service and reduced hours.

The cost and efficiency of the branch library system should be critically reviewed, according to the AMS report, "with the intention of providing a long-range plan to effect savings through integration of current collections."

Outer Council reaffirmed its policy on tuition by agreeing to "firmly oppose any effort on the part of the University or the Government to impose an increase in tuition fees as a means of relieving financial constraint." ASUS rep Chris Porter tried to delete this recommendation, insisting that "we must be willing to pay a little more of the cost. More money could come from the students." Outer Council angrily rejected Porter's motion.

The report boldly states that the current financial situations affords "the university the means to rid itself of incompetent staff." It recommends "that necessary staff terminations be effected before any other reductions and that all terminations be completed by 1978. The majority of these must not be term appointments."

"The quality of the institution will be enhanced, students' morale will be boosted, public confidence in the University's responsibility will be increased and, and faculty morale can be little harmed by having the worst staff removed from their midst."

The committee emphasized that "it is important that these terminations be made earlier rather than later and quickly rather than slowly."

Merit pay increases were recommended in the AMS report, which said, "we cannot stress too strongly our disconceration with a university which aspires to exeellenee, yet fails among its own staff to assess merit honestly, or reward adequately."

"In addition, teaching loads must be assessed so that the university can be assured that any disparities there do not impede its efforts to attain its academic goals."

In the area of Student Services, the AMS committee recommends equal or better University input; whereas the Principal's Committee called for a reduction in funding of services by the University. Adamant that Student Counselling is an essential student service, the AMS committee urged that the University undertake a review of the service "with an eye to improvement rather than elimination, and that it continue to fund this service."

The Bus-it recommendation of the Principal's Committee was "decidely unacceptable" to the student committee, who stressed that the "University must uphold its responsibility to integrate the West Campus and the Main Campus", and therefore should not withdraw its percentage contribution to Bus-it. "The University", the AMS report stated, "is expected to maintain, or better, this percentage even in the face of rising costs for the scheme. Any other move can only be considered an abandonment of its responsibility."

The AMS committee took a piercing look at the University administration, recommending a management consultant's review of the organization, as well as the initiation of an internal audit system.

Because "the Performing Arts Office contributes significantly to the unique characeter of Queen's and to its relations with the surrounding community; "the AMS committee suggested that "it is an important university responsibility to maintain these services, even in the most difficult times."

Student Housing also received attention from the AMS committee, who claimed "that different rental rates (for University houses) should be established for academic staff and for students." They urged that the University refrain from becoming a slum landlord and charging inflated rents.

Outer Council authorized spending of about $200 to print 500 copies of the report for distribution to faculty, adminstration and students.

More than just drunks

by Leslie Gaukrodger

It may appear to some Kingston residents that the only thing students at Queen's learn is how to party and drink at their wild and over-crowded parties.

The Open House planned for Queen's this November 14th and 15th is an attempt to dispel this misconception. Activities are being planned so that the community as well as the Queen's students will be better aware of the variety of facilities as well as the projects and activities carried on in the different faculties.

Although a similar event had been planned for the spring last year, it was never realized beeause of problems in finding adequate leadership.

It is hoped that the various departments will be presenting exhibits and displays that will be of interest to even a casual observer from off the street. Academic discussions and lectures are being discouraged. Instead they have plans for events like an explanation of eomputers involving math and including ringing bells and other easily understood simplifications. If funding is adequate, public participation will be encouraged at many of the departmental exhibits. Other displays will attempt to illustrate to the Kingston community, the benefits that they are receiving as a result of having the university in their town.

One of the main problems encountered by the organizers is finding interested students who are willing to help organize the various plans. As Ron Desrosiers; the chairman for Queen's Open House, stated, "the whole thing depends on response." both from the students and from the departmental faculties. Anyone interested in contributing can reach him at 544-0687 or through the Campus Activities Commission in the AMS office.

The other significant problem which they confront is funding for the project. Presently plans are to run specific events open to the public such as movies or plays, on the Friday and Saturday nights. The tours, displays and exhibits will be open from 10-5 on Saturday afternoon. It is hoped that the departments will be willing to pay the cost of maintaining the open buildings on Saturday.

If the problems which they presently face are overcome, the Open House should prove to be a valuable education for both the Kingston Community and Queen's students. It will perhaps help people to understand that the university is for everyone, not that everyone must necessarily be a student, but that everyone can and should benefit from its' presence in the community.

Senior Citizens at Queens

by Debbie Coyne

Senior citizens at Queen's University represent a relatively new and hopefully growing sector of the student population. A decision by the university administration this summer waived the payment of tuition fees for senior citizens wishing to pursue courses at Queen's. This move is highly commended by Alfred Gross, a senior citizen now attending a course in Sociology.

In an interview with the Journal, Mr. Gross said that his wife and children began urging him to register after the decision was announced. With mixed emotions he agreed to enroll and underwent the "slalom course" at the Arena on registration day.

Entering a lecture hall full of "youngsters" was like crossing a new threshold. After several lectures, though, Mr. Gross feels as if he is just another Queen's undergraduate. The lectures are "thought-provoking and pleasant" and he no longer feels separated from the rest of the students.

Mr. Gross is grateful to Queen's for providing him with the opportunity to undertake this endeavor. Furthermore he hopes that in future the number of senior citizens at the university will increase as people begin to deliberately fit such a project into their retirement plans.

Mrs. Mildred Hunter, a former real-estate broker, is a student of Canadian politics and hopes to eventually work towards a degree. She is enthusiastic about her studies and, despite health problems, has found it fairly easy to adjust to the university atmosphere. Too many people tend to stagnate after retirement and Mrs. Hunter thinks that Queen's is now providing an ideal opportunity for senior citizens to move and grow again.

A student of the Spanish Department, Mrs. Helen Travers, feels very privileged to be able to attend the university. She admits, though, that forty-seven years have passed since her high school days and she is finding it difficult to acquire good study habits. However, Mrs. Travers enjoys her classes and is finding the experience very worthwhile.

The opening of university facilities to senior citizens is a progressive step towards a well-rounded student body. It is to be hoped that senior citizens will take increasing advantage of this opportunity and that they will find it a useful and challenging experience.

Foundations of the AMS

by J. Gray

Since its earliest days Queen's University has been a pioneer in many new fields. It has been recognized as the first university in Canada to admit women students to its classes and was the first to establish a summer school program. Queen's has also led the way in granting its student body the right of self-government.

The Alma Mater Society was formed back in 1858, and was believed to be a society where students could enjoy a liberal and democratic form of autonomy. Its initial purpose was to have control over all legitimate student enterprises of a non-academic nature, although much of this responsibility was to be delegated to the faculty organizations. A committee of graduates resident in Kingston drew up the draft of the original Constitution establishing its prime objectives which were to promote the general interest of the University by preserving the attachment of the alumni to the university, also to serve as a medium of communication between the students and the governing bodies and to promote and cultivate a literary and scientific taste among students.

The AMS in past years, as it does today, had general elections. These elections took place at an open meeting on the first Friday in December. Only those who attended could vote, and membership fees of twenty-five cents had to be paid beforehand. In 1883 open voting was abolished and the ballot was substituted. The state of the polls was announced hourly, and intense excitement gripped the students who turned out to record the progress of their favourites.

The candidates carried on more vigorous election campaigns than are prevalent today. Signs were posted, cards were distributed, and party whips dashed recklessly about the town in handsome cabs rounding up prospective voters. Canvassing was done even at the polls and sometimes in the classroom, the professors speaking on behalf of one or another of the candidates, but this was considered unethical and was finally banned.

After the results were announced at the end of election day it was customary for the students to parade through the city streets. Quite often considerable property damage was done and consequently feeling between town and gown was not always so cordial as it might have been. On one occasion the students were grieved because they had given assurance to the Mayor and Chief of Police that they would not damage property in the downtoown section and had been told they would be trusted, only to discover the entrance to the downtown parlour was guarded by policemen. When students attempted to rush the door they were repulsed by the local constabulary. Eggs were thrown about freely and the net result was that six students spent the weekend in the city gaol.

Meetings of the Society were held every Saturday night just after dinner, and as they were conducted along strictly parliamentary lines, the gathering served as a great stamping ground for budding orators. In fact, during the early years the Society was little more than a debating club. Janitor John Cormack often moved adjournment by turning off the gas lights and consequently discussions were sometimes finished in the moonlight.

When women students first took an interest in student politics at Queen's it became a momentous struggle between gallantry and a desire to keep the Alma Mater Society purely masculine. The problem was finally solved by permitting the ladies to pay their membership fees and vote, but otherwise take no part in student affairs. Not until the Levana Society first contested office in 1916 and was successful in having both its candidates elected, did women gain any footing.

Jobs created for grads

TORONTO (CUP)--Ontario Premier William Davis announced in week three of his re-election campaign that he intends to create one thousand new civil-service jobs for recent graduates of post-secondary institutions.

The new program, called the "Ontario Career Action Program", is an extension of the government's Experience '75 summer employment program, a make-work project for 7500 post-secondary students.

Davis' action comes on the heels of a recent announcement by Statistics Canada indicating that 116 thousand of Canada's 350 thousand unemployed youths under the age of 24 years are in Ontario.

The Premier announced the new program at a meeting of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce, whom he urged to follow the governments example and hire graduates.

"More and more youths are entering the labour market everyday" he told the business leaders. "It is my view that we must give this problem urgent and special attention."

In a later interview Davis said the program was a short-term measure only, designed to provide jobs for graduates during the current economic down-turn.

"I mean, it's got to be a short term thing, we're all in trouble", he explained.

Initial response to the announcement by Paul Johnston, a researcher with the Ontario Federation of Students, was skeptical.

"In an election campaign, all that glitters is not always gold", he said, indicating that "despite the premier's assertion, unemployment among graduates does not appear to be a short-term thing".

Although he welcomed the fact that the government has recognized an employment problem among youths, the program offered does little to correct the situation, he said. Johnston cited the fact that 1000 new jobs represents less than 85 per cent of the jobs needed to provide full employment.

Henninger.
A different tasting beer.

Meister Pils.
Different again.

Henninger tastes different from Canadian beers because it's made from different ingredients and in a different way. Only two row barley is used. Yeast is especially flown in from Frankfurt. It's doubly fermented. It is allowed to carbonate naturally. It tastes like a German beer because it is.
Henninger. Das Schmeckt.

Meister Pils is a true light tasting German pilsener brewed from the same ingredients and in the same way as it is in Henninger's Frankfurt brewery. Now you can enjoy the light distinctive taste that has made pilsener the most celebrated of all the world's beers.

Both Henninger and Meister Pils are made in Henninger's own independent brewery and are available at your brewers retail outlet for just a few cents more than regular beer.

DSC's have a purpose to fulfill

by Cindi Hall

The structure of the Departmental Student Council is very easy to outline. Diagramatically, from the base level upwards: each class in every department in the Faculty of Arts and Science elects a student representative. The student representatives for each departmenty collectiverly form a Departmental Student Council (DSC). A chairperson, elected in March of the previous year, heads the council. The DSC of each department is responsible to the Faculty Board of the Faculty of Arts and Science. The DSC of each department elects, from its ranks a representative to the Faculty Board. In some cases, the DSC Chairperson may also serve as the Faculty Board Representative.

The DSC's work with the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society (ASUS) through 3 Divisional Councillors, one each for the group of departments in Natural Sciences, Social Sciences; and Humanities. The responsibilities of the Divisional Councillors are important the varied. Primarily, they serve as a liaison between ASUS and the Department Student Coiuncils, transmitting information and ideas from ASUS to DSC's and back again. In addition the 3 Divisional Councillors serve as voting members of the ASUS executive. Above all, the Divisional Councillors must act as resource people: It is their responsibility to initiate ideas regarding all aspects of the DSC structure and function. This responsibility will be particularly crucial this year.

Why? Because the DSC structure has not worked well in the past few years. There have been changes made in the past few months, and more changes will be made in the near future. One major renovation was accomplished last April, when ASUS absolved itself of a direct responsibility for production of a campus-wide course evaluation guide. In absolute terms, this means that ASUS will no longer be collecting information regarding analyses of courses from each department in Arts and Science. Instead, the individual departments will be responsible for initiating the course evaluation process and producing a course evaluation booklet, if they wish., This places almost total responsibility for the production of such a guide on the individual DSC's.

Which is not to say that ASUS has abandoned the course evaluation process! ASUS has budgeted $6000 for the use of DSC's towards production of any guides This money may also be used for other purposes -- speakers, seminars, course counselling, etc. There is another important aspect of course evaluation beyond merely the guide, however -- the basic concept of academic quality. As the Principal's Report on Financial Constraints plainly showed, the result of financial cutbacks throughout the university may be a deterioration of academic quality. Have any of you noticed the signposts yet? Larger classes this year? The biology teacher who they couldn't afford to keep? Shorter library hours, fewer library acquisitions?

What can ASUS and the OSC do? First of all, they can take a long, hard look at academic quality. The task of determining meritorious teaching within the university will become very important this year if it is the way to determine which teachers get raises (with so little money to spread around) and it will be crucial if some courses or even professors are to be dropped. We have to look for a way to improve efficiency and decrease waste while maintaining and hopefully improving teaching and learning quality.

What can you do? Get involved in your DSC's. Become a DSC representative in one of your classes. Then find out what the structure of power is within your department -- what committees make decisions on curriculum, tenure, promotion, etc and make sure that students have representation on them. In summary, work with the DSC's, the Faculty Board, and ASUS.

Financial Constraints

Waiting for the medicine

by T. Collins

Put yourself in this position.

You work for a well staffed, competitive company whose costs exceed revenue. The Company can't raise its prices and you are asked to work with a group of senior colleagues to discover ways of saving money.

Looking at the situation carefully, you find that approximately eight tenths of your money goes towards paying salaries. The remaining twenty per cent is spent on all other costs.

A closer examination reveals that a significant number of departments in your firm have staff whose expertise overlaps. Why do we have so many people with marginally different points of concentration, you ask. Because some customers demand a very specialized product. What would happen if we didn't provide so many specialties? Perhaps some customers would go elsewhere. Can't have that.

However, you contend, we haven't really exploited the market for our standard model. Also, we could ask some seasoned employees who are familiar with more than one aspect of production to do work in other departments. Maybe we could collude with our competitors to divide the specialty market. We'd all decrease costs through economies of scale! We could reduce our staff and....

NO! say your colleagues. We must work towards keeping everyone employed. We can reduce costs this year by selling the coffee machine and telling the boys on the 11th floor not to use so many paper clips.

But what happens next year, you ask.....

Good question.

The Queen's University Senate will shortly consider a document from the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraints that advocates the paper clip approach. The report lacks the stuff required to meet the long range monetary problems that face Queen's.

Perhaps there is excess fat that could be trimmed. Perhaps we could reduce costs this year by trimming it. If the Senate and the Board of Trustees approve the document it would give Queen's a temporary financial breather.

Nevertheless, cutbacks are with us, like it or not. Students can try to petition the government to change its mind but if this is as unsuccessful as it has been in the past, what is the next step? Once we have trimmed the non salary costs to the bone, the University will have to cut down on the number of people on the payroll. Specialists seem to be the logical place to start.

University students have always demanded and received very good staff with expertise in very specific areas. Indeed, the quality of education would diminish if these specialists were released and the remaining core staff spread out over more students.

If we didn't cutback on salaries the alternative seems to be centralizing the common specialists and creating a University of Ontario with various campuses acting as specialization centres (e.g. Queen's - the Geology capital of the province). Although still in its infancy, the concept of a University of Ontario has appeared in statements from the Minister of Colleges and Universities as recently as this spring. As a branch of this, Queen's stands to lose whatever autonomy from the government that she now values greatly. The same system that exists in some U.S. states could well be implemented here in this province.

The AMS has prepared and approved its own Financial Constraints report that has made the recommendation to the Senate that the number of people on the payroll of Queen's be reduced and a major administrative reorganization be undertaken. Specifying who and when is another problem yet to be approached

Senate and the students

by Charles Cuffari

Virtually all material which passes before Senate either comes directly from a Senate Committee or is referred to one. Committees form the backbone of the Senate structure, formulating policy concerning many areas of university operations. Two or three students sit on nearly all Senate Committees, working in conjunction with elected and ex-officio faculty members. As users of university services, student representation is imperative, without it certain policy measures can go unchallenged. Of the Senate committees not open to student nominations, a couple are in need of extremely vocal representation. Problems exist in certain areas of this University which can be remedied with adequate student input.

The library is a case in point. Student members of the Senate Library committee must first face the internal problems of this committee; before worrying about the problems which the library is encountering. The practice of the library committee to invite heads of library departments to meetings automatically puts one on a two to one basis with the library staff. Library decisions are usually defended by several heads of departments. From what I've heard about these meetings; some very vocal discussions (shouting matches) are often pursued. Strong student representation on this committee is needed.

Many problems exist within the library, as any user can testify. What about the new hours? The reserve room is inadequate for many large classes, circulation and the reshelving of books is usually one confusing mess, and what about the periodicals section? The main problems, however, which face the library will be felt in the future. It is predicted that by 1980, there will no longer be stack space. A decision concerning this must be made soon or the problem will be upon us. Should a storage depot for uncirculated books be built by Queen's, or will the Ontario government ever build one? Are Branch Libraries possible? Financial constraints have limited the numbers of periodicals and books which the library can acquire, but financial constraints are not its only problem. The library must look to internal problems. Student users are the only ones who will suffer if immediate solutions to many problems are not found. There are two positions open on this committee. Anyone interested?

The Senate Student Affairs Committee deals with virtually every aspect of University life which affects students. Its terms of reference include the phrase "To recommend to the Senate Policies on matters affecting the interest and well being of students." This is therefore an extremely active committee possessing a wide mandate. There is one position open on it.

The newly formed Senate Bookstore committee and the Senate committee on Student Health services both have four positions open to students. Both committees form a means through which user input can affect policy. The Senate Bookstore committee reports to Senate on the campus bookstore as well as bringing user views before QUESST and the management of the Bookstore. The Committee on Student Health services recommends to Senate 'general policies for the operation and development of the Student Health Service.' It also reviews budget proposals with respect to the Students Health service.

Nomination forms for Senate Committees can be found in last weeks issue of the Gazette or at the Senate Officer in Richardson Hall. They are due this Friday. Any questions concerning Senate Committees can be answered at the Senate Office. There are also positions open on the following committees: Appointment, Promotion, Tenure and Leave; Budget Review; Fine Arts and Public Lectures; Scholarships and Student Air; the Computing Committee; and the University Council on Athletics.

No, we are not starting a club for vampires, this is the first of this year's Blood Donor Clinics to be held on October 7th, 8th, and 9th. In the past, Queen's has contributed 1,000 whole pints at each of the fall and winter clinics, which combined, represented 25 percent of Kingston's annual blood supply. This year we hope to break the 1,000 pints mark. In actual biological facts and figures your blood unit, approximately one pint is less than 9 percent of your 12-13 pint supply. Your blood unit could be used by up to five other people of your blood type.

The clinic will be held in Victoria Hall next week on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. The actual donation only takes one-half hour of your time and refreshments will be erved. If you'd like to help the clinic, volunteers are needed to assist the nurses and serve refreshments. A timetable will be posted at the Victoria Hall Desk. The hours of the clinic will be 11:00-2:00, 5:00-8:00, slotted by the one-half hour. If you are interested, sign the appropriate slot. Any further questions, contact Paula Luck 544-5972.

Volunteer labor not enough

Dear Editors,
We applaud the efforts of the Second AMS Committee on Financial Constraint and we feel that the Committee's Report is one of the most comprehensive documents to have been brought before the AMS Outer Council in recent times.

However, with respect to the Report's recommendations regarding Library services, we take strong exception to the Committee's statement that "we cannot take seriously the proposition that desk services might be handled by volunteer labour."

It would appear that the Commitee's research in this area was considerably less than thorough, since, just such a proposal was in fact successfully implemented by the Law Students' Society in April of last term during the final examination period. At that time the L.S.S. Executive was advised that it was financially impossible to extend Law Library hours past 11pm during exams as had been done in the past.

After consultation with the Dean of Law and Law Library officials, a system was implemented on the iniative of the L.S.S. Executive whereby members of the Executive would each serve on the desk of the Law Library in order to maintain basic services during the extended hours from 11pm to 1am.

We feel that it is the duty of Outer Council to consider seriously the possibilities of extending such a scheme to the other Campus libraries, particularly the numerous small branch libraries, most of which are considerably smaller than the Law Library.

We are not suggesting that the Administration be allowed to renege on its obvious duty to maintain adequate library services. Perhaps, however, students themselves should consider contributing to financial constraint by volunteering their services in cases of a legitimate need. Surely all of us at Queen's - administrators, faculty, and students - ought to be working toward increased financial constraint with a more co-operative attitude.

Who will be the next to resign?

Dear Editors,
Allow me to quote from Edna St. Vincent Millay. She was talking about the dying. If they were my words, I'd be talking about today's "involved student":

Down, down, down into the darkness of the grave,
Gently they go, the beautiful, the tender, the kind;
Quietly they go, the intelligent, the witty, the brave.
I know. But I do not approve. And I am not resigned.

Several people have now resigned from top positions in the AMS. The numbers seem to grow with each Outer Council meeting. I know. But I do not approve.

The reasons for resignation have been cited as: a) cliques; b) personality conflicts; c) too many hot-heads; (pick one, pick 'em all - they're the same old cliches).

Who's next to resign? John Gray must be ready to throw in the towel, but fortunately he knows what would happen to the AMS (which includes everyone of us, babe) if he should do so; several other resignations would follow his and the whole mess would collapse on the shoulders of the very few.

As each person resigns, the pressure increases considerably on those left, as positions are shifted, as necessary duties are picked up by those who have too much to do already, and as the bickering over the cause of resignation continues. Nevertheless, it is my contention that the AMS will have to face at least a couple of more resignations before any real problems are to be solved.

I challenge all persons sitting on Outer Council to calmly detach themselves from all the commotion, and ask themselves if they are the ones who are causing all the conflict. If it is possible that the best interests of the student body at Queen's University would be served by another resignation, go and talk to the AMS Executive first. But do something about it. We can't afford to lose any more people who are interested enough in their fellow students that they give of themselves to the extent most "involved students" do. Why is everybody quitting? Perhaps it's just a pain in the ass to have to listen to someone who might be best described as a "typical midsixties radical". The world's grown up a little bit since then. It's too bad some students haven't.

I've lost count of the number of things I've been involved in, the number of positions I've held over the past four years. I've lost contact of the number of persons who've ridiculed me for my involvement, the number of moronic radicals I've had to put up with, the amount of bad-mouthing some students seem to thrive on. I've come into contact with college and university students from all over North America, and know this: I'm pretty proud to be able to say that I'm a student. But know this as well: although I have never resigned from any position, and I do not approve of resignations, especially when they are over something as trivial as personality conflicts, I honestly can't blame those who have resigned at Queen's lately - there's just been too much crap flying through the air to try and continue fielding it any more.

Too many students refuse to realize how lucky they are to be here at all. Most students (thank heaven not all) don't know their ass from a hole in the ground when it comes to being involved with their campus and community. Let's not lose those few "involved students" left. If you are in a position, doing a job well, and not merely voicing your own haughty opinions, then stick it out. If the only reason you hold your position is to air your own "social views", and to be a shit-disturber, then get out. Now.

They go quietly no longer. We simply can't afford it.

Sincerely yours,
Harry S. Binks

Ooh-cha-cha through the '20's

During the Roaring Twenties there were 32,000 taverns or speakeasies operating in New York City alone. If you had the scratch and the connection, you could get just about anything you wanted. H. L. Mencken fumed in the American Mercury, "Why raid a place that sells good liquor and isn't poisoning anybody?" In most cases, however, raw alcohol infused with juniper drops, oil of bourbon or oil of rye was passed off as gin, bourbon or rye whiskey. Depending on the blender's fancy, the alki might contain even "washed" embalming fluid! Not exactly sippin' whiskey! Cocktails provided a viable alternative. It was during the Twenties that the cocktail party was spawned, with the addition of sugar, lemon, syrups, juices, egg, cream, bitters, etc. helping to mask or modify the rank character of bootleg booze. The new style of drinking also reflected the mercurial, try-anything-once spirit of the times. This spirit is also the call of a Prohibition OOH—CHA—CHA in the Arena on Friday night. Come join Tipplin' Tom, Cat-Eye Harry, and Blind Leroy Garnett and 2000 jitterbug maniacs dancing to the Noel Talarico Orchestra and "Let's put the lights out" and "I wish I could shimmy like my sister Kate."

Cocktails of the Twenties tended to be sweetish—and fussy witness the alexander, snowball and pousse-cafe. The latter, a rainbow affair of five or six liqueurs floating in horizontal bands, was the bane of the Prohibition barman. After labouriously pouring the spirits so they would stand in discrete layers, it was infuriating to see some yokel toss the thing off in one swallow, instead of sipping it layer by layer! So don your Gatsby threads, shake up a few Prohibition-era drinks, charleston the night away at OOH—CHA—CHA, join the parade to the game, and dance to the jazz of the Gaslight Club at the semi. And as the sports of those days might say: "Here's looking up your address!"

Music Hall galls

by Donald Rayko

This year's Domino production of Music Hall is one of the worst shows I have ever seen

The director and company (I say "director and company" because there were no programmes--a blessing for them: let them enjoy the shelter of whatever anonymity that may grant) pretended to offer two principal forms of "entertainment": singing and skitting.

Although the choice of music was poor, the singing I can forgive: listless voices and artifical mannerisms are no more than incompetence. Amateur is amateur, after all.

But the skits, the would-be humour! What was not a sexist or national slur, or a bathroom joke, was simply puerile. The mocking of stutters, for instance, is not hilarious, it is cruel. The "humour" was tired and foreign. Merely inserting local place names does not revitalize the old gags that thoughtful people never laughed at. It was WASP humour at its worst--sexually-repressed, inconsiderate, narrow-minded and smug

All in all, a disgusting presentation.

Where were you in '62 ?

by Tom MacGregor

Where were you in '62?" I was probably playing hide-'n'-seek and hoping my father would take me to the latest Audie Murphy flick But however irrelevant '62 is to you, you are bound to find good entertainment and a feeling of recognition of your high school years in American Graffiti (1973) this Thursday at Dunning Hall Auditorium.

This is a simple, very Quixotic film with irresistable charm. Very much a film of moments instead of a whole, we see in the course of an evening a "Toad" become a "Tyger", a Chinese firedrill or two, sit in awe of the Lone Ranger presence of the town's clean-cut greaser, witness Richard Dreyfuss's daring initiation into "the other side of town" and chase a mysterious smile all evening to the music and antics of Wolfman Jack. The comedy is well balanced with pathos such as Milner's trip down the auto hall of fame--a junkyard and the traditional dance of the top boy and girl in the midst of an argument. The nostalgia is well kept in its limits by an undercurrent of remorse. It leaves you as you left high school--with some good memories but a basic happiness to be rid of it all.

Although Milner claims there hasn't been any decent music since Buddy Holly died, the soundtrack deserves a special credit All the greats from that era are played with a brilliant subtlety to shade or parady each scene. We also meet the legendary Wolfman Jack, who operated the pirate station that called the beat to the early '60's.

A fine crop of young actors were enlisted including Richard Dreyfuss who went on to become Duddy Kravitz, Paul Le Mont and even-whiny Ronny Howard is quite good.

On the whole I find this film very hard to review since one's response must stem from identifying with this scene. Give these guys long hair and a new set of slang and it fits my high school crowd to a T. No matter what your personal response to American Graffiti, the laughs are guaranteed. Shows start at 7:30pm and 9:00pm.

North by Northwest

by Sandra Bernstein

North by Northwest, tonight's feature in the Contemporary Cinema series, is one of Hitchcock's most literary and at the same time most entertaining films

Cary Grant plays the hero, a debonair executive whose wives all left him because he led too dull a lift. His problems begin when he is mistaken for a secret agent, and becomes involved in espionage because he is unable to convince anyone of the error. We follow his efforts from his viewpoint for the first half of the film, and share his growing existential panic in a world where people are not who they seem to be, people who are believed to exist have never existed, and Grant himself is gradually becoming the person others falsely believed him to be

The Hitchcock heroine this time is Eva Marie Saint, who encounters Grant on a train in a fantasy-like affair straight from Erica Jong.

Unfortunately, the more we become aware of the true nature of Grant's situation, the more the film loses its Kafka-esque and absurdist interest, adopting instead the routine aspect of a spy thriller.

Hitchcock swipes elements of romance and other literary conventions with almost self-conscious mirth, to lend this spy plot grandeur by association.

The male testing myths, for instance, are recalled as Grant rescues the damsel from her tower, and saves her from dropping off a cliff by lending a hand, using the gesture God does in Michaelangelo's Creation.

Similarly, he is betrayed with a kiss, consults a professor who acts as his good angel in this Zoroastrian battle between good and evil, is forced into an almost Western showdown, and has to prevent the bad gang from escaping with their false-bottomed household gods.

The most interesting aspects of the film, however, remain its touches of absurdity (there is no reason, for example, who the mistake in identity should have occurred) and its exploration of the theme of seeming; significantly, the hero was in advertisings, the most illusory art.

The film itself collaborates this concern, in that it includes several almost surreal compositions of buildings the hero must climb, and employs not-quite convincing matte shots of a chase across the faces of Mt. Rushmore. Even the film images, then, may not be what they seem.

Some of the more famous sequences in the film, as the one in which Grant is buzzed by a crop-duster in a barren field, may be further construed as representations of his own anxieties. We also have the gratuitous but typically Hitchcockian ambiguity in that one woman on the "other side" strongly resembles the hero's mother.

At any rate, all these suggestive elements are united by the director with such grace and style that the result is quite charming. The film can be thoroughly enjoyed by viewers who ignore all the grander implications in it, but who respond to the Hitchcock spell. Catch it at 9:00 tonight in Ellis Hall Auditorium. Admission is $150.

Drama Dep't Presents:

Comedy

The play is Winners, a one-act comedy by the Irish playwright Brian Friel. The scene is Ballymore, County Tyrone, Northern Ireland. The time: June, 1966. Two students--Mag, age 17 and Joe, age 17½--deeply in love, engaged to be married in three weeks, climb the hill overlooking their town, to spend the day studying for their final exams the following week. The weather is beautiful, the end of school is near, and Joe and Mag are filled with the promise of their lives together. As the day wears on, as the couple study or try to, as they express their ideas about virtually everything and their feelings about each other, they take us along with them through a range of emotions sufficient to fill a lifetime.

At times hilarious, at times deeply touching, Winners, the work of one of Ireland's finest playwrights, has moved audiences wherever it has played. The Queen's Drama Department will present Winners Thursday through Saturday, 2 through 4 October, at 8:30 p.m. in Convocation Hall The production is directed by Maurice Breslow, and designed by Bernard Burkom. It features Lorraine Forbes as Mag, Leonard Judge as Joe, and Richard Trousdell and Frances MacArthur as the two narrators who set the scene, advance the story and bring it to its conclusion.

Admission is free and tickets are available at the door A Silver Collection will be taken. For further information phone the Drama Department at 546-6291

Odds & Ends

Encouraging

by Donald Rayko

The greatest problem with Kingston theatre is cowardice (not necessarily Noel, but sometimes that too). Cultural branch plant pap often seems to be all we ever get from local companies. It is as if they believed that the world begins with Broadway and the West End, and ends with Samuel French.

As a people, can we not say something about our experiences from time to time? I hope so; I desperately hope so.

Moribund as Kingston theatre appears to be, Theatre 5's revue, Canadian Odds and American Ends, at the Brewery Lane Theatre, 370 King St. W., offers evidence of an encouraging pulse of local life. While it is true that some of their material is clearly derivative, they have nonetheless had the guts to skirt the illusory security of tried and (only apparently) true chestnuts, and to use their own ideas and visions. Let us pray that such courage is contagious

Like all human endeavours, Canadian Odds and American Ends has its strengths and weaknesses. The two greatest weaknesses are music and mime. The players' voices are uncertain and frequently off-key in musical numbers. Until they have had more rehearsal or training or both, they might do well to temper their choral proclivities. Their final bit, "The Mariposa Man", was a case in point. Purporting to be a Musical Life of Stephen Leacock, it did little but tell that he lived and-or taught in Toronto, Uxbridge, Orillia and Montreal. Ill-sung, it was shallow and pointless and should be dropped from the programme.

Thomas Handy's incidental guitar music accents action well, but his own songs were unfortunately weak--certainly no comparison to the performance he gave at Grant Hall last year

As for Theatre 5's use of mime, it was good and bad. They have obviously worked on facial expressions -- Diane Gordon's were especially fine -- but they have no sense of the solidity of invisible objects. In mime, the unseen objects must maintain stable dimensions and exert obvious forces. They do not yet do so for Theatre 5

The rest of the show consisted of adequate to brilliant comic blackouts and sketches; best among which was "Rebecca of Donnybrook Farm", a remake of American prizefighter movies of three or four decades ago -- but with a difference: the heavy-tongued pub was played by Theresa Scars and her simpering sweetie by John Taylor This clever reversal wittily throws into high relief the inanities of the genre and the tragic absurdity of the sexist stereotype that such films assumed and promulgated Artistic director, Valerie Robertson and her company have an obvious vitality They appear to be willing to experiment and willing to learn. And with a revue they have a flexible format: songs and skits can be added, subtracted, reordered and rewritten from night to night. Odds and Ends is fun now and bound to get funnier.

When local talent is genuinely local and genuinely talented, as Theatre 5 is, it deserves the support of the community. Go and see the show. They have verve and pluck; other groups could stand to learn from their example.

Who knows? Kingston audiences may even get to regularly see the work of Kingston playwrights someday. Who knows!

Spanish are coming

Public acceptance and interest in Spanish traditional dances is continuing to grow according to Jose Molina whose Company will appear Thursday, October 2 at 8:30 p.m. at the Grand Theatre.

"I have been appearing in North America now for 17 years, during that time, interest has grown tremendously, and audiences have become very discriminating. But there is still much to be done. Apparently, there is some emotional need which is answered by the Spanish dance. Consider that now, not only have Americans in general and Spanish-Americans in particular taken the traditional dancing to their hearts, but it is also being widely accepted in Japan. That country has produced some remarkable "Spanish" dancers and guitarists."

Much of the appeal is involved with the colour and action on stage. And the dancers themselves are slim, handsome, agile exponents or romantic ideas brought to life on-stage.

But there is more than just colour, emotion and spontaneity involved.

Molina isn't big and probably wouldn't impress most people as an "athletic" type, but his never-ceasing activity and the regiment of dancing unquestionably speaks more of his physical condition and training than it does of many people who might be considered "athletic".

"Our company incorporates the three main divisions of Spanish dance in repertoire," he said. "The classical dance is balletic in its nature. It is the court dance - the dances of the palaces.

"We also do the traditional folk dances, and there are about 50 of those. They are also balletic in their form, but they developed in the fields, where, as in the palaces with the classic dance, there was a great deal of space in which to move.

"Third, there is the Flamenco. Flamenco developed in the caves of the gypsy in the south. There wasn't so much space Around the fire, the dancers moved inside a circle of their people, while the guitarist played, the brothers, sisters and cousins clapped and the singers sang of the emotions - love, a memorable moment, a lucky thing that happened, a tragic happening, and so forth.

"Audiences are learning more of all of this and demand more from us, and that is good".

BGGGGGGG

A M.S. Concerts Committee are tickled pink and are as proud as punch to be able to say publicly that the Bee Gees, a rather well-known musical group will be appearing in Kingston, tonight, at the Kingston Memorial Arena at 8:00 p.m.

Those wishing to attend are asked to present themselves at the above mentioned Kingston Memorial Arena, located at the corner of York and Frontenac(or York and Alfred, or York and Albert, or York and Nelson) with the required $6.00 to gain admittance. Soccer 1st in league

by Gary Barnes

In the last week the Queen's Golden Gaels soccer team chalked up two more victories to move into first place in the OUAA soccer league. This is somewhat misleading, for Queen's first three opponents are most likely the three weakest teams in the league. Brock, RMC and Trent are not normally known for turning out strong soccer teams, and all three have lived up to expectations again this year. Small student enrolments are generally the reason why the above schools fail to be competitive.

Last Wednesday the Gaels travelled over to RMC to take on the Redmen in a long standing rivalry game. Due to a slight shortage of qualified soccer referees in the Kingston area, the scheduled league game was almost postponed. The game did get off, but apparently the head official was unaware he was refereeing a league game until ten minutes into the match. The RMC field is in excellent condition but unfortunately the play of the Redmen does not equal the quality of their field. Queen's got off to a shaky start but still managed to acquire a 2-0 lead on first half goals by Bill Ersil and Gary Harvey.

In the second half the play became a little chippy as RMC became frustrated in their own efforts to score and decided to revert to cheap fouls. Queen's came on strong, with Horst Rabaneick scoring on a direct free kick and Mark Bennet netting two goals.

The final score was 5-0 for Queen's with goalie Dave McIntyre registering his first shut out for the Gaels this year.

Last Saturday Trent University opened their schedule by suffering a 3-1 loss at the hands of the Gaels. The game was played at the West campus field which was in relatively good condition. Queen's opened the scoring at the five minute mark on a penalty shot by Ron Heidebrecht. Brock came right back to score, largely due to a mix-up in the Queen's defence. Bill Ersil put Queen's up 2-1 as he beat the Brock goal keeper with a good accurate shot. Late in the second half Chris Clarke scored a header, on a long throw-in by Mark Bennet. Chris has now reached his quota for the year and any more goals will certainly be a bonus for the team. In the second half the Queen's attack stagnated and failed to score: something that hopefully will not occur too often. So the final score was 3-1.

This weekend the Gaels travel to play York on Saturday and Laurentian on Sunday. This will be a tough road trip for the team, which may dictate the outcome of this years season.

Rugby Gaels on the ball

by Jim Fergusson

Last weekend, the Queen's Rugby Club met Guelph University in Intercollegiate play on both the first and second team levels. The games were played on a slightly greasy West Campus field. The wind and other aspects of the weather didn't have significant effects upon the hard and fast play.

Last year, it was the Guelph firsts who took the championship away from Queen's in the final game. Therefore, the Queen's firsts were out to make a point this time around. Guelph was a team which had to be beaten if this year was going to turn out to be a success. The final outcome showed a 7 to 6 win for Queen's but the only thing this score proved was that both teams were capable of meeting a very physical club and battling down to the last whistle.

All of the first team members performed beyond expectations in the face of challenging opponents. Queen's tended to control the ball to a greater extent in the first part of the game. This finally payed off when Bill Payne blanked a Guelph kick and Richard Thomas was there to kick the ball up and take it over for a try. It turned out to be the only try of the game which testifies to the tight play. In the second half Queen's allowed several penalties and S. Carson was able to capitalize on two of them which accounts for Guelphs 6 points. John Gibson, who as fullback displayed remarkable poise throughout the game, put a penalty kick through the posts for the last of Queen's points. In the last minutes of the game, Guelph threatened but the Queen's players would not let them score. The firsts demonstrated last weekend that they are capable of beating the best in the league.

The Queen's seconds also had a successful game against the Guelph seconds. In the first minutes of the game, the Queen's forwards, led by the captain, Don McLean, roared over the Guelph forwards three times in succession. In doing this, they were able to set up the backs to take the ball over for an easy try. In the second half, Paul Brooks made a brilliant play to set up another Queen's try. The Queen's team did not allow Guelph team to score a try. This is due to the fact that the Queen's forwards dominated the loose play and provided a lot of ball for the backs to work with. Chris Bovaird, Bob Reynolds and other forwards demonstrated their skill in breaking away and making large gains. The final score of the game was 11 to 6 for Queen's. It looks as if the seconds are headed on another winning year.

Leggs

by C. Knox

... our legs are your legs, they hug you, they hold you, they never let you go...

Judging from the success of last Monday night's practice, the legs swimming for Queen's synchro team will be the centre of attention on deck and in the water this year. Fifteen energetic Queen's persons will be chosen from a group of twenty, after a two week survey of their proficiency in waltzing, canoeing, propelling and sculling as well as maintaining the many basic body positions (in water). Bodily control requires great skill, and all swimmers must develop a keen sense of kinesthetic awareness in order to make the team. A full team consists of twelve swimmers so some are subs.

First priority on practicing hours was given to the team to inspire hard work, good attendance, and clear thinking. Spectators are welcome at all practices which are, Monday and Friday 10-11, and Wednesday and Thursday 7-8am. Find out what Queen's synchro is all about, come out and support your leggs!

It was virtually no contest this past weekend for the Queen's cross country team as they just rolled over all competition at the RMC Open. The team fielded a total of four teams, 3 mens and 1 womens, as a total of 26 competitors turned out- an all time high.

Teams from Queen's, Guelph, RMC, and the EOOC track club were there to fight it out but the Queen's "A" team had little trouble capturing the title as they swept the first four places in the meet. The "B" and "C" teams also did well, managing third and fourth places respectively, behind the Guelph "A" team. The women's team also put in a good showing, running the tough course along with the men, and putting in excellent times. This was the first year the women have competed and they hope that next year there will be an official women's race.

The top Queen's runner was freshman Adam Shoemaker. He toured the 5½ mile course in a record time of 29:38.8. Another of our very promising rookies, Clauss Rinne, was a strong second. Captain Bob McCormack came third with a newcomer from Waterloo, Murray Hale, right behind him. Mark Fields put in an impressive performance as he finished 7th overall despite being on the Queen's "C" team. Again Queen's showed excellent depth as they took seven of the top ten positions. The women's team also had a strong performance from rookie Anne McMillan, who now holds the women's record in 41 13.

Next week the Gaels will be busy as they travel to McMaster for a track meet on Friday and then on to York for a Saturday cross-country meet. Both are big, pre-OUAA meets and the team will have to be ready to defend the title it won at York last year.

Gails fail to find a cure for the Blues...

by Tom Shand

Despite the constant threat of rain, about 8,000 spectators were in attendance at Varsity Stadium on Saturday afternoon. In the game they witnessed, the University of Toronto Blues completely dominated the Queen's Golden Gaels to the tune of 26-0. The Gaels were simply no match for the power-packed Toronto team. The score in fact flatters the Gaels as the Blues narrowly missed converting on several scoring opportunities.

The Blues are a football team blessed with a wealth of talent. They have an awesome rushing attack led by sophomore back, Mark Bragagnolo, who rushed for over 160 yards against the Gaels, despite the fact that he was rested for much of the third quarter. Bragagnolo was last year's top rookie of the OUAA and led the conference in rushing. His running mates Libert Castillo and Esteban Andryowicz are also capable all-round backs.

Toronto's offensive line seemed capable of springing Bragagnolo loose almost at will. At 6', 215 lbs., Bragagnolo is by far the most talented back of the season with breakaway speed, excellent balance, and the power and the moves to break tackles.

While the Gaels were trying to figure out how to stop Bragagnolo, his backfield partner Castillo ran in for 6 points, from the six, and the Gaels came out of the opening quarter behind, 7-0. In the second quarter QB Dave Langley skirted around the end from the 11½ to score the second of Toronto's three TD's. Langley sat out most of the second half with a minor leg injury and was replaced by Steve Kerr. Kicker Mike Sokovnin converted both touchdowns and added a single on a missed field goal attempt to give the Blues a 15-0 lead at halftime.

The only major score in the final half came on a super sixty yard punt return by Paul Forbes of the Varsity Blues. Punting was the only area in which the Gaels had a statistical advantage as Will Kennedy averaged thiry five yards a punt despite having to field several errant snaps. Kennedy conceded two safety touches. The second was surrendered in the process of recovering a poor snap and the first in an effort to give the Gaels offence another chance to move the ball.

Gaels offence was pathetic. Except for Kerry Powell's 31 yard pass reception which followed the first safety touch, the passing game was virtually non-existent. Powell's 70 yards rushing, 58 of which came in the first half, accounted for most of what little advances the Gaels could make along the ground.

Jim Duncan, who went into the game as the conference's leading rusher could gain only 11 yards against the tough Toronto defence. Doug Latham and Greg Anderson were both out with injuries but the Blues were also hurting after two tough games against Laurier.

Gaels defence performed admirably considering they were on the field for most of the game. Particularly outstanding was Norm Hagarty, who ran 30 yards with a blocked placement, batted down a pass and forced a fumble. Bill McIver and Jim D'Andrea also looked good against the run. Bob Vanderwater once again played well on the specialty teams.

Notes: Mark Ackley, who caught ten passes in one game against Queen's last year sat out the game Saturday alongside ex-Queensman Bruce Pollock. Pollock being injured in previous games ..watch out for U of T's passing game next Saturday as it was just missing ..Gaels have scored only 18 points in 3 games and will have to improve enormously to defeat the Blues and Ottawa U. in their next two games ..Queen's half-time show is well worth watching as long as the drunken fans stay off the field

Libe hours reduced

It seems that the car leading the race to the "financial constraints" finish line is the Douglas Library operating hours. The library must now be vacated at 11pm. The decision to reduce hours, made by Donald A. Redmond, Chief Librarian, was based on statistics that indicate that the hours after 11pm are the least used by students. Consequently, according to Redmond, these were the hours to go.

A blatant error, Mr. Redmond. Letters of protest which have been received by this paper and by the AMS indicate, without a doubt, that students are angry.

And rightfully so. Students come to Queen's to learn not only from professors, but from books...primarily the books lodged on the shelves of Douglas Library. These books are the keys to independent study, a type of learning valued by any serious student.

We firmly support the section of the AMS financial constraint report, which calls for better library service, longer hours, and increased allocations for library acquisitions.

We agree that failure to correct this error would be an abdication of the University's responsibility.

Queen's archetype

I made an interesting discovery this summer at Queen's. All Queen's students look like chartered accountants. And we all know how exciting chartered accountants are. I found this out when I was masquerading as one, getting free lunch during an accountants convention courtesy of Saga Foods. It was a depressing discovery, albeit not a surprising one.

It prompted me to look at us a little more closely, and I discovered a few more things. First; most Queen's students seem to be intellectual 'Fops': learning because it's in fashion, and getting it all wrong anyway. They are characterized by conceit, and the mistaken theory that they are cleverer than anyone who ever lived, and delight in 'finding' (read: inventing) non-existant, or at best tenuous, holes in someone else's reasoning. They are like this sentence-parsers of twenty years ago: To hell with what this poem does, this is how it's put together. They can't see the whole for the parts. Their petty arguments get in the way of any learning. You have to wonder if Queen's needs these people, and yet they're the vast majority of people here. They don't seem to be the type on whom a reputation for academic excellence is built.

Second, in spite of Queen's great (and inflated) reputation as a producer of 'leaders', students here would make your common garden slug look independent. Whatever is "in" is done: but at Queen's, it's done a year after everybody else did it. Two years ago it was drinking and Transcendental Meditation; last year it was drinking and jiving; this year, drinking and 'The Bump'. Next year, drinking and God only knows what. Probably Nehru shirts.

The most amazing thing about the typical Queen's student is that they all believe they are the most atypical person here. Everybody seems to look down on other Queen's people: "Oh, him. He's an asshole". Usually his biggest fault is that he disagrees with the speaker. We're all the same: we have our revolutionary counter-culture - talking about existentialism, health foods, and the weather; we have our up to date cultural people - talking about existentialism, health food, and the weather.

None of this would bother me, except that everybody acts so smart and independent about their sameness. If we have 10,000 different minds here, why haven't we got 10,000 different topics of conversation, 10,000 different personalities?

Where are the priorities

Dear Editors,

I rarely write letters to newspapers - the exercise often seems futile or beneficial only to the point of seeing my name in print. However, an issue has angered me to the point where I must vent my wrath.

The issue is that wonderful institution, the Douglas Library. I have never been a lover of that bureaucratic 'church' - but their latest inaction is just too much. The Douglas library has gracefully decided to close its doors at eleven at night, it seems. This represents a curtailment of one hour earlier from last year's midnight finish, and a full TWO hours less than the old one o'clock shutdown of years previous.

To me, this is sheer idiocy and a gross inbalance in the university's priorities. My reasons against such stupidity are as follows:

First, I realize there are financial constraints - those wonderful cutbacks brought to you by the Davis government - but why is it that the Library, perhaps the most important institution helping in one's education, suffers so great a curtailment in services offered? Where is the administration's head at? The Physical Education Center operates on a schedule that opens the complex LONGER than the Library - is our university experience emphasizing volleyball instead of an education? Surely an administration that can afford to support no curtailment in hours for the Phys. Ed Center could at least offer the same services to the students' main library.

Secondly; the very hours of the Douglas Library are themselves inane. The building usually opens during the week at eight in the morning, and goes until eleven. Hence the great minds who run this building seem to feel the majority of students enjoy rising at the crack of dawn to race to those golden stacks - rather than offering more accessible hours to the majority of students, who are up until at least midnight and would like to use the library facilities. Again, the administration's thinking seems a little screwed up.

I realize this is the age of no cash - yet how much extra money would be incurred to leave one girl and a security guard an extra hour until midnight to maintain the Douglas library being left open? Or at least a shift in library hours to nine in the morning until twelve rather than 8 - 11, thereby incurring no extra cost to the university and offering a service to a majority of the students instead of only a few eight o'clock keeners.

As always, I expect no action to be undertaken by the administration in this issue. However, my id feels slightly relieved as I have been able to express some of my anger over the years of bureaucratic bungling and misguided priorities I have experienced in my university wanderings.

Chris Chenoweth

Some corrections are in order

Dear Editors,

I write this letter to comment on Mr. Downey's letter published in Friday's Journal. As an engineer; one of those people with algebra on the brain, I would like to correct some of his figures.

He states that each student pays $70 to the AMS. Actually, this is the total student interest fee which for engineers is $76.15. Out of this comes:

Engineering Society	$10.50
Athletics	20.00
Student Health	6.00
Student Union	10.00
Bus-it	3.00
Journal	3.00
Tri-colour	4.50
Golden Words	.25
Who's Where	.75
University Centre	5.00
Concert fee	3.00
Legal Aid	.25
Misc.	.25

These are all items which have to receive the indicated money, and can be changed only by a referendum. So the AMS has $96,500, a far cry from the $700,000 suggested by Mr. Downey (and I sincerely doubt that the AMS has the $1,300,000 worth of other assets necessary for it to be a multi-million dollar operation as suggested.)

But the point of Mr. Whittaker's letter to which Mr. Downey was replying is that Mr. Gray is the head of the AMS which is the only form of student government on campus, and as such should conduct himself accordingly. This includes being careful of the wording of his statements to the Journal which is his major form of communication with his electorate.

But I wish we could stop arguing about minor details in the letter column and get on to the important matters which are:

1) Mr. Gray's statement does tend to alienate part of his electorate, something no politician, big toad or small frog, should allow himself to do.

2) The proposed AMS image modification by way of an advertising campaign is exceedingly wasteful of student funds.

The facts should be able to speak for themselves. What are they saying to you?

Diane Whittaker

Punch in the "Jaws"

Dear Editor,

I am amazed by the pheonmenal surge in popularity of the movie "Jaws". Unfortunately it has been carried beyond the usual bounds of sensationalism. I am sure that a friend of mine whose father was recently violently killed by a shark, and those of us who are at all aware of the seriousness of this horrible fate, take little pleasure in listening to the numerous, supposedly humourous radio shows and observing the growing demand for "Jaws" T-shirts and buttons. What sort of morbid sense of humour do people have?

Debbie Coyne.

Jeanne Mance Residence

Communication is the major complaint

by Ross Bartlett

"A few small things wrong but basically everything's alright". This is how first-year student Rob Ashcroft described the situation of ninety-seven first year guys who are being housed in what was once the Nurse's Residence for the Hotel Dieu Hospital.

Occupying the top three floors of that building, the Jeanne Mance Residence at 166 Brock St. is described by the sixth floor Don, Bruce Peterkin, as, "an experiment--all first year students" He admits there are a few problems. "For the first couple of weeks the guys were doing their homework on their dressers". This is a very real problem for the residents The rooms were without desks for the first two weeks of classes, the temporary ones arriving only last Friday Due to a slowdown at the plant in Toronto the permanent ones are not due till October 6 at the earliest. The ones the residents now have are described by a couple of the residents as "far too small--more like night tables"

Other facilities are missing as well For example, though the residents have no cafeteria at which to buy meals (they must either buy meals at a restaurant or pay $300 a term for two meals a day, five days a week on the main campus), there are no stoves in the building and the residents are not permitted hot plates Add to this the fact that there is only one small refrigerator on a floor and you get a situation where students eat, "a Western sandwich and a 'cup a soup' for the weekend", as says Auvo Wahlberg, who adds, "you end up having tea and more tea" First year student Graeme Bate phrased it this way: "I'll end up paying more than I would in a normal residence even though my residence fees are less Every step I take I can feel the price going up".

Other complaints are the poor bike storage facilities which has led to the theft of two or three bikes. The heating is also a problem, which, despite, "being on full blast nothing happens", says Joe Zeisler

Many of the students are not looking forward to the walks they must make through the well known "pervert park" as Carl Gluck puts it. There is also parking for neither cars or motorcycles so the buys must walk.

Despite these complaints the students are not too upset. The rooms are all large, single and "nothing leaks yet" adds Bate. They are close to the downtown area, and in a relatively quiet neighbourhood--it's a hospital zone

This is floor senior, (the floor senior is also first year), Don Armstrong's complaint. "We can't use stereos because of the Hospital." The decoration of the rooms leaves something to be desired as well "We've got hot pink walls for crying out loud." claims Zeisler while Bate feels that he was "lucky. I got mud brown and plaster patches"

Something that the residents are accepting with more of a laugh than a complaint is the washroom facilities. After the first few days, "once they got the hot water on", things, "got a little better" However, there's still the matter of two showers for 33 guys Admittedly, there are ten bathtubs but as Wahlberg puts it "How do you take a shower in a bath tub?" There are also problems with the mirrors As with the desks, though, these problems do not lie at the door of the University. The new mirrors, for the washrooms were "manufactured, packed and loaded for shipping from Montreal, but destroyed by picketeers at the plant", says a letter distributed to the residents last Friday from the office of Gerald McGrath Director of Residences

Washing is also a problem, with two dryers for 97 people, described by residents as "sort of inadequate", and constant lineups for washers. The residents do not have private telephones (Ma Bell's work this time), the only ones on the floor are in the Don's room, the pay phone at the end of the hall, and the free one at the elevator. There's a catch to this however, the residents do not know the number of the phone and even if they did have been forbidden to give it out, so no one can call them

This is the root of the residents major complaint, communication Things going on at the main campus are distant to the residence. Wahlberg claims, "I missed the engineer's banquet, and my year elections through sheer lack of communication" The resident's position is summed up in the words of Zeisler, "Maybe someone should think of us"

MPA during weekends

New arrangements making it possible to obtain the Master of Public Administration through a unique weekend type of program have just been announced by Dr Ed Black, Director of the School of Public Administration of Queen's University

The two-year course is oriented toward experienced public servants Individual classes will be limited to about 18

The program involves monthly weekend sessions (including Fridays), two week residencies in May; extensive self-study, and preparation of a public policy research report

The new In-Service Professional program is identical in requirements to that pursued by full-time students in the School of Public Administration Some of the seminar work in the two programs will be fully integrated. Other courses will be specially mounted for the In-Service Professional students by the regular teaching staff

Graduate students in public administration at Queen's are expected to develop strong skills in data collection and interpretation together with a multi-disciplinary orientation toward public policy analysis The ISP students will be expected to build on their public sector experience, thus complementing the program's practical emphasis

The first ISP class will begin work in the spring Successful applicants will combine a creditable academic record with strong support from their departmental superiors. They will be expected to work quickly and intensively on both their continuing public service responsibilities and a demanding graduate program

Students will be expected to live and work together on campus during the weekend and May residential sessions

by Dave Colburn

It's Thursday night, or almost any night, you're short of food, money, and far too tired to fight with your stove. What to do?

If you are like many of us you head for one of the many low-cost restaurants in town. The problem is: where can you get the best deal? Over the next month or two, this column will attempt to give you a capsule survey and review of the various eating establishments in and around Queen's. Armed with a can of Pepto-Bismal, I'll be making the rounds of as many of the more economical places to eat as I can stomach

Morrison's Restaurant, located at 318 King Street across from City Hall, was my choice for this week's review. Morrison's is decorated in late 1950's soda-shop, but at their prices who cares about what hangs on the walls. The most expensive item on the menu is a T-bone steak at $4.00, the lowest priced item on the 'a la carte' menu was a pork chop at $1.35. All items on the menu include potatoes-mashed or french-fried, a vegetable-usually corn, and coffee. The portions are large and while not cooked the way mum used to, they are wholesome and well-prepared. There is also a large variety of sandwiches on the menu along with all the gooey concoctions of a soda fountain.

Not being the adventuresome sort, I ordered what I always order: tomato juice, salad, two pork chops with apple sauce, french fries and the inevitable canned corn, for the pocket satisfying price of $2.50. The salad consisted of lettuce and french dressing, the salad always consists of lettuce and french dressing: this was the only part of the meal where the portion could be called meagre or ill-prepared. The rest of the meal was satisfying: I suffered no noticeable or noteworthy ill-effects from my stay in Morrison's.

Morrison's has fast and friendly service, sometimes frantic and never dull. It must be the only place in town where you can see Mayor George Speal and Billy, the old gent from the Plaza, in the same room. I have a suspicion, based on experience with Kingston low-cost restaurants, that Morrison's Restaurant will turn out to offer the best dollar for edibility value in town.

Shrinkage

The Management of Shrinkage will be this year's theme at the joint annual meeting of the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges (A.C.M.C.) the Association of Canadian Teaching Hospitals (A.C.T.H.) and their affiliated groups. The program has been organized by this year's host, Queen's University.

Some 350 health educators and administrators from across Canada will gather in Ottawa's Skyline Hotel to consider the impact of shrinkage of educational and health care dollars on education programs for health professionals.

Keynote speaker at the plenary session on October 7 will be Dr. John J. Deutsch, distinguished Canadian economist and former principal of Queen's University. He will speak on the economics of constraint. The Hon. Marc Lalonde, Minister of National Health and Welfare, will consider the role of the federal government and the Hon. Saul A. Miller, Minister of Urban Affairs and former Minister of Health for Manitoba will provide a provincial perspective. The problems of the teaching hospitals and the universities will be dealt with by Mr. John Ackland of the Ontario Ministry of Health and by Monseigneur Roger Guindon, Rector of the University of Ottawa, respectively.

Panel discussions in the afternoon sessions will address themselves to the adaptive planning problems of the health care and health education sectors.

Program chairman is Dean Douglas Waugh of Queen's Medical Faculty who has just resigned that office to become Executive Director of A.C.M.C. Dr. Waugh will be chairman of the plenary session.

Henninger. A different tasting beer.

Meister Pils. Different again.

Henninger tastes different from Canadian beers because it's made from different ingredients and in a different way. Only two row barley is used. Yeast is especially flown in from Frankfurt. It's doubly fermented. It is allowed to carbonate naturally. It tastes like a German beer because it is.

Henninger. Das Schmeckt.

Meister Pils is a true light tasting German pilsener brewed from the same ingredients and in the same way as it is in Henninger's Frankfurt brewery. Now you can enjoy the light distinctive taste that has made pilsener the most celebrated of all the world's beers.

Both Henninger and Meister Pils are made in Henninger's own independent brewery and are available at your brewers retail outlet for just a few cents more than regular beer.

Two German beers in fat little bottles.

Drug Cos. blasted

MONTREAL (CUP)--Drug companies are guilty of misleading and incomplete advertising, 200 people attending a drug symposium at McGill University in Montreal were recently told.

The conference, organized by students in Medicine, Nursing and Pharmacology last summer, also concluded that drug advertisements were poorly monitored by the government.

Speakers, which included representatives from the drug industry, medical and pharmaceutical professions, consumer groups and government agencies discussed sources of drug information available, as well as abuses in the present system.

A Montreal doctor, Murray Katz, accused doctors of prescribing drugs without thinking. Patients are used to receiving drugs at every visit to the doctor. The drug companies take advantage of these people, who are the poorest and the sickest members of society, by spending more than 60 million dollars to induce them to purchase what is often unnecessary.

Dr. Mark Nickerson, chairperson of the Department of Pharmacology at McGill, advocated a rational drug therapy plan which would cut down on the prescription and sales of unneeded drugs.

The money spent on advertising, he said, is inconsequential compared to what is paid for unneccesarily prescribed drugs, which totals at least 50 percent of all prescribed drugs.

Several representatives from the Montreal Women's Self-Help Collective presented the consumer's point of view on the drug prescription and use.

They demanded more and better information from doctors concerning diseases and treatments in hopes of breaking down authoritative and doctor-patient relationships.

The women pointed out that many problems regarding prescription drugs apply equally to over-the-counter drugs. The Collective said that women are the main consumers of non-prescription drugs and subject to distorted and sexist drug advertisements.

Sources of drug information such as the "Compendium of Pharmaceuticals and Specialties" which is distributed free to every doctor in Canada were strongly criticized for using brand name drugs for listing obsolete, dangerous and irrational mixtures of drugs.

One example, "Afagen C" contains both strychnine and arsenic.

The "Medical Letter", a non-profit U.S. publication was agreed to be the best source of drug information available.

Abortion issue

WATERLOO (CUP)--Frayed tempers caused a loss of quorum at a crucial moment and prevented the University of Waterloo Student Council from considering whether to send a pro-abortion telegram to federal justice minister Otto Lang, September 18.

The telegram, presented to student education co-ordinator Shane Roberts, called for a law which provided abortion to those not prepared to bear a child, and advocated planned parenthood programs.

When council was prepared to vote on whether to send the telegram, science rep Ralph Torrie, who heatedly argued against the action, stormed out of council chambers and broke quorum for the meeting.

Torrie had argued that since council only represented a small percentage of UW students, it could not go ahead with the pro-abortion stance because it would be stepping on some student's religious sentiments.

Since all students are forced to be members of the federation, it would be both irresponsible and immoral" to send the telegram without consulting the religious minority on campus, he said.

The telegram presented to council read; "We believe that motherhood should be voluntary. We believe that Canadian women should have freedom of choice.

"We believe that medical facilities where abortions can be performed in maximun safety should be available to all Canadian women, even if they live in areas without such facilities, even if they are poor, even if they are young.

"A law which provides access to abortion only to a few and only in some locations is unjust. We ask that police and courts immediately stop prosecuting Dr Henry Morgentaler and those other professionally qualified doctors and nurses who have been performing abortions in order to help women.

"We ask support for planned parenthood programs. We ask that abortion be removed from the criminal code."

Whitewash

TORONTO (CUP)--As students, women are under represented at the undergraduate, graduate, and post-doctoral levels of study.

As faculty, they are not only under represented, they are also destined to occupy the lower strata of the academic hierarchy and to be paid less than their male counterparts.

But there is "no evidence to suggest the universities are to blame, at least according to a report on the status of women in Ontario universities prepared for the Council of Ontario Universities.

Queen's laying rail

by David Raymont

The Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport is one of the many services that our university is providing to the country as a whole. Perhaps your initial thought of an institute devoted to the study of railway transportation in Canada conjures up pictures of slightly demented professors playing with electric trains, but nothing could be further from the case. The railway has certainly not passed away as a means of transportation in this country; in fact, it may have an even greater impact upon our future way of life than it has had already in the past.

Last Thursday I spoke with the executive director of the Institute, Professor Cecil Law, about the problems facing railways today. Professor Law assured me that Canada's rail system is one of the world's best. In freight haulage, our systems have the lowest rate of cost for ton per mile carried in the world. While in Europe and Asia, the passenger services receive greater emphasis by the railway companies, most of which are nationalised, in North America it is freight haulage that is the most important service that the railways have to offer. All passenger services lose money (the only passenger trains that make a profit are the world-famous Japanese electric express trains); so one can understand why any corporation, whether private or public, is not particularly enthused about extending their passenger service.

There has been much discussion, over the past few years, about the possibility of bringing Arctic gas and oil down from the Mackenzie delta by railway rather than pipe-line. Professor Law noted that the railway plan is both "technically feasible and economically feasible, if not attractive." Although the cost structures are different, railways could, in the long-term, prove to be less costly, alone, than the construction of a pipe-line.

The Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport was founded five years ago by the then Dean of Applied Science as a consultative body in which both students and faculty would gain practical experience in their various fields of study. At present the Institute is carrying out various projects connected with rail travel; such as the mock-up of a high speed commuter system in laboratories underneath the Jock Harty Arena.

The full text of this interview with Professor Law, which also dealt with proposed Federal government policy to nationalise the passenger service in this country, and the impact of fuel shortages upon the transportation industry as a whole, will be broadcast on CFRC's Overview program for October 4.

English skills

WATERLOO (CUP) --- With all the talk about consistent admission standards to Ontario universities, a University of Waterloo senator pulled the classic switch September 15.

Rick Irving, student representative to the senate suggested that professors, not just students, should be tested in English.

While the senate discussion centred on the experimental testing of students in English and Mathematics, Irving said professors with a poor command of English may be doing harm to students who take courses at the university.

UW president Burt Matthews, long-time advocate of student exams in English and mathematics, acknowledged that it was "an interesting idea", but said he had never heard of any similar testing.

1,800 first year UW students participated September 12 in an exam to test their achievement in English and Mathematics. The test results are to be compared with the high school marks of the students. About one-half the first year class wrote the test.

Smoke suit

LOS ANGELES (ENS CUP) --- A man claims that he is allergic to cigarettes has a $100,200 suit charging that he was assaulted by a Union Bank official who blew cigarette smoke in his face.

Paul Noble claims he experienced "increased viscosity of mucas in the lungs, choking and difficulty in breathing .... and severe headaches" as a result of the smoke attack

Squirrels back

WATERLOO (CUP) --- According to the administration paper at the University of Waterloo there was an excess of squirrels on campus during the summer months.

A recent issue of the Gazette claimed that these little creatures have now apparently come out hiding because signs of their presence are all around the campus.

Oh yes, says the paper, the squirrels have come out of hiding because there are "nuts" back on the campus .... all 12,000 of them.

Foreign quotas

WATERLOO (CUP) --- The Council of Ontario Universities (COU) may have taken another step toward establishment of a quota system for foreign students in its recent adoption of four principles for determining admissions policy.

D.E. Irish, University of Waterloo representative to the COU reported September 15 that universitieis should adopt admissions policies consistent with the following principles:

- that universities first responsibilities are to students from Ontario and the rest of Canada;
- that persons with landed immigrant status should be considered Canadians;
- that since other culture may contribute to enriching the university setting, other countries should be represented;
- that preference be given to admitting qualified Canadian students while at the same time setting aside a sufficient number of places for applicants on student visas.

Irish said "Quotas may be acceptable, but that is better than keeping all foreign students out."

Following the Irish statement, Waterloo federation of students president, John Shortall expressed the opinion that the COU was laying the groundwork for introducing a quota system to Ontario universities.

"Although the principles themselves don't set a quota on foreign students, they can easily be used later to justify that type of system," he said.

Don't cut research

Dear Editors:
All criticisms directed at the universities these days, including the AMS's criticism of the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, seem to have in common one ingredient, the essential business of the university is teaching; therefore time and money spent on research is time and money that might be better spent on improving the quality of instruction

The assumption underlying this criticism is that the university is essentially a kind of glorified high school (Grades 14 through 17), in which a group of trained teachers pass on or comment on the work of others. Thus the essential qualities of a good university professor are a good second-hand knowledge (i.e. knowledge learned from others) of his subject, and a certain amount of pedagogical expertise. The men and women who have these qualities are the "good teachers", and the universities should be stocked with as many of them as possible. Independent research (except on the part of undergraduates!) is selfish and wasteful of public resources.

But who are these "others" whose work is being summarized and commented on for the benefit of the undergraduates? They must be either figures of the past or people who are doing independent research, almost entirely at universities! And if no such work is going on at your university, then it must be going on at the really good universities, where the new explorations and discoveries are taking place, where the professors are producing new books and research papers. Should all creative exploratory, and experimental work grind to a halt, so that the universities can devote themselves exclusively to passing on or commenting on work that has already been published? Should no book or research paper bear a date later than 1975? No? But then the only alternative is to encourage research in our universities among creative-minded people. Very little of it is going to be done anywhere else. And if you are not going to encourage it in your university, then you are making it a matter of policy that your university, if it deserves the name, will be a second or third-rate institution.

Furthermore, at a good university, students are entitled to expect that a good proportion of their instructors will themselves be contributors in their fields, not just relayers of, or commentators on, other people's ideas. And such an instructor is certainly likely to have a deeper understanding of his subject and a greater capacity for inspiring really first-rate students than anyone--any "good teacher"--whose qualifications consist entirely of second-hand knowledge plus pedagogical technique. If this is what his professors are, no wonder a student wants to spend less time in the classroom and more time in the library, where he can learn from the really first-rate minds! If students really believe that there is nothing they can learn in the classroom that they couldn't learn as well or better in the library or a lab, thinking of their professors as mere secondary "resources persons", that is a sure sign that they believe, whether they are consciously aware of that belief or not, that their university is a second or third-rate institution. And that is what a university whose academic staff consists mainly of "good teachers" essentially is.

Without researchers like this, would Queen's become a third rate institution?

Donor's Clinic

Bleed

Dear Editors:
Next week is the October Blood Donor Clinic, where you have a chance to give a gift of life. Your blood donation (approximately 1 pint) can be used by up to five other people. This pint represents less than 10 percent of your total blood supply and is replaced by your body within a few days.

The Red Cross's Blood Transfusion Service first began in order to meet the needs of the armed forces during the Second World War. At the end of the war they were urged to continue this service and in 1947 were nationally recognized. Presently there are 16 Blood Depots in Canada of which Kingston is one. Each year the demand for blood increases but the number of donors doesn't seem to be matching this increase. Usually it is only 11-12 percent of Queen's students that take the time to donate. Only you can help to improve the percentage.

The clinic will be open in Victoria Hall during the hours of 11:00 - 2:00 and 5:00 - 8:00 on October 7, 8 and 9. A most congenial group of nurses will be there to look after you and refreshments will be served. If you would like to assist at the Clinic we need volunteers to help the nurses and serve refreshments. A timetable has been set up at the Front Desk of Victoria Hall for such purpose. Leave your name, phone number and hour of clinic you desire in the appropriate slot.

Remember every pint counts; take the time to give.

by G.H. Hall
Students visiting the Arena late at night for the purpose of exercise may have a surprise awaiting them this year, for the recent reduction in library hours appears to have had some unexpected effects. The other night, having slogged over to the gym around 11:00 for my nightly jog around the squash court, I was dismayed to find my favourite court occupied by students reading. However, not wishing to discourage such unusual activity, I retired to another court, and yet another, to find the same thing in progress. The next night, the same thing happened, but in a more organized fashion; there were signs on the doors to most rooms in the Arena indicating what type of study group was in progress within. I am an ardent believer in physical fitness, but I must say that it is a bit disconcerting jogging around a seminar room while some earnest student glares and flashes the cover of Great Expectations (followed by a pencilled question mark) at one. On the other hand, it is convenient knowing the type of student each room contains, for one is spared the embarrassment of exposing one's body to a room full of engineers.

While formal room bookings have not yet been made, it is my understanding that the limnologists will have the pool except for short periods after cleaning, when it will pass to marine biologists. Agriculture and horticulture, of course, get the squash courts, and theologians will have access to the seminar rooms. The other rooms are up for grabs, and department heads can sign them up for their departments beginning at 9 am on Friday before the week of the reservation, similar to the arrangement in force for reserving ice time.

The University has suggested that if this system works well, the tote counters in the locker rooms may double as circulation desks. It is anticipated that this scheme will result in a marked alleviation of the financial pressures on the University: already the tote memberships have soared over the same period last year (because, after all, one needs a place to hang one's coat while studying, and to store one's books afterwards). This has resulted in a large unexpected income to the University, and it has been hinted that these monies will be spent for improvements to the Arena. When it was suggested that the funds might be better used to extend the library hours, it was pointed out that, since the funds came from the Arena, they would have to be returned to the Arena in benefits.

However, all is not lost. The benefits of the new arrangement are many. The notorious lower-stack flasher who has entertained the studious women of Queen's in the past will be forced to widen his exposure or get into good enough shape to escape from the gym. The gym may become the new social centre in the evening; after all, it's cheaper than the pub. And finally, one will not be continually pestered by P.H.E. students who have once again forgotten their way across the street; the weekly meetings of Elementary Orienteering will thus undoubtedly experience a drop in enrolment, but this is a small price to pay for relief from constant requests for directions to the library.

The University has, for a long time, made it a practice to hold final examinations in the Arena. If the present rumours are true, that the Douglas Library carrels will be replaced by Arena washroom cubicles and that the tote office will double as a circulation and-or reserve desk, then this may signal an intention on the part of the University to shift from academic to athletic orientation in coursework. Such a move would not please the segment of the University engaged in non-athletic work; spokes-persons for this group feel that the University is under great pressure from athletic alumni to continue the shift towards reducing the heavy academic load which restricts participation in sports. This group feels that one solution would be to drop the athletic supporters or put them in their place, but unfortunately the athletic group enjoys far more support than the academic group. One thing is certain, however; should the University usurp more Arena time for academic events, possibly cutting into vital aspects of student life (e.g. by restricting shower time), it would be unlikely that the campus would remain quiet for long.

University life can't be all play and no work.

+The origin of this phrase is somewhat unclear. It was found inscribed on a wall in Rome and is thought to have been written there in 332 B.C. by Aristotle on his well-known visit to the Coliseum. The original meaning was "a sound mind in a sound body", but this has suffered in recent years at the hands of biased interpreters; a common interpretation reflecting adversely on the cleanliness of the Romans is, "once a month, a clean body". More recently, it has acquired the connotation, "when the library's closed, use the gym", although this usage appears to be limited to universities.

Science Orientation forges faculty spirit

by Manfred Mueller
'Rivalry and Destruction' Q.J. Sept. 26. How about something a little less hypocritical for a title, like, 'Plumbers and Commies (especially the Plumbers) should be stomped on and locked in cages'.

In one week the Frecs, Bosses and Gaels must take a multitude of indviduals that know neither their faculty, university, other people nor Kingston and form Science '79, Commerce '79 and Artsci '79 (plus of course Nurses, Rehabs and Jocks).

Going on past performance, the Gaels don't do a very good joh. Just look at last years Year Elections and the poor turnout in all the Arts & Science years, as opposed to say, Engineering, which had a high turnout of both voters and candidates. The same thing goes for last years Referendum, where both Applied Science and Commerce had the highest turnout of any faculty or school (approx. 50 percent). It seems most Artscis just don't give a shit. Somebody must be starting the frosh off on the right foot - and it sure isn't the Arts & Science Orientation Committee.

Is Tom Mohr serious (or sane) in suggesting that the Frecs and Bosses follow the Gaels lead and become wet-nurses or babysitters for the poor 'gullible' 19 year-old frosh? Anybody at that age should know that if they break any laws they can get arrested and if they drink in excess they will get totally hammered (contrary to popular opinion Artscis, Commies, etc. are just as capable of getting drunk, throwing up and generally making assholes of themselves, as are Engineers). Besides, Mohr, what do you want everybody to drink - iced tea and pink lemonade?

Is it just a coincidence that the engineers own the Campus Bookstore, hold two blood drives each year, have the best newspaper on campus (sorry Journal - I know the truth hurts), not to mention the Science Formal? Its the biggest and best University formal in Canada if not North America. How about Jackson Lounge, in Clark Hall - how many smokers aren't held there, as well as the Engineers Pub and Bitter Grounds etc., etc.? It goes to show that engineering orientation does its job and does it well.

In his article Tom Mohr tells us that the Frecs, Bosses and Gaels are on an ego trip. Take a look at a Frec on Monday or Tuesday morning of frosh week. He's hoarse, hung-over and dead tired (seeing that he was up all night working on something or other for forsh week). Some ego trip.

I'm very surprised to find anyone around who seriously believes in the 'Inter-faculty hate' horse shit. Sure there's inter-faculty rivalry but, although I'm an engineer, I do have friends in both Arts & Science and Commerce. (At least Sci '78 have painted their crest on campus - I haven't seen any other '78 crest painted anywhere). Also seeing that Mr. Mohr heard the, 'knit one, pearl two ...', it is obvious a group of highly intelligent frosh spotted him, and realizing what a stupid jerk he was, directed their comments at him.

I'm not defending this year's scavanger hunt (incidentally, I wasn't a Frec) and admittedly it should be altered so that certain events are not repeated. However, I am of the opinion that instead of the Engineering and Commerce orientations being dropped to gutter level (ie. where the Arts & Science orientation is now), the Arts & Science Orientation should be brought up to at least the level of the Commerce Orientation (being a realist I know it would take several years (if at all) for either Commerce or Arts & Science to reach the present level of sadism the Engineers have reached).

Regardless, it would increase spirit and decrease apathy by producing a more closely knit group, instead of a mass of vegetables wearing red jackets. Having talked to people in Arts & Science both this year and last, most of them were of the opinion that their orientation stunk, and they would rather have participated in the Engineeering Orientation.

Actually I'm very surprised that some engineering frosh didn't bring Tom Mohr in during the scavenger hunt - I'm sure he-she would have gotten several thousand points for bringing in the biggest ass on campus.

Furthermore, Mohr, although you are entitled to your totally ridiculous opinion, (freedom of speech etc.), why go pick on the engineers if you are so deeply against inter-faculty rivalry. Our reputation is bad enough without articles like yours trying to make it worse. Is there any wonder, after reading rubbish like your article, that freshettes go out of their way to avoid anybody in a golden jacket, for fear of being raped on the spot (without ever really knowing why)? Why don't you do everybody a favour, something at that hypocritical and 'philosophical' intelligence level of yours, like, "go (cuckoo) a gopher hole".

Premise is flawed

by john bottomley
I am taking the liberty of replying to Manfred Mueller's article in the same edition in which it appears. He has raised some good points, ie. Interfaculty Hate, (a point which he immediately ruins with his childish assertion that, 'a group of highly intelligent frosh etc.'), but I think that he is working on a possibly crucially flawed premise.

It is not surprising that Mueller equates a good orientation program with faculty spirit engendered he was brainwashed through his own initiation. Is blind devotion to faculty and school good? Aren't you supposed to respect your education over your educator? Which is more important anyway? Perhaps the Arsci 'vegctables' are the only ones on campus independent enough to still be able to decide for themselves whether to get involved in school spirit or not.

Perhaps Mueller believes that it is better for society if everyone thinks alike about that society, and supports it wholeheartedly. This, it seems to me, would lead to a nation of bees or ants: highly efficient but incapable of growth. A man or woman should be more than an animal: even leaving aside the question of an immortal soul, we are superior in that we have reason, and the ability to make a decision. Society only grows through its misfits: without pressure there is no change.

Just as an aside to close off, I would like to suggest that Mueller take a Remedial English course: parts of his article are unintelligible when taken at face value.

What would you say to an AMS food store

by T. Collins and B. Copeland
The AMS has never been very interesting or exciting for the student body as a whole. The only time anyone gives a hoot about what happens with the organization is around election time or when something gets fowled up such as a service.

Just the same, we do contribute approximately $75 per student per year and we have, as students, inherited millions of dollars worth of assets such as the Student's Union and so on from previous generations of Queen's students.

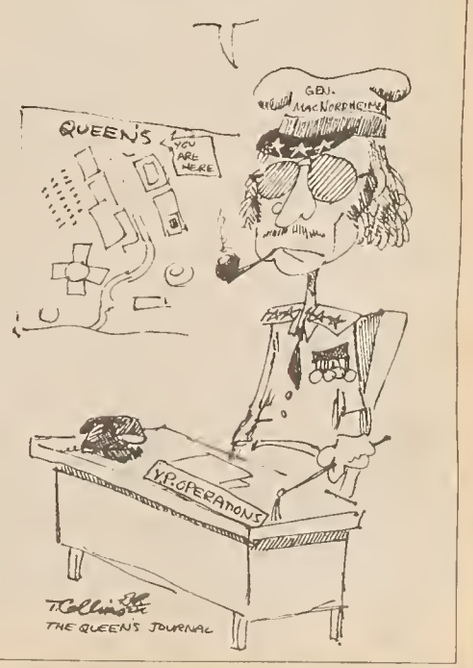
Nothing much has happened in the past few years with the AMS mostly because of our bad financial position caused by some bum projects initiated at the beginning of this decade. The AMS has been trying to get back on its feet ever since. This year looked like the first opportunity to really accomplish something but, because the AMS has been up to its knees in resignations, nothing new in the way of innovative campus services seems to be forthcoming.

After they assumed office, the AMS executive promised to investigate the possibility of setting up on campus a food co-op to decrease costs to students living off campus. This would be a real asset if the plan were successfully implemented. A food co-op likely could produce as much student employment and AMS revenue as the Pub and wouldn't take that much more to operate.

At last report, the idea was dismissed as unfeasible. The capital required to implement such an operation would be around $15,000. This would be needed just to purchase inventory. Other costs would be incurred purchasing shelves and cash registers. The closed half of the Queen's Pub could be used for the project and there is a wholesaler available to us if we want. We'd need a truck and, as you can see, we'd be forking out a lot of dollars to get the whole thing off the ground.

But it could work.

Students would be offered an alternative to the oligopolistic corner stores and chain stores around campus. The quality of food would be the same as the chains and Science '44 people have offered to organize it if the scratch can be made available.



The stumbling block right now is the initial capital. The Executive is justifiably hesitant to risk $15,000 in students funds on a gamble.

We feel the students should be given the opportunity to either endorse or veto the idea in a referendum. Then the responsibility for the decision could be placed on the students.

This could be another Heffalump (which went bust) of five years ago.

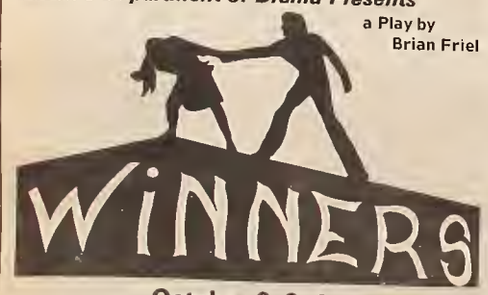
Then again, it could be another Queen's Pub.

It certainly deserves further consideration.

Eastern Grace

by Ram Rao

In a performance marked mainly by quiet grace, Anjali's exposition of three styles of Indian dance on Friday evening at Convocation Hall was enjoyable. The second half of the evening was absorbing with lively dance and music while the first half was slow and lacked the tempo and mood of the former. The show started with Tony Gaston, the narrator, standing at the corner of the stage and explaining the background of Indian dance to the audience with the help of slides of Hindu temple sculptures and paintings; and Anjali (the word means the act of holding a bouquet of flowers in folded hands as an offering, usually to God) explaining in slow motion the various postures of the hands and the body, and their meanings. The stage itself was decorated simply, with four colourful pillar-like hangings as in South Indian temples, and there was incence all around. It was an attempt to create a mood, an atmosphere. The slides, and Tony's narration in particular, helped the understanding of the themes, and showed the relationship of the sculptures and paintings to dance, but later, when the slides remained on the wall as Anjali started dancing, they were only a distraction.



Anjali started off with a few numbers in the Odissi style of dancing which comes from the state of Orissa in Eastern India. Then followed two dances in the ornate Bharata Natyam style which was developed in Tamil Nadu in Southern India. In the Thillana a pure dance of rhythm, which was the highlight of the evening, Anjali's sharp body movements and fast feet showed her accomplishments as an artist. The last dance, in the Kutchipudi style (again from South India), was a light one with a folk touch to it, Anjali's excellent mime and Tony's humourous introductory narration made it a good way to end an interesting evening.

In an interview after the performance Anjali said that she expects to continue to perform. After her current studies in Indian sculpture and dance at Oxford, she hopes to teach in a drama school concentrating on the three styles with particular emphasis on Bharata Natyam. She was asked to comment on how a versatile medium of art like Bharata Natyam which at present portrays mainly mythological themes could serve as a technique to express secular or Canadian themes. She responded, "Bharata Natyam is like ballet. Often they are silly, aren't they? Bharata Natyam is richer in content and repertoire but I can't see it being used for other kinds ot themes. The whole idea is to take you into some fairy-tale world, dreamy and unrreal, and then I think that's where the beauty comes."

There were times in the evening when some of us did go to a dreamy, beautiful world! That was quite real.

Bee Gees

More than Only Words

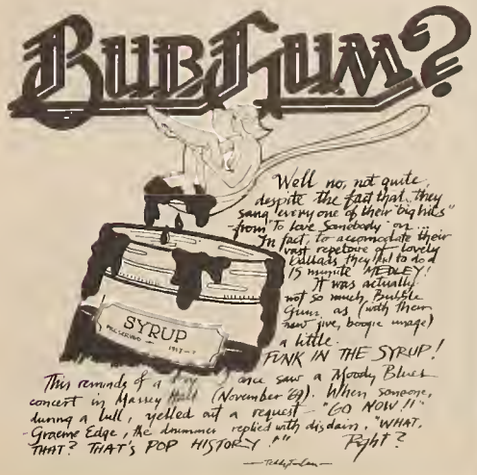
booth

it was a good show

by Alan Mann

It is very rare that an audience at a rock concert get to see a group that is not only good, but also enjoys satisfying the audience However, anyone who attended the Bee Gees concert Tuesday night got to see such a group.

Although the first group, the Dudes, were described on the flyers that were handed out at the door as "an immediate force", their music was too similar to an average rock group doing an imitation of Lou Reed interpreting Alice Cooper's music. Worthy of comment however is their orchestration. The two drummers kept a good counterpoint rhythm while the four guitarists blended together well. In fact in "Teen Age Love" not only did both drummers keep exactly the same beat, but several times throughout the song two, and one time even three guitarists played the same lead, but all in a slightly different pitch. The result: a well-balanced, and well received sound With a slight change of style, the Dudes would soon be headlining their own tours.



It took some twenty minutes to reorganize the stage, and soon after the lights went out, the unmistakable voice of Barry Gibb singing "Gotta Get a Message" came through the darkness. It was the start of a one hour and forty minute set (except for the five minutes it took before they came back for the encores). Backing the Bee Gees was a brass band known as the Manhattan Horns, who lent the exact amount of support to the required songs. Also with the brothers Gibb were longtime lead guitarist and occasional synthesizer player Blue, and on keyboard and synthesizer was Jack Wesley, both who lent much to the sound ot the music. The songs included in the set were "Edge of the Universe" and "Come on Over", both from their latest album, some old favourites such as "Words" and "Lonely Days", "Jive Talking" and a medley of hits that included "New York", "World" and "Broken Heart". The medley, done about one third of the way into the show brought the cheering crowd to their feet, and no one, no-one on the ice that is, ever sat down for long after that. Part of this was due to a reverse domino effect, however, and for those who would have preferred to remain seated it was an annoyance, but not so great that anyone would believe that they stayed standing for a full hour. For the price of admission it was a good show, not only because of the length of the show, although it is a factor, but mostly because the music was good, with a touch of nostalgia and never too loud to be unbearable.

A.M.S. Concerts next presentation is David Bromberg. Keep watching the Journal for more information.

Winners

Last night the Queen's Drama Department started it's season with Winners, an excerpt from Brian Friel's play Lovers: Winners and Losers. The scene passes in Country Tryone in Freil's native Ireland on a warm June day in 1966. Mag, aged 17 and her fiance, Joe, aged 17½ climb the hill that overlooks their town to spend the day studying for the next week's final exams at school. However the weather is not suited to waste time in study, and soon the young couple are expressing their ideas about everything, including the emotions they feel towards each other. They take us along with them through a range of emotions sufficient to fill a lifetime.

At times hilarious, at times deeply touching, Winners, the work of one of Ireland's finest playwrights, has moved audiences wherever it is played. The Queen's Drama Department will present Winners Thursday through Saturday, 2 through 4 October, at 8:30 p.m. in Convocation Hall. The production is directed by Maurice Breslow, and designed by Bernard Burkom. It features Lorraine Forbes as Mag, Leonard Judge as Joe, and Richard Trousdell and Frances MacArthur as the two narrators who set the scene, advance the story and bring it to its conclusion.

Admission is free and tickets are available at the door. A Silver Collection will be taken. For further information phone the Drama Department at 546-6291.

Time change

Great Canadian Rock Tours announces that due to a change in schedules, the Rod Stewart concert originally scheduled for Thursday, October 23 has been postponed to the following Monday, the 27 of October. Buses will still be leaving at 4:15 P.M. from the Jock Harty Arena, but those people with tickets who, for any reason, cannot attend at the new concert time need only contact Dave Finlay c-o Great Canadian Rock Tours at 544-9213.

There is no change of plans for the Jethro Tull concert, so the buses for that show will leave the Arena at 4:15 on Tuesday, October 7 for Maple Leaf Gardens. Appearing with Jethro Tull is Gary Wright, formerly with Spooky Tooth, now on his own with a live, exciting show.

Tickets for either show are $23.00, and are available at The House of Sounds, Sam the Record Man, Shoppers Record and Tape Mart, Ryan's at the Napanee Mall, and at Roluf's in Belleville.

These games will probably be held on Sunday nights so come on out and get your name on the list in the women's locker room.

Sex discrimination in U.S. college sports

WASHINGTON (CUP) – A memorandum from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare says the US colleges must end sexual discrimination in sports within three years. The memo provides further explanation of regulation signed by President Ford in June.

But the regulations have only been published this year, after Congress passed legislation three years ago to end discrimination against women's sports in colleges. Another three years will pass before the regulations take full effect. And when they do, colleges are still not obliged to spend as much on women's sports as they are on men's.

The legislation was designed to end discrimination against women's sports programs based on scheduling, use of facilities and purchase of equipment. The memo stresses that "educational institutions are not required to duplicate their men's program for women" and that "equal expenditures for male and female teams are not required."

"The fact that difference in expenditures may occur because varying costs attribute to difference in equipment requirement and levels of spectator interest," the memo says, "does not obviate in any way sex discrimination in US college sports the responsibility...to provide equal opportunity."

Colleges are being instructed to conduct self-evaluations of their men's and women's sports programs. The memo suggests that the institutions compare men's and women's programs on the basis of provision of equipment, travel, and per diem allowances, locker rooms, practice and competitive facilities, assignment and pay of coaches and publicity for sports events. But there is no requirement to submit findings to a government agency, as there usually is in HEW programs.

SVB disappointed!

To those who couldn't make it to SVB NITE Sept. 25th because of classes, illness, the weather, or whatever, come and see us in the Grey House! Attendance was rather low. Can you help?

There are many volunteer positions available, in fact we desperately need people in some programmes. Have a good look at your timetable and see where you have two hours, and then volunteer. Our thanks to those students who came to SVB NITE and also to those who have already filled in an application. BUT–we need more students!

What can you do? One evening a week the "Tutorial" Programme runs (Mon., Wed., or Thurs.) It is a programme in which you are matched with a schoolchild and help them with schoolwork. In addition each tutor must do something special with their child each month (movie, concert, or hockey game). Would you like to be a tutor? Come to our office and learn more about this and other programmes. The Grey House, SVB office second floor, 12:30 to 4:30 p.m. weekdays (547-5766).

Bews News

Last Monday was a beautiful Indian Summer day as 60 Bews golfers teed off at Amherstview Golf Club. The winning team was P.H.E. with a four man total of 314 strokes. Second was Arts '77 with 329, 1 stroke ahead of Commerce '76. The rest of the top 8 were Commerce '79, Bus. Grads, Law '76, Education and Law '77. The eight low individuals will determine the individual Bews champions by match play. They are Bruce McFarlane of P.H.E. who shot a one-over-par 73, G. Maxwell of Law '76 with 74, G. Dyer, J. Hurlburt both of Commerce '78 with 75s, R. Stableforth of Bus. Grads at 76 and J. Ongena of Education, D. Sandles of P.H.E. and S. Dunk of Commerce '76 all at 77. Thanks to Professor Jake Edwards for again running a very smooth tournament.

Wednesday night the Relays were run and Thursday night the Track & Field meet, rained out from last week, was held. Results were not known at press time.

Flag Football, Soccer, Rugby, Indoor Softball and Innertube Waterpolo seasons all started this week. In Rugby, Commerce '76, last years champs, registered two victories by narrowly beating Education, (which has a very close resemblance to last year's runner-up P.H.E.) 10-6, and by outclassing Law '77, 16-0, Education redeemed themselves by defeating Commerce '77, 18-0.

Softball scores that we have are: Arts '77 beat Education, 1-0, Meds beat Arts '79 by default and Bus Grads beat Law '77 5-0.

In Flag Football, defending champs Arts '76 beat Commerce '78, 8-0, expansion team Law '78 beat Chemical, 7-0, Bus. Grads beat Science '79, 9-0, and Commerce '77 beat Mining, 1-0.

Next week, on Wednesday at 6:00 the Harrier will be run at West Campus. The Harrier is a cross-country race. It is an event in which the Bews Trophy is won or lost. The reason for this is that every entrant receives points for his unit and there is an unlimited entry. That is, the more people who enter the more points your unit gets. So the idea is to get out as many people in your unit as possible. The course is about 2½ miles long.

This year there is a new Recreation Hockey League. This is designed for staff and any students who aren't playing Bews Hockey. All you have to do is get a group of people together (there is no requirement of being in the same course etc.) and enter your group in Room 102A of the Phys. Ed. Centre by next Tuesday by 9:00 a.m. On Wednesday, the 8th there will be an organizational meeting for managers at 9:30 p.m. in Seminar A of the Phys. Ed. Centre. All games in the Rec. League will be played on Sunday evenings between 8:30 to 11:30.

WE'LL HELP YOU FIND THE DIAMOND YOU'LL FLIP FOR

There are all kinds of diamonds.
Some right, some wrong for you. We'll help you find the diamond you'll flip for . . . love for its brilliance, admire for its fire. One diamond is wailing, so perfect for your purse and personality, it could never belong to another.

Tradition in jeopardy

by Tom Shane

Queen's strength, it is said, lies in maintaining its long standing traditions. However, in view of the actions of Queen'smen (women) in Toronto last weekend I feel perhaps the term 'Tradition' may need redefining. This is not because the meaning has changed over time but simply because students are using the University, giving it an undesirable reputation and leaving tradition as an excuse.

For those of you who don't know what I'm worried about, it is the childish behaviour of many Queen's people who were in Toronto last weekend to see the Gaels and to have some good times. The Toronto weekend has traditionally been regarded as one of the years biggest events, with drunken Oil Thighs in Nathan Phillips Square and the removal of the goalposts highlighting the affair. It is a tradition well worth maintaining, however if the mob doesn't show more respect for other people and their property it may be one tradition future Queen's people will not have a chance to maintain.

Toronto has been good to us on these occasions but last Saturday we tested their hospitality far too much. With tradition and drunkeness being put forth as an excuse, Queen's people made a mess of many downtown hotels including the stately Royal York. I consider it a privilege for us to be able to use these facilities and submit that if Queen's people cannot control their actions better when under the 'affluence of incohol' then perhaps someone should offer a course here on how to drink. Certainly Queen's graduates will find that other places do not provide the protective confines around their drunks that Queen's does.

I am not writing this to hear myself speak but rather in the hope that in the future when a 'big drunk' is in order that innocent people will not be hurt. This included both our fans as well as the participants in our half-time show, who are the forgotten people: our bands and dancers. They practice hard to provide us with excellent entertainment. Last Saturday these people had to fight off our 'fans' in order to perform, as our drunken mob refused to stay off the field. I hesitate to refer to these people as fans as I heard little support for our team throughout the game. It seems the 'fans' were more interested in putting on their own show. In doing so they spoiled the game for those who wanted to watch, for the people involved in the halftime show as well as for the players who heard no support when they needed it, and who in fact were prevented from playing out the last few seconds of the game because of the onrushing mob.

I hope that those who now hold pieces of the U. of T. goalposts value their souvenirs because if they don't clean up their act in future they may be the last group of Queen'smen to come home with Toronto's traditional gift. Tradition requires the handing down of a custom and the Toronto weekend, with its fun and games, is a most worthwhile tradition; so for the sake of all, please allow future generations the chance to enjoy it.

A time for evaluation

Tension is mounting; confusion is spreading. Queen's student government must be questioned immediately.

Since the AMS Executive (John Gray, Ian Nordheimer and John Wilson) were acclaimed in February, three of their five selected commissioners have resigned. (Graham Findlay of Campus Activities, David Honey of Education, and Brian Copeland who replaced Honey for nine days before he, too, quit). Bernie Koch, director of Queen's Student Agencies, also resigned.

All four said they resigned because of heavy academic loads; however Koch, Findlay and Honey included disillusionment with the Executive and frustrations as reason for their resignations.

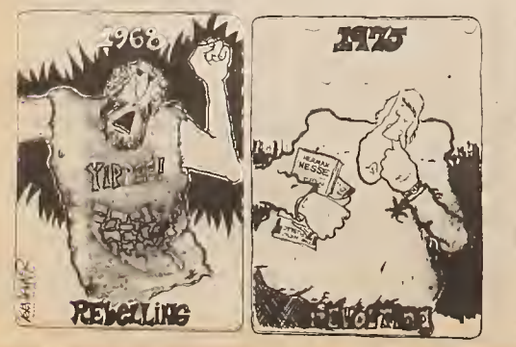
Is it surprising, then, that students are asking whether this year the AMS has attracted less than the best to its government positions?

Lack of participation is at fault.

Those involved in the various AMS commissions and committees are discouraged because so few students offer their interest and support.

Some have suggested that the problem is apathy. John Gray, in hopes of involving more students, wants to combat apathy with a public relations campaign to improve the image of the AMS: (Queen's Journal, Sept. 19).

But why is there a problem?



Do students even know what the Queen's student government is? Are they familiar with its various commissions, committees, offices and policies? The services aspect of the AMS seems to be appreciated by most students, at least by those who go to a concert, to the Pub, or who read the yearbook of Who's Where. Is everything else unnecessary?

Do students want a government at all?

Perhaps academics are students' first priority. It could be that most students don't have the time to offer to the AMS, which therefore cannot recruit staff sufficient to support its spreading, bureaucratic structure.

Maybe the AMS has grown too large and has moved too far away from student interest, to continue without becoming a farce. Is its size the problem?

A time for evaluation, no doubt.

Constraints

Dear Editors,
In response to the article in last Tuesday's Journal, on the AMS report on Financial Constraint, I would like to protest I object to the tone and attitude that the AMS is taking towards this grave situation. I have the distinct impression that no one realizes that there is a finite amount of money available to Queen's, and that there are already priorities and commitments for spending this sum.

I would suggest that the "recommendations" all the AMS report are little more than selfish cries from spoiled students. We are having to give up the treasures (in the form of many and varied services) that we take for granted. We have more services and activities at our disposal than we can use at most times; perhaps we should help by cutting back our demands for "rights" that are really privileges. Why should we, the students, not pay more of our share of tuition costs? If you consider the amount you spend per school year, less than one-third goes to pay for your courses, assuming that you live away from home. (If you can live for less than $1200, all expenses, let me know how you do it.) Surely it is not unreasonable to suggest that we should pay more for such privileges as cultural events, transportation, entertainment, and so on.

The complaints about cutbacks in labs, library hours, tutorials, and other aids to our education are perhaps justified, but these measures also are justified. Since when has belt-tightening been painful? Perhaps the people who criticize some of these cutbacks should be prepared to propose feasible and adequate measures to replace them.

Any restrictions should be a challenge to each of us to use our time and equipment to full advantage, to rely on our own resources to obtain the highest quality education possible. This should also be a chance to pull together to save Queen's, an institution which needs our full support in the days and months ahead, and to which we all owe a great deal.
Sincerely,
Susan Channen

I'm different

Dear Editors,
Maybe my ideas and principles are wrong, but at least they are my own.

After receiving the September 30 edition of the Journal, and reading the article entitled "Queen's Archetype", I was moved to express my own views on this. Although somewhat extremely expressed, I tend to agree with the opinion stated in that article. His basic comment was that individuality is non-existent at Queen's.

I, myself, am a victim of being "different". After two years in the Armed Forces, I decided to come to Queen's. I have found acceptance hard to gain, although I am comfortable now. My hair is short, I do not like blaring stereos, and I do not drink. This has attained me the title of "straight".

This word, "straight", seems to have a social stigma attached to it. "Straight" means "weird", "anti-social". I apologize if I don't like Led Zeppelin or beer, but I am fed up with being ostracized for it. This is the product of immature thinking.

As other articles in the past stated, Frosh Week seemed heavily oriented to parties. Rot. I do not consider fifty cases of beer and a stereo blaring so loudly that you have to yell in peoples' ears to be heard, a "party". Yet most would say "great party" or "fantastic time". I did not attend too many of these, and as a result, I was looked upon as if I had the plague.

I will not conform to what is "hip", "with-it" or "in" if I do not want to, and probably I will never become a BMOC or the life of a party because of it.

I do have a penchant for getting along well with people, but I tire of hassles arising because I prefer Beethoven to Elton John, reading to rowdying, Pepsi to Labatt's, or going to bed at twelve instead of "milling" it till four.

This whole idea of individualism should mean taking a person for what they are. But here at Queen's, social survival seems to depend on drink, party, drink, smoke-up, drink and more drink. This attitude is "If you're not doing the 'in' thing, then you're useless." And this proves, although most "individuals" will not admit it, that conformity is rampant. Next time you're out on campus, for example, count how many people are wearing jeans and a denim jacket. Individuality, my ass.

In closing, the "in" crowd will probably get a chuckle from this. But I guess that that laughter is a sign to most of them of their being "individual", "cool", "with-it". Most of these so called "individuals" are nothing but stereotypes, conformists. Not meaning to sound superintelligent or more mature than the rest, for I know my place, but I came to Queen's expecting to find maturity and individuality, instead I found immature conformists. I am an individual. I will not conform.

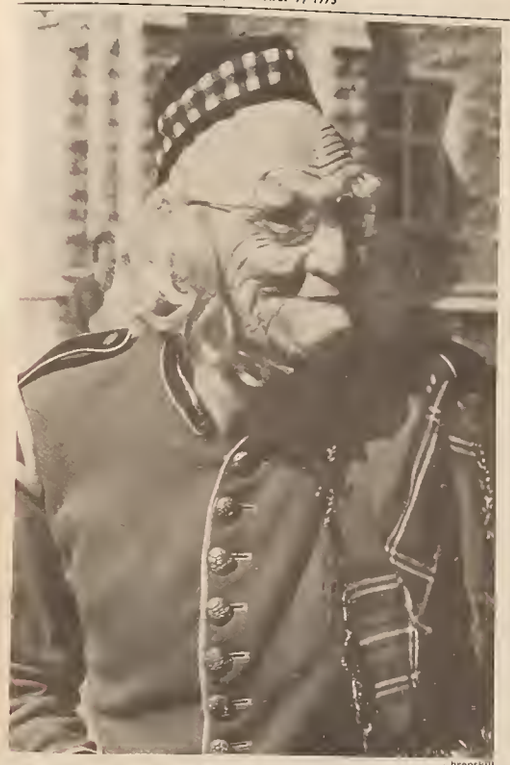
So am I



Dear Editors,
After reading the September 30 Journal, and especially the editorial called 'Queen's Archetype', I was also prompted to write. You may be right about all those OTHER Queen's students, but let me tell you: I am Different.

Maybe you have seen me on campus. I usually wear Elizabethan clothing; jerkin, doublet, and hose (yellow and cross gartered). I shave one side of my head, and on rainy days I walk on stilts to keep my feet dry. On sunny days I ride a goat to classes. So far this year, I have only worn my stilts. Queen's students are so conformist and stereotyped, they all just stare at me. Sometimes I stare at myself in the mirror, too.

Maybe you think my tastes are different too. When not walking my pet giraffe, I spend most of my spare time playing croquet with flamingoes on the front street. Many cars honk - especially on rainy days. You may find all this rather funny, but let me tell you: I suffer.
Kisses and hugs

AMS budget briefs...

Researcher to be hired

A full-time salaried researcher will receive $2,835 from student funds this year to dig up the details necessary to put power in AMS arguments to the Ontario government and University administration.

"Our arguments are empty and next to worthless without cogent, reasoned arguments based on sound research," External Affairs Commissioner Peter Lane told Outer Council members at the AMS budget meeting Oct. 2.

"In the briefs we have presented to the Ontario Cabinet and to the Ontario Council on University Affairs, it has become more evident that we can only present general, principled arguments," Lane said. "We need to have data, and knowledge of previous documents."

Tuition fees are one area we want to research, and instructional development is another, said Lane.

Bruce Trotter, the Rector, questioned the idea: "I don't see why students couldn't do it themselves."

Lane replied that students have other commitments. "It is not fair to ask students to do it," he said.

Social service spending

McArthur rep Doug Bonnell questioned the portion of the student dollar which goes to social services, at the AMS budget meeting.

Bonnell suggested that the AMS was "over-extending" itself in the area of community spending.

Policy statement

AMS must work harder and longer

by Sarah Yarnett

John Gray, reacting to the recent resignation epidemic, has declared that his Executive is capable of finding people who are willing to commit their time and effort to student politics.

The AMS President stressed that all members of Queen's student government (AMS) must work harder and longer to make the AMS "a viable and workable force once again."

Gray emphasized that "the responsibilities of the Alma Mater Society are immense," and stressed that participation by many students was the key to a successful student government. Inner and Outer Council must agree to have "a much greater sense of personal commitment" to the AMS, or else full-time salaried staff would have to be hired.

Gray lashed out at Inner and Outer Council members that have been challenging the Executive's capabilities. "The critics that study only the faults and breakdowns...will be demanded to play a much greater role than just being concerned," stated a "throne speech" which was read at the Outer Council meeting, Thurs. Oct. 2.

Many of the Executive's problems have been with some ex-members of student government who quit during the recent wave of resignations. Many of these students said they were angry at the Executive for taking all the governing power into their own hands. Some were depressed because student involvement in the AMS is so low. Most said that heavy academic loads were the main reason they resigned.

Three of five commissioners, the director of Queen's Student Agencies, and several student reps on Outer Council have resigned since Gray and his two vice-presidents took office in the spring.

Gray told Outer Council members that the policy statement came as a result of "feelings that the AMS needs to be rejuvenated". He said that "the AMS has been hanging in suspended animation for a number of years."

The policy statement was meant to accompany the budget, which was approved at the meeting. Gray outlined the Executive's plans for the year, and said that their priorities were reflected in the budget. He called the areas of education and external affairs the "most important", and said he wanted to "represent students in light of financial constraint, and in the city and community."

Response to the throne speech was split. ASUS rep Paul Bennett and MacArthur rep Doug Bonnell lambasted the Executive for issuing the statement in October instead of earlier. "This is rather questionable," said Bennett, "eight months have gone by, in future, the main statement should be made one month after you take office." He disagreed with the Executive's attack on apathy, emphasizing that "anyone who doesn't want to get involved is perfectly entitled to sit back and take advantage of the services we offer."

Bonnell shouted that while "lack of communication" with students is mentioned in the statement as a problem, "nothing comes to grip with it."

ASUS rep Kathy Wood said she was "really disappointed." "All I really see is how to make Outer Council work for the commissions, and how to make the commissions work harder."

Assistant Education Commissioner Gerry Lewarne stressed that the AMS is only going to work if Outer Council members say they don't want to work one hour a day, they want to work four hours.

Law rep Jamie Avis stood up for the Executive, stressing that Gray had made many attempts to get people involved. He said the failure to communicate with students was the fault of Outer Council. "If everyone were really interested, why aren't they here; why did we have trouble getting quorum?"

Vice-President (Operations) Ian Nordheimer said that 19 reps at the budget meeting was "pretty sad."

The Journal will appear once during the week of October 13.

Deadlines for the Thursday paper will be Monday at 5pm.

Tuesday, October 7

6:00 p.m. - Ban Righ fireside presents Para-troupe, improvisational theatre in the Ban Righ Common Room. Coffee & dessert at 5:45 p.m.

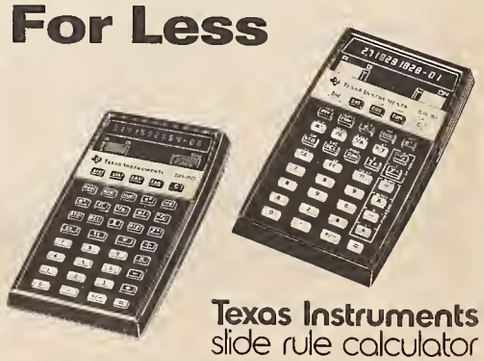
SVB News

Students are slowly wending their way to our second floor office in the Grey House--have you been in to sign up? Have you a spare hour or to give to someone else? There are a number of swim programmes that need volunteers: handicapped swim - Tuesday evenings, Thursday afternoons; emotionally disturbed kids - Friday afternoons; retarded school kids - Friday afternoons; retarded school kids - Friday mornings; mentally retarded adults - Sunday afternoons. Groups are needed especially for Thursday afternoon in the change rooms.



The Nursery school for Immigrant children needs volunteers urgently. Polish speaking person needed to talk to a patient at KPH. 22 guys still needed for the dance at the Prison for Women, Oct. 29 at 7:30 p.m.

Many other programmes need volunteers. We're sure there is something you'd like to be involved with. Come in to the office in the Grey House. Weekdays 12:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Thank you to the students who have already signed up!

Family centre

A joint announcement issued Sept. 26 by the Board of Governors, Belleville General Hospital, and Principal Ronald L.Watts, Queen's University, states that the Belleville General Hospital Family Medicine Centre will be opened in 1977. The project is in accord with the policy of the provincial government and the College of Family Physicians of Canada.

The Family Medicine Centre will be located in the Cavell Block of the Hospital and will house several medical practices which will be used to teach young doctors modern family medicine. These practices will be conducted by family physicians in a teaching role. The Centre, its organization and operation will be modelled upon family medicine centres at the medical schools in Ontario.

Discussions about such a centre between the hospital and the university, were initiated in 1973 by Dr. R. Potter, then Minister of Health, when it became evident that additional teaching facilities were required to produce more family doctors. The plan to use Belleville General Hospital as an educational facility conformed with the new policy of the Ministry of Health to share the teaching of health professionals between selected community hospitals and the facilities of the university teaching hospitals.

Xerox award

The Xerox of Canada Fellowship Award, valued at $2,000, will be presented to Cody George McClintock, a first year student in the Master of Business Administration program at Queen's University School of Business, on Friday, October 10.

The Xerox of Canada Fellowship is awarded annually to an incoming student in the School of Business with a high academic achievement record.

Mr. McClintock, aged 21, is a graduate of the University of Calgary with a first class honors Bachelor of Arts degree in Economics and Mathematics. He has received other scholarships throughout his university career.

Attending the presentation from Xerox of Canada will be Mr. P.M. Brophey, Vice-President Corporate Affairs, and Mr. T.D. Watson, Director of Personnel.

Big rats in residence

by T. Collins

Residences, particularly women's residences, have gone through great changes during this century. Reprinted here are a few of the highlights to 1954.

From a letter by Ethel Ostrom, dated Nov. 6, 1972, comes the following recollections of residence life around the turn of the century: "Our weekly board averaged for each of us less than $4.00. Of necessity our fare was frugal; our most usual dinner was boiled mutton (always with a flourish of caper sauce on top), followed the next day by Sheperd's pie and Scotch broth for lunch.

Each evening after dinner we withdrew to the drawing room where Miss Drummond (residence matron 1901-1903) poured cocoa, and whatever the amount of cocoa went into the beverage, there never was a shortage of good milk. We might long at times for this or that, but the constant good health of everyone proved that we had no need of anything we did not get (though three of us came down with typhoid during the epidemic of 1903, the fault was the city's not Miss Drummond's).

The episode of the rats proved Miss Drummond to be wonderfully resourceful, too. Shortly after we moved into Maplehurst, some rats found out that pickings were to be had in the wastebaskets in the various rooms. One night the whole upper hall was awakened by shrieks and shrikes from the south front bedroom, where we found one of the girls sitting on her feet in the middle of her bed and white as the sheets with which she had swathed herself round and round as armor. A rat had been jumping here and there over tables over chairs! It had mounted the doorknob and glared at her..and was still in the room!

The thing jumped from nowhere and hid behind the bookshelves

That set an uproarious rat hunt going.

The slamming of doors, the thwacking of umbrella handles, screams, and screeches, and squeals, brought Miss Drummond hastily up to investigate, but as it seemed she could do nothing to calm down the hunt she beat a hasty though dignified retreat back down again, soon to be visited by a triumphant warrior..proudly holding a dead rat by the tail.

."The residence slogan E-Rat-Luc, was..throttled within a week by the medicos vulgar parody, Hen-Coop, Hen-Coop, Cluck, Cluck, Cluck."

Other records of early residence life are documented in the Journal of January 29, 1935:

"The rats became so numerous that the girls took stringent measures to abolish them. They ran to earth all but one, apparently the oldest inhabitant, who wouldn't leave under any circumstances."

"Thirty years ago Boarders were called "Mealers" and had to work for their food, for French and German were spoken on alternate nights. You can imagine the quiet that prevailed at meals."

"Bath nights were carefully regulated. A bath list was prepared allowing girls two baths a week."

"Some of the complaints lodged then were against the hardness of the toast, the boiled mutton, the quantity of pepper in the food, the flies in the milk and the dirtiness of the rooms."

The residences of those days were actually supervised boarding houses located in several homes in the campus vicinity. Ban Righ was the first Women's residence as we know them. Opened in 1925 by her Excellency Lady Byng, the project had been initiated around 1910 by the Alumnae Association (which amalgamated with the male Alumni Association in the '40s). Due to the War effort, progress was slow in raising the money required to build Ban Righ. In 1920, the pre war estimate of $50,000 had jumped to $160,000. The Alumnae met with the Board of Trustees and it was agreed that the University would meet any amount the ladies could raise up to $80,000. The Trustees never expected the day would come but this was raised and the building constructed.

A feature of the Adelaide Hall extension of Ban Righ (which was opened in 1952 by Mrs. Adelaide McLaughlin, wife of Col. Sam) that few people ever notice are the symbols in stone over the front door The Greek letters Alpha and Omega represent God. Aries the Ram and Picies the Fishes are there representing the first and end of the year. Also evident is the mathematical equation ei equals -1 which demonstrates the beauty of numerical relationships.

This year the Alumni Review published a three part tribute to Ban Righ on its 50th Anniversary written by Eileen Ruskay In this, Mrs. Ruskay depicted life in Ban Righ during the war years of the forties and the 'placid 50's'.

The war apparently had little impact on campus life with the exception of the incessant clicking of knitting needles in the classrooms and during dinner as girls made socks, mitts and scarves for the boys overseas. Students who waited on tables were paid 25c for serving breakfast and 35c for dinner. One Alumnae who recalled doing this in the article remarked, "I was delighted to do this as all we had to do was bring in the food and clear the tables."

"It was still a very strict era in our undergraduate days, and girls in residence were always under the watchful eye of an adult," said Pat Douglas-Murray in reference to Ban Righ during the 50's "The only men ever allowed past the front desk were the caretaker, electrician or doctor. I can also remember one girl being called into the Dean's office for not writing enough letters home "

"Girls had to be in by 11:00 except for two 12:30 leaves and a 1:15 leave on Friday night. During the year, there were four 2:30 late leaves and with special permission from parents, girls could stay out later on the night of a formal. The name of one's escort, plus his faculty and year had to be included in the letter to Dean Douglas (Dean of Women)."

The article goes on to note, "There were lots of pranks, but one of the most notorious was staged in 1954 Someone took a cadaver from the anatomy lab and hait hung, half propped it in a tree behind Ban Righ Residents looking out their windows and girls from the annexes filing down for breakfast were greeted by this grotesque sight in the early November morning Dean Douglas, who was not amused by the prank or by the girls who found it funny, called a professor of anatomy to rescue his tray specimen and return it to the laboratory."

Finally this forgotten lyric from the Ban Righ Song (sung to the tune of 'Flow Gently, Sweet Afton')

t. We gather to hymn thee, fair 'home of the queen'
Who home to the stranger hath graciously been.
We praise thy wide portals flung free to us all,
Our dear college home and our own Ran Righ Hall
Refrain.
Then come, let us pledge that to thee we'll be true,
The friendships we make here will last all life through;
As knowledge we're seeking through joyous young days,
A song to Ban Righ with accord we will raise.
They don't write them like that anymore. Happy 50th to Ban Righ.

Commissioner, objected to the "lack of support from the City of Kingston" for the primarily student supported services such as the Birth Control and Abortion Information and Referral centre, Telephone Aid Kingston, the Student Volunteer Bureau, the Drug Centre and Teleclinic.

Copeland pointed out that the "main market" for these services is high school students, not Queen's students. He accused Kingston City Council of a "blatant disregard for what we (AMS) are doing for this city,."

External Affairs Commissioner, Peter Lane, defended his portion of the budget: "We are not over-extending ourselves; we have some responsibility towards this community."

Arts Festival funding

Arts Festival was awarded $1,800 of the AMS budget so that a few professionals can be brought in to encourage student performers and artists. Dave Eadie, Arts Festival organizer, told Outer Council that the Festival is "valuable because it gives students a chance to display their talents."

Peter Meech and Paul Bennett were sceptical. ASUS rep Bennett said, "I really question its validity." Meech, Campus Activities Commissioner, said he was "convinced it needs more scrutiny."

Meech and Bennett pointed to the low attendance at some of last year's Festival events. Eadie protested that areas with low attendance had been that way because of the nature of the area.

Modern dance, music, drama, film, poetry and fine art are some aspects of Arts Festival.

Tennis Nets Third

by Chris Hall

This Saturday Queen's hosted the Eastern Ontario Tennis Sectionals at the West Campus courts. Four teams competed in the round robin tournament - Queen's, U. of T., Trent, and York. York won the overall tournament with 16 points, closely followed by U. of T. with 13 points. Queen's finished third with 8 points while Trent finished with no points. In the individual matches, Stu Watt of Queen's lost in the finals to Peter Pascepesaul of York: 7-6, 1-6, 6-3. As the score indicates, the match was very close with both players making some beautiful shots. However, Pascepesaul's fine shot placement gave him the well-deserved title.

Coach Don MacIntosh feels that Queen's team this year is as strong as ever, but has the handicap of being in the section with the two strongest teams, U. of T. is always good and York has come up with their best team ever. He looks for York to win the overall title this year. Queen's next match will be next Saturday, October 10 at Waterloo for the Waterloo Open.

LLBO laws threaten campus dances

by John Bryant

On January 1, 1975, Queen's University entered a new phase in its relationship with the liquor laws of the province of Ontario. On this date Queen's, along with the rest of Ontario's universities, fell subject to Ontario Legislature Bill 146. Under this bill Queen's was issued a permanent "canteen" licence, the purpose of which, according to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Affairs, was to "eliminate the hassle, delay and expense involved in obtaining numerous special occasion permits". This canteen licence authorizes Queen's University to administer and control the serving of alcoholic beverages throughout the campus and to earmark profits to any group.

With this new privilege, however, comes new responsibilities. Queen's is expected to bring its facilities up to LLBO standards, which means it has to spend an estimated $22,000 on such items as panic bars, exit lights and toilet facilities. In light of a statement by Clement that "most facilities can meet the board's policy as to physical requirements with little or no expense" it would appear either that government officials consider $22,000 an insubstantial sum, or that Queen's does not fall into the category of "most facilities". Whatever the case, someone has to pay.

University gets 50% bar profits

You must rely then on the bar to turn a profit of $50 so that the event can break even. This entails, however, a profit of $100, for 50 percent must got to the administration. Furthermore, there are bar expenses such as bartenders, cashier, Saga Foods rep, ice, cups, etc. to be paid for. A conservative estimate would place such expenses at $75. The bar then must clear $175 if it is to break even. If beer is sold at 40c, then everyone present must drink 4 beer (assuming 15c profit on each beer) so that all expenses can be met.

There are alternatives. A cheaper band can be sought. Volunteers can work the bar. The price of beer can be raised. These are dubious solutions at best. Apart from the obvious solution to these problems - cancelling the event - there exists a fifth possibility; bending the law or ignoring it entirely. After all, it's foolish to limit to 300 the number of people allowed in Grant Hall isn't it? And what are the chances of an LLBO inspector showing up? In the case of Grant Hall, Kingston Hall could be used to handle, say, an additional 300 people. And constables could be placed at the door connecting the halls making sure no more than 300 persons are in Grant Hall at any one time (applied Math could figure out the ligistics) and that no alcohol is consumed in Kingston Hall. Or you could throw caution to the wind, forget about Kingston Hall, pack the place and hope no one from the LLBO shows up.

It is here that the administration and the LLBO enter the picture. The administration has a responsibility to obey the laws of the Province of Ontario. The LLBO has a responsibility to ensure that these laws are complied with. If the Administration chooses to ignore such violations as overcrowding, it risks having its canteen licence suspended. And why should the LLBO look the other way? It has already given the University a break with regard to facilities (e.g. Grant Hall still has only 2 toilets for women; the House of Commons' washroom facilities can hardly be considered adequate either). If students begin violating the liquor laws it can only be a matter of time before either the administration or the LLBO steps in.

The responsibility for this state of affairs ultimately lies with the Ontario Legislature and its conception of the manner in which people should be allowed to consume alcohol.

The student is caught in the middle. On the one hand he is faced with severe capacity limitations; on the other, with a tax on an important source of income. In the end he must make a distasteful decision; to cancel the event, to proceed on a shaky financial base, or to bend or violate the law.

A possible short term solution to the problem would be for the Administration to suspend the 50 percent tax until a suitable alternative can be determined. This of course has drawbacks - who is going to pay for alterations already completed?

A long term solution would be a revision of Ontario's liquor laws.

The problems here are obvious to the point of absurdity. The months ahead should prove interesting, as the situation is bound to provoke controversy. We can only hope that out of this mess a just compromise will emerge in which the needs of both students and the Administration can be met.

Drinkers pay for renovations

The Administration has taken the logical, though not necessarily the wisest, course of action - "make those who use it pay for it". Fifty percent of the (bar) surplus from student events and one hundred percent of the (bar) surplus from other events will be used to pay for the alterations. The new tax coupled with decreased maximum capacities promises headaches not only for students and student organizers, but for the university administration and the LLBO as well.

Let's examine the students' position. A campus organization wishes to produce a dance in Grant Hall. Standard expenses include a band, constables, hall rental, advertising, janitors - expenses which can easily total $500. It is risky to charge more than $1.50 admission when dealing with the type of band which can be had for around $300 - no one has ever heard of them. If you can "pack" the hall, then the dance has begun with a deficit of $50, as Grant Hall has a maximum capacity of 300 persons.

The Dene Nation

by Andrea Chartier

Because of the established pattern prohibiting input from the Native as to the course of her future, the Indian people of the Northwest Territories have declared themselves the Dene Nation and have laid claim to 450,000 acres, one third of the NWT. Through control of the land and recognition of their special status as original peoples, the Dene wish to redress southern Canada's exploitation of northern resources.

The Dene Manifesto seeks to correct the situation by giving self-determination and independence to its people. Because the NWT is the only jurisdiction in Canada with a clear majority of aboriginal people, a provincial government there would serve the needs of the natives. Their real skill as experts on the North has never been considered, much less consulted, but would now be appreciated. The call for self-determination by Jamrs Wah-Shee, president of the Indian Brotherhood of the NWT, has received wide support from many trade unions, Canadian churches and also OXFAM.

A just land settlement and political recognition are the only ways to ensure the preservation of the Dene culture and to secure Dene participation as equals in the future economy and society of Canada. Past treatment of the North as a colonial possession has resulted in hardship and little optimism for the future.

"The impact of metropolitan values and interests on the hinterland has become increasingly pervasive, undermining the very basis of smaller and more traditional societies and communites. While the resulting homogenization of society as a whole is not totally without benefit to the hinterland, the price paid is seen by many as exhorbitant. The degree of control and direction over this process by the hinterland is very limited, and the choice of whether the process should occur at all is simply non-existant." (from The Bankslander, Peter Usher)

"Let no one forget this, we are a people with special rights guaranteed to us by promises and treaties. We do not beg for these rights, nor do we thank you. We do not thank you because we paid from them. God help us the price we paid was exorbitant. We paid for them with our culture, pride and self respect. We paid, we paid and we paid until we became a beaten race, poverty stricken and conquered."

Chief Dan George.

A Kingston Native Peoples Support Group is forming and plans to sponsor speakers, films, and exhibitions in the near future. If you should wish for more information, or could supply some, please contact Andree Chartier 544-6569. The Native Support Group would welcome researchers, organizers, writers, ad infinitum! We will be operating from the S.C.M. reading room on the lower floor of the Union near the University Ave. entrance.

Apathy abounds

by Patricia Sammon

Students are being accused of the cruelty of indifference. The charge of apathy is tediously familiar. But in admitting our apathy do we necessarily confess cruelty. Is our self-indulgence an abdication of responsibility, or simply an absence of response. We admit apathy. This is a cautious speculation of what might come of it.

The fanatic, the anarchist, the demonstrator have become caracatures who inspire our ridicule more than our revolutionary activism. We remain mildly amuse. And only mildly convinced by the animated display of shock or concern, by anybody, about anything.

Visionaries must believe in the efficacy of human action. And there's no legitimacy to such a belief when we have all realized that actually nothing makes any difference. This realization is made sadly as well as cynically. Because really, what is more enviable than the life of someone who believes in something, and believes in the worth of his or her actions. Such devotion must, we would guess, invest a meaning in all the empty hours. It must inspire and direct the compassion that we have long since decided was purely impotent.

But one does not decide to be apathetic. Apathy is the absence of all decision. Apathy is a result. And not a policy of which we are guilty. There is nothing criminal or despicable about a state which we did not calculate, or scheme to achieve, but one in which we discover ourselves. The present inaction must be understood as a benumbed response to an absolutely overwhelming amount of misery in the world. And an honest comprehension that the resolve to emancipate anyone is a completely hopeless and really quite hollow sounding quest.

This is not fatalism. It is a quiet, honest realization. And previously there has been very little that was quiet or honest about our zeal for manumission. Unlike any highly principled and motivated time, the present apathy can question the pomposity of labelling and then liberating the oppressed. Just who are we to pity or enlighten anyone.

The present apathy might suggest as well, the fallacy of identifying geographic locations of conspired oppression. The habit of cirling discretely localized instances of persecution is a self-righteous practice which implies that ugliness is can be distanced.

The boredom of the present torpor has certainly not been a blissful sort of indifference. It has been instead the most undisguised and intimate experience of all that we have formerly despised in various hellish jungles throughout the world. Considering the purely narcissistic endeavours that fill our days it is evident that destruction is not confined to certain notorious areas or institutions.

After so many years of horrified responses and shocked disgust at what goes on - over there, the possibility exists for a concern and a committment that is without condescension or condolence for the backward, the underdeveloped, the exploited or the needy. The oppression of our own indifference, the maddening boredom of our own living-out-of-days has made us confront what is really piteable and torturous about any moment anywhere. Perhaps, it may be suggested, that having resided so stupified on the surface of the most unedified existence, there is now the hope of a concern that is without hatred or accusation or pity.

Dear Editors,

I wonder about the wisom of the administration's decision to cut library hours to rediculous extremes in the name of financial restraint before any significant layoff of aculty had occurred. I suspect that this will merely confirm the opinion, held by many students and most taxpayers, that universities are a high class sort of welfare for Ph.D.'s that are at best peripherally concerned with their students' education.

More library hours

Dear Editors,

We agree wholeheartedly with the letter of September 26 concerning library hours. The university's satellite libraries provide invaluable information and contain much reference material not found in Douglas. We can understand the university is operating within stiff financial constraints and we agree closing the smaller libraries between 5 and 7 p.m. is probably necessary, but for libraries such as Biology to bne closed the entire weekend except 4 hours Sunday night is far too drastic a measure in our opinion.

As final year students, our need for reference material, found only in the satellite libraries, is acute. This cutback in hours will severely hamper our academic studies.

Perhaps it is time for a re-evaluation of our priorities. For example, currently students are paying $20 in athletic fees of which a large proportion supports Queen's intercollegiate sports, an area of high expenditure with few students benefitting. Rather than advocating a reduction in this area, we are suggesting students would not object to an additional student interest levy of several dollars which would provide for the continued full operation and high standard of our school's libraries.

Respectfully,

Four alternatives?

Dear Editors,

Once again we start another year at Queen's, and true to form, everybody is complaining. The upper year students are griping about how "it ain't like it used to be", the Senate, the A.M.S. and their cohorts, are beefing about student apathy, countless people are calling for a serious look at the Orientation Week, and the frosh are beginning to realize that the Hallowed Halls of Higher Education aren't quite what they were cracked up to be. Of course the Kingston weather with its 23 hour a day rain is no help. And so many people are wondering "What the hell am I doing here?"

The way I see it we have four alternatives: 1) Accept it and lose oneself in one's work (difficult for those with only fifteen hours of classes a week), 2) Find peace through God (Well nigh impossible now since He was run over by a car driven by a drunken Engineer while crossing Princess Street on September 25th.), 3) Get thoroughly plastered (if you can stand the wait outside the campus pubs), 4) Hide in the bush somewhere north of Thunder Bay with a two-four of Molson Ex and not come back until all the idiots have left Queen's (Somewhere around the year 2018 when I jpredict Queen's will close due to an acute shortage of limestone.) I personally opt for No. 4. Anyone care to join me?

One of the oldes controversies on Physics concerns the nature of light. There are two basic theories; one that light is a particle, and one that light is a wave. There is experimental data to back both sides.

I think that I have resolved the argument, which has become quite heated lately, with an insight so simple that it boggles the imagination. Light is a life form, capable of though, in much the same way a woman is. Indeed there are startling verisimilitues betwixt women and 'lumins', as I have dubbed them. Why should light act like a wave one minute and a particle the next? Why should women signal for a left turn and then go right? They posess a similarly capricious rationality.

It makes a lot of things a lot easier to understand if light is organic. For instance, light shows at concerts (that's how the light knows what to do), and relativity. Take diffraction, please. When light is analysed as a particle or a wave, no one can understand diffraction. Now think of it this way: after a bunch of people get through a door, what do they do besides blocking the way for everyone else. They spread out. That's all there is to diffraction.

This theory also explains why it gets dark at nights: all the light falls asleep after sunset, except for those lumins, who enjoy the late night hours. There are no stars, only drunken lumins, which explains why ancient mariners used to get lost a lot. Nothing exists but the Sun, revolving around the Earth.

This, of course, means that the universe, and all theories associated with it after Aristotle, is kaputt. No Galaxies, no Big Bang, no nothing. The foundations of physics have been shaken to the roots, but Newton and Einstein have done that before, so why can't I?

It also means that our faces should be shifted: we need no longer talk to Dolphins, they're just fish anyway; but imagine the glory of talking to lights. Probably Lumins are Angels, and the Sun is God. Maybe, as usual, the ancients had it all right and we have it all wrong, as usual.

The Response of the Alma Mater Society Queen's University to the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint

Presented to, and approved by, Outer Council, September 24th, 1975

The Alma Mater Society has authorised the publication of the Response of the Alma Mater Society to the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint in the hopes that a wide-spread distribution of such a document will assist in the welfare of the University. This Report, it must be made clear, is the beginning, not the end, of what promises to be a continuing and intensive discussion of our academic goals, and the methods most appropriate to their achievement. The A.M.S. welcomes comments from the university community; please address any remarks to the A.M.S. Office in the Students' Memorial Union, care of Dana Johnson, Chairperson of the A.M.S. Committee.

Recommendations directed to the University

A1 that the Principal maintain and upgrade the efforts of the University to gain public support for a solution to its plight; the A.M.S. pledges its resources towards assisting in these efforts.

A2 that the Principal establish, in keeping with the recommendation of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, "an advisory body to assist him on a continuing basis with resource allocation methods and the selection of constraints". We further recommend that Deans of Faculties and Schools should be encouraged to set up similar bodies in their jurisdictions, either as subcommittees of the larger body, or as separate entities.

A3 that the Principal initiate a management consultants' review of the internal organization of Queen's University, with a view of commencing a major administrative reorganization, in order to reduce costs and increase administrative effectiveness.

A4 that the Principal of Queen's University instruct the appropriate University officers to initiate a system of internal audit.

A5 that the University develop a more comprehensive programme of continuing education, extending the range of subject areas and the number of courses offered in each.

A6 that the University examine the possibilities of, and develop a spectrum of imaginative proposals towards increasing revenues from private donors and organizations.

A7 that the University housing rental policy embody the following principles: the inappropriateness of charging inflated rents, and the recognition of the more limited financial resources of students.

A8 that the Senate of Queen's University restructure the Student Health Service so that it can be funded mainly through OHIP.

A9 that the University provide the A.M.S. with a clearly itemized financial statement of the operation of the University's athletic facilities, before any decision is made concerning changes in the existing fee structure.

A10 that the University encourage the Alumni Office to overcome financial stringency by permitting advertising in the Alumni News, the University adjusting the Office's budget accordingly. Further, no changes should be made in the staff complement of the Office of the Vice Principal (Information and Development) unless it can be proven that such reductions will not have a detrimental effect on the conduct of this important office.

A11 that the University undertake a review of the functions and conduct of the Registrar's Office, with a view to effecting savings, especially in the area of record-keeping and admissions.

A12 that the University maintain its support of the Performing Arts Office.

A13 that the University review its energy consumption stressing more stringent control of energy.

A14 that the appropriate University officers reexamine the legitimate needs of departments for technical support services, with a view towards coordinating and integrating existing services.

A15 that the restoration of currently inadequate levels in the supply of basic equipment to at least minimum viable levels be regarded as a very high priority. We further recommend that Deans and department heads ensure that suitable priorities are established within their jurisdictions between the needs of undergraduate and graduate work and personal research.

A16 that a very high priority be given to increasing allocations for library acquisitions.

A17 that the University undertake a detailed and critical reexamination of the cost-effectiveness of the decentralized university library system, with the intention of providing a long-range plan to effect savings through integration of current collections. We further recommend that the Senate Library Committee be requested to examine critically the auxillary services provided by the Library with a view towards cost-cutting.

A18 that the maintenance of user services be given the highest priority within the Computing Centre, and that the question of savings in this area be referred to any new Committee on Financial Constraint for further study.

A19 that the effectiveness of Queen's Television be referred to any new Financial Constraint Committee for further study.

A20 that necessary staff terminations be effected before any other reductions and that all terminations be completed by 1978. The majority of these must not be term appointees.

A21 that a small, but broadly-based joint Board of Trustees-Senate task force be struck immediately to outline a University policy and mechanism for awarding a substantially larger portion of the academic salary budget according to individual merit in performing the year's duties.

A22 that clearer definitions of required teaching loads be established and that increases in the student-staff ratio be reflected in more teaching hours per staff member and not simply in larger classes.

A23 there be no reductions in assignments or in laboratory or tutorial contact hours even if this means some reduction in the full-time academic staff budget.

A24 that the University take immediate steps to implement Recommendations 40 and 41 of the Report of the Principal's Committee on the Status of Women at Queen's.

A25 that the University undertake a review of the Student Counselling Service with an eye to improvement rather than elimination, and that it continue to fund this service.

A26 that the University maintain its percentage contribution to Bus-It despite increasing total costs for the service.

A27 that the University make strong representations to the Ministry of Health demonstrating the drain which the Health Sciences are on University funds, further, the University should tobby intensively for an increased level of funding for the operating costs of these facilities.

A28 that substantive action now be taken by individual members of faculty, by departments and by Faculty Boards, based on an extensive and critical review of course and programme offerings, in order to improve the quality of the instructional process at Queen's University.

Recommendations directed to the Outer Council

B1 that the A.M.S. formally endorse the University's stated policy of maintaining a steady state of enrolment of 10,500 after 1980.

B2 that the A.M.S. firmly oppose any effort on the part of the University or the Government to impose an increase in tuition fees as a means of relieving financial constraint.

B3 that, if the University reneges on its responsibility to the community, the students, and its employees by withdrawing support from the Performing Arts Office, the A.M.S. should not undertake to support that Office.

B4 that the A.M.S. establish a committee to investigate the allocation of the athletic fee, in keeping with the recommendation of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint. Such a committee should examine how that fee is spent and should determine its adequacy and appropriateness in view of the increased financial burden placed on students by the University's deteriorating fiscal situation.

B5 that the A.M.S. direct the Education Commission to fulfill its responsibility "to conduct an ongoing analysis of the educational process of the university" as provided in Bylaw 4, Section 1(a) of the A.M.S. Constitution and Bylaws.

CHAIRPERSON'S PREFACE

The following report represents the considered reaction of the A.M.S. Committee on Financial Constraint to the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint. The matters which the Principal's Committee raised are of such critical importance that we felt compelled to respond in great depth to both the general tenor and specific recommendations of thot Report. We commend the results of our deliberations to you: if it is any comfort to you in your arduous trek through this document, the members of the A.M.S. Committee have lived with the problem of financiol constraint longer and more closely than ony of us wish to remember. Our debotes, out of which this report is the product, were always intense, often acrimonious, and always instructive. For my own part, as chairperson of the committee, I owe an immense debt to the members of the Committee who devoted, from their crowded schedules, numberless hours and admirable energy in seeing this response to its conclusion. Each of them knows how voluable a contribution he or she has made to the final product, both individually and as a group. My thanks go out to each of them.

In the process of our deliberations, we have received the generous advice and assistance of many university officers. On behalf of the A.M.S. Committee, I should like to thank Principal R.L. Watts; Vice Principal (Finance) D.H., Bonham; the Principal's Executive Assistant, Dr. H.R. Warder; Professor L.G. Macpherson and Dr. K.L.S. Gunn, Chairman and Secretary respectively of the Principal's Committee; the Bursar, T.H.R. Parkinson; and Associate Dean Love and Peter Stokes of the Faculty of Arts and Science. We have benefitted by their interest, though they will be the first to realize that, on a number of matters, we have come to conclusions with which they might not agree. The traditional dictum that the resource people are in no way responsible for the opinions and errors expressed in this report is, in this case, particularly true.

The office staff of the A.M.S. deserve particular praise for invariably responding cheerfully and willingly to the most outrageous demands on their time ond considerable talents. Mary ond Judy, you did a very fine job. A very inadequate "thanks".

DANA JOHNSON

INTRODUCTION:
THE INTELLECTUAL POVERTY OF "FINANCIAL CONSTRAINT"

At its meeting of March 6th, 1975 the Outer Council of the Alma Mater Society passed the following resolution:

That a new committee on Financial Constraint be established. It is to familiarize itself with the situation in which the university community finds itself with regard to the Government of Ontario's financing of this institution, the effects of the situation, the possible situations with special regard for the students of this campus, and to draft a detailed response to the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraints. This committee is to report to Summer Council of the A.M.S. and, if approved, the report is to be sent to the Principal of the University. The membership of the committee shall be as follows: K. Bindon, P. Lane, M. Bloos, D. Pritchard, R. Kirkpatrick, D. Gordon, S. Harper, L. Whitam and John Gray.

The President of the A.M.S. appointed Dana Johnson to chair the committee. In May of 1975, the Principal's Committee presented its Report to the Principal. It was a wide-ranging document, reflecting grave concern for the situation in which the university had been placed, and including a numbing list of recommendations for future action. It is to this document - its underlying philosophy and its specific recommendations - that we have been asked to respond.

A warning is in order. "Financial Constraints" is a confusing world, inhabited by a multitude of demons in the form of statistics, anxious to trap the unwary. It is a world constructed almost entirely of uncertainties; planning for it involves, necessarily, forecasts based upon a balance of reliable (and, more likely, unreliable) statistics, prophecy and outright guesswork - tempered by cynicism or bloated by wishful thinking.

Not only do we have to take into account the immense uncertainties of forecasting the next four years; the A.M.S. Committee on Financial Constraints has also been limited by a less than satisfactory statistical base. Hence our response in not framed in the form of "dollars and cents" forecasts which differ substantially from those suggested by the Principal's Committee. Rather, we have proceeded on the basis of an acceptance of what all agree is a critical problem, that of compelling financial stringency; we proceeded to examine the impact of this, using the Report of the Principal's Committee as a springboard. We accepted, subject to some questioning, the broad outlines of the problem as the Principal's Committee saw it - the need to pare, over the next four years, a sum in excess of eleven million dollars. We agreed with the premise of their Report that continuous deficit financing was an unacceptable method of proceeding; the problem clearly needs immediate attention. But we disagreed strongly with the method of attacking the problem taken by the Principal's Committee. They appear to have accepted the status quo. Having accepted the need for reductions, they recommended cuts in any area which seemed to leave any room for trimming, imagining that no permanent damage would thus be done to the university's central role as a teaching, learning and researching institution.

We parted company with the Principal's Committee at this point for the simple reason that the recommendations thereby produced appear to us to lack a solid base in any concept of what Queen's University ought to be. In our initial presentation on this question, the A.M.S. suggested that, in spite of the financial limitations which affect all of us, we should never lose our central focus on the quest for excellence. We felt that financial constraint need not be an occasion for mere breast-beating about the troubles of the university; it ought, instead, to be viewed as the opportunity for a bold and imaginative restructuring of the academic programme, and the administrative structure which assists that programme. The question of an acceptable philosophy from which to work seemed then, and remains now, crucial to our deliberations. But viewed from this perspective, we have found the Report of the Principal's Committee disappointing. They have tinkered with the structure of the university; what is really necessary, it seems clear, is a complete overhaul.

What kind of university did the Principal's Committee foresee? Though the committee never articulated its underlying philosophy, its recommendations were supposedly framed "with the least effect on the quality and quantity of the university's functions of teaching and learning". Education, in this view, is seen in a narrow context; it involves students and professors meeting in a lecture-hall situation, their interaction supplemented by the resources of laboratories and the library. Cultural events, student counselling, and other university resources are, in this framework, dispensible. At the same time, reform in the instructional process merits only a relegation to a closing paragraph.

We appreciate the immense difficulties faced by the Principal's Committee, and admire and respect the work they have done in bringing needed attention to the scale of the problem before us. However, the inadequacy of merely tinkering with the system appears to us to be clear. Further, we cannot agree that the present system is so satisfactory as not to require challenge, so effective that it is inviolate. A university education is not a mere classroom meeting with a member of faculty; it is an experience of a multi-dimensional quality much of which takes place outside of the lecture theatre situation. Yet what we have before us is a report which asks the students to give up a number of facilities which have become as intrinsic a part of the university as seminars and lectures, in order to maintain, as far as possible, the professorial status quo. In the absence of substantial cut-backs in the area of faculty salaries and benefits, we do not think that we should have to carry so great a part of the burden of financial constraint. The cut-backs which the Principal's Committee has recommended would, we feel, damage considerably the opportunities which a student has to learn; we are offered fewer tutorials, fewer and larger labs (no better equipped than in the past), fewer hours to use the library, and fewer hours of teaching time. This we cannot, and will not, accept.

The recommendations of the Principal's Committee were based on financial projections which are themselves founded on six presuppositions. These are fundamental to the Report's direction, and deserve recapitulation:

1. that Queen's will adhere, reasonably rigidly, to a policy of steady state in enrolment, maintaining its current mix;
2. that the level of the Basic Income Unit (BIU) will be maintained at a level equal to meet inflation;
3. that non-salary costs will rise at a rate no greater than the general rate of inflation;
4. that a budgetary increase of 2.5 percent annually will meet increases in salaries resulting from career development (promotion, merit pay etc.)
5. that no additional staff (academic or non-academic) will be added, except for an increase in the School of Business, with additional enrolment being handled by increases in the staff-student ratio;
6. that added enrolment beyond the base level set in 1975-76 will be funded at only 50 percent of the normal BIU.

The A.M.S. Committee on Financial Constraint will not be the first to note that these assumptions may, indeed, be wildly optimistic. We have ample reason to believe, on the performance of the government during the past three years that the BIU will not in fact be maintained at a level to match inflation. Non-salary costs - we think particularly of the rapid rises in fuel, electricity, and many kinds of essential laboratory supplies - probably will increase at a rate greater than the general inflation rate. We have seen no assurance that the base year for "discounting new BIU's" will be 1975-76, rather than some earlier period. More positively, the crucial 2.5 percent career development figure (which is the source of the greatest part of the projected deficits) may be too high. We note that the universities of the province of Quebec plan on the basis of a career development factor of 2.14 percent, and we recognize that very small changes in this figure can have an enormous impact on the planning for financial constraint.

Our point here is not to challenge what results from the working-out of these assumptions; the scale of the crisis is sufficiently distressing without exploiting the impact of one or two more years in which, for example, the BIU value does not match inflation. We merely wish to reinforce our earlier recognition that the situation is highly unstable, and that any plans made now will, almost inevitably, be subject to significant change.

We need to point out, too, that it is not only the financial picture which is distressing. While it is altogether clear that there is not a precise relationship between the amount of funding a university receives and the quality of student laureated, there is a point, difficult to define but clearly at hand, when the quality of education will suffer as a result of inadequacies in the level of funding. What must be made clear to all is that the effects of these constraints will be a steady, and virtually irreversible, deterioration in the traditionally high standards of post-secondary education in Ontario. We may agree that, at times, the universities may have been less than responsible in the management of their fiscal affairs; the demands for greater public accountability and for more careful control of university spending were legitimate responses to this situation. But the point has been passed when inefficiencies are at issue; we are approaching a state when the maintenance of a high-quality educational facility, on any basis, is at stake.

At this time of challenge, however, the university finds itself deserted by what has been its staunchest ally-the force of public opinion. No longer convinced of the value of a university education, the vocal public has left the university system at the mercy of a government more concerned with cost-cutting and reorientation of priorities, than the protection of already hardearned gains. The Principal's Committee rightly regards this as "an unfair challenge", and recommends that "every effort must be exerted to convince the general public, the members of the Ontario Council of University Affairs, the Government of Ontario, and the Government of Canada of the inequality of current policy and of the inevitable down-grading of the university system if the policy is continued". We support unreservedly any moves in this direction, though we are disappointed with the lack of activity so far. The A.M.S. has undertaken, in the recent provincial election campaign, to bring the issue of university financing before the public; it is clear, however, that more must be done. Therefore, the A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A1: that the Principal maintain and upgrade the efforts of the University to gain public support for a solution to its plight; the A.M.S. pledges its resources towards assisting in these efforts.

Any activities designed to pressure for more adequate levels of funding must, however, be accompanied by continuous and critical internal evaluations of the progress attained to that point, coupled with carefully thought-out programmes for future action. Because a situation of financial constraint is critical, continuous in its impact, and wide-ranging in its effects, the A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A2: that the Principal should establish, in keeping with the recommendation of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, "an advisory body to assist him on a continuing basis with resource allocation methods and the selection of constraints". We further recommend that Deans of Faculties and Schools should be encouraged to set up similar bodies within their respective jurisdictions, either as sub-committees of a larger body, or as separate entities.

We would see such a body participating actively in the task of monitoring the effectiveness of financial measures already taken, and in identifying areas for further cost-cutting Such a body should act under the chairmanship of the Principal, or his designate, and should include representation from all sectors of the university community. We especially want to see more than token representation from the student body. The A.M.S. pledges its active and constructive support to any such committees.

We are aware that such bodies may seem to be in contradiction to the Report's (and our own) strictures on the cost of democratic government. We also can foresee that such bodies may be considered objectionable on the grounds that they may impede the powers of Deans, Vice-Principals and the Principal to make decisions, or with the Senate and Board of Trustees in making policy. But we regard this situation as being of such extraordinary importance that the reasoned assessments of a representative advisory panel would be both productive and essential.

It is clear, however, that such a body will not, of itself, be sufficient. We are concerned about the structure of financial management in two, rather diverse, areas, only one of which was touched upon by the Principal's Committee. We refer to the problem of the effectiveness of the administrative structure of Queen's University, and the absence of an internal audit system

On the first of these, the Principal's Committee reported that it had > devoted some time to the structure of the senior administrative organization at the level of Vice-Principals and their areas of responsibility, and at one stage produced a reorganization plan that offered possibilities of better definition of responsibilities, consolidation of some activities, reduction in the number of officers reporting directly to the Vice-Principals, and elimination of apparent anomolies. (p.8)

We enthusiastically endorse the Principal's Committee's call for further study of the situation. But how should this proceed? We feel that no internal committee can muster the expertise and objectivity necessary for such an important and demanding task. A careful, externally-organized management study of the internal administrative structure of Queen's University is in order. Such a study would be costly; it might threaten to submit an educational structure to an analysis more attuned to corporate structures. But these objections can be overcome. The university, no more than any public or private body, must not allow inefficiencies to stultify its activities. Potential savings in time, manpower and money, along with increases in effectiveness, promise to repay the costs; under proper management, a sympathetic, yet critical, evaluation should result. In terms of public credibility, the university's claims to efficiency and responsiveness would be endorsed; internal comments about over-bureaucratisation might be stilled. We think,with the Principal's Committee,that some major reorganization would have very positive benefits. Therefore, the A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A3: that the Principal initiate a management consultants' review of the internal organization of the university, with a view towards commencing a major administrative reorganization, in order to reduce costs and increase administrative effectivenesss.

On the second point, the absence of an internal audit procedure, the Principal's Committee was silent. We are distressed that so large an organization as Queen's University has not thought it necessary to establish internal audit procedures. As a public institution, deriving by far the largest section of its funding from the government, this university must take every step possible to ensure that it is spending these funds as responsibly as possible. An internal audit system seems to us the most effective way to monitor, on an on-going basis, the efficiency and effectiveness of university resource allocation. Such a procedure, in times of financial constraint, seems not merely desirable, but crucial. Therefore, the A.M.S. recommends Rec. No. A4: that the appropriate University officers should initiate a system of internal audit.

Overall, then, we feel two frustrations. While the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, appears intent on determining a reallocation of resources before, or even without, a prior examination of the academic philosophy which is the basis of the university, we feel a need to initiate the process with a commitment to a philosophy. Only after this process has been completed can budgetary matters be determined. Secondly, we feel that not enough work will be done to ensure that efficiency and effectiveness will guide the financial allocations at Queen's University.

In keeping with the structure of the Report of the Principal's Committee, we should like to examine each recommendation. We trust that, during this procedure, it will be clear where our priorities lie, and where we think changes can be made that will both maintain the quality of education at Queen's, while protecting the wider context that, we fear, is in danger of being sacrificed.

Specific Recommendations Affecting the Operating Budget

SECTION A:
INCREASES IN REVENUE

This section of the Report could have been one of the most important and positive aspects of the committee's job - what could be more significant than developing innovative and creative means to increase revenues? Yet the Report failed to complete an aggressive analysis of this area and chose to spend the bulk of its time elaborating upon arbitrary budget cuts. This cursory analysis of the ways and means of increasing revenues is only projected to reduce the deficit by less than $200,000. over four years. It is also clear from their arguments, that even this figure is the very roughest of guesstimates.

When examining this question of university revenues, it must be recognized that there are really only three significant sources of monies: government grants, student fees, and voluntary donations from private individuals and organizations. Subsections one and two deal rather indirectly with the University's ability to extract more funds from the government, but, with assumption that the BIU level, in constant dollars,will remain at the 1975-76 level.That assumption, of course, makes the committee's task much more clear cut; yet there is no guarantee that the assumption is valid, nor should the University give up its efforts to make the case to the public and the government that the present level is inadequate. Subsection three deals briefly with student fees, but the committee was clearly not able to tackle the ominous task of a comprehensive statement on the matter Subsection four similarly takes a brief look at the possibilities for private donations but does not really examine the area in any depth. Subsections five through ten then proceed to take a rather arbitrary and seemingly unnecessary look at some other possibilities for more funds. It is quite obvious that revenues from these sources would be very minimal indeed. In the first four subsections,then,it would seem that the committee spent very little time indeed examining major sources of revenue, while it applied much of its collective energy to some rather insignificant issues. We will, however, discuss each in turn.

1. Increased Enrolment

We strongly endorse, as the A.M.S. has in the past, the policy of steady state enrolment at Queen's for the forseeable future. In fact, it is becoming increasingly clear that both in terms of the pressures being exerted on the Kingston community and in the context of the Ontario university system as a whole, Queen's may well have exceeded its optimum enrolment already Furthermore, with respect to the university itself, if we are to be consistent with our academic principles, increasing enrolment cannot be conceived as a means of reducing the deficit Increased enrolment entails a concomitant increase in expenditures on physical plant, faculty, support staff,central services and so on, and hence it is extremely doubtful whether any saving would be realized at all. In summary then, the trade-offs involved in the Kingston community, the Ontario university system and Queen's itself, are such to make increased enrolment a totally unacceptable procedure.

The A.M.S. Committee on Financial Constraint recommends

Rec. No. B1: that the A.M.S. formally endorse the University's stated policy of maintaining a steady state of enrolment of 10,500 after 1980.

An area not discussed in this subsection, yet which relates very directly, and certainly more positively, to increasing our provincial grant, is that of altering the enrolment mix. We could most assuredly increase our total BIU's by expanding the numbers of students in the net revenue generating faculties and schools, and reducing proportionately the numbers in the other programs. The net generating programs as we understand them are the School of Business, Arts and the School of Graduate Studies. Currently the University is well below the established level of 1250 graduate students (cf SCAD Report No. 6), and in addition is below the number of graduate students in institutions of comparable size It may be possible as well to establish other programmes as net generators, without adding more faculty. Any such move, however, would certainly involve concomitant expenditures for laboratory equipment, physical plant, support staff and the like.

These enrolment shifts must be seriously evaluated in terms of the University's ability to expand programmes while maintaining high academic standards. Care must be taken to ensure that standards in one programme do not improve at the expense of those in another Further, enrolment reductions, as a necessary consectary, must be considered in depth in order to understand the trade-offs involved. Finally, the alteration of the mix must be evaluated in terms of its effects on the overall character of the university

2. Extension and Part-time Students

On this subsection we are again in basic agreement with the committee, as far as it goes; however, its examination lacks considerable depth. Clearly, the enrolment picture for extension and part-time courses presently offered is not rosy Any sort of significant numerical and geographical expansion might well prove to be a money-losing proposition.

This subsection, however, ignores the university's implicit, and hopefully soon to be explicit, commitment to continuing education The university's experience to date in this area, largely in the professional fields, would indicate that there is a clear need and that the operation can be a net revenue generator Queen's unfortunately has had less experience in the somewhat more nebulous field of continuing education in the humanities and social sciences. The scope for expansion would appear to be almost limitless.The programme could involve specially designed degree-orientated courses, general interest courses upgrading courses, conferences, and so on In addition, the course duration could conceivably vary from two days to eight months. It is our recommendation that an extensive set of continuing education programs be developed, out of a sense of both social responsibility and financial necessity

The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. B2: that the University develop a more comprehensive programme of continuing education, extending the range of subject areas and the number of courses offered in each.

3. Increase in Tuition Fees

As stated earlier, the committee quite understandably did not have the mandate nor the desire to delve into this area in depth. However, its analysis would appear to be rather ill-considered. First, there is absolutely no guarantee that any increase in fees would not be accompanied by a relative decrease in government funds Government policy currently directs that tuition increases will not result in increased revenue for the university system, in spite of this, the temptation to attempt to increase the value of the BIU simply by increasing the tuition fee component may prove too attractive. Secondly, even if this government policy were to change, it must be recognized that increasing tuition fees cannot, and must not, be regarded as a panacea - to cover the projected deficit for the next four years would require fee increases of almost $100 each year, ultimately raising the cost of tuition to unconscionable levels. The A.M.S. Committee on Financial Constraint recommends that the A.M.S

Rec. No. B2: should firmly oppose any effort on the part of the University or the Government to impose an increase in tuition fees as a means of relieving financial constraint.

The major objection to any increase in fees must be the effect that such a move would have on the accessibility of higher education in this province. Raising tuition fees only adds to an already substantial financial disincentive for students to attend university. Those from middle income families, because of the regressive age of independence clause, do not currently qualify for OSAP. Each additional $100 would have a very real impact on the ability of these students to qualify financially for university attendance. To many students from lower income families, who currently subsist well below the poverty line on existing levels of student assistance, any additional increases would simply tip the balance. The only way of partially redressing this decrease in accessibility would be to improve levels of student assistance and to make it available to more students. However, it has been documented that (as opposed to grants) loan schemes are automatically a deterent to people from lower income groups. In any event, the revenue gained may be nullified by the increased expenditures in internal student aid. It is questionable if there would be, in the end, any net gain.

This year many of the universities in the province petitioned OCUA to allow the individual institutions, rather than the government, to set their own fee levels. This idea is particularly prevalent at Queen's where it is felt that our students can and should pay more. The systemic effect of such a situation would be to create a graduated structure whereby the better universities could demand higher fees and vice versa. The question must be posed: is this what we really want? Surely the universities with higher academic standards want to be able to choose, as they supposedly do now, the academically more qualified students, not simply the richer ones. Again, the only way to maintain accessibility at this level is to set up extensive internal assistance programs, and we have yet to be convinced that the university would do this adequately, and if they did, that there would be any net gain from higher fees.

Finally, an argument frequently put forward is that this gradated system of tuition fees would lead to a healthy competition for students. It would appear to us that this is a rather narrow and inappropriate application of simplistic market economics to the provincial university system. Competition on an economic level simply has nothing to do with scholarship!

4. Campaign and Alumni Giving

We feel this subsection to be of utmost importance and are disappointed to note that the committee gave it such shallow and unimaginative coverage. A most valuable function could have been served if the committee had evaluated the campaign possibilities and given us a realistic financial goal for an ongoing campaign. Secondly, if the university is sincere about becoming more independent of government, there are a whole range of possibilities for attracting funds from the private sector. It must be borne in mind however, that there is no guarantee that funds raised in this fashion would be any less directed than are government funds.

As noted in the Report, funds can and have been generated for specific purposes like library acquisitions, computing facilities and laboratory equipment. We applaud this action, yet see a need for the university to guard against any loss in its autonomy. Another avenue might be to have funds directed to specific programs, for example, Dow Chemical donating a certain amount per year to the Chemical Engineering Program or IBM to the Computing Science Program. Still another avenue may be to establish ROTP-like programs whereby corporations would pay the cost of educating future employees in exchange for the guarantee of the services of a well educated employee for a fixed number of years.

With regards to capital campaigns, we have been most successful with the recent drive. In the future, considering constant enrolment, we may not need as much money for new buildings per se, but funds will be needed for new housing to meet the needs of our present enrolment and for building maintenance and renewal and so on. Hence there is a place for an ongoing capital campaign.

It should be noted that some strongly suggest that no funds should be sought from the private sector because it only weakens our case for the need of more public funds. On the level of purely pragmatic politics this may well be the case--that a dramatic deterioration of the university in the short term may well mean more adequate funding in the long run. We feel, however, that the university has a clear responsibility to maintain and improve the quality of its operation by whatever means at its disposal. Secondly, until the tax structure is substantially altered, it is the lower and middle income taxpayers who pay for the lion's share of post-secondary education. Presently, the large corporations benefit most by having well-educated employees and yet do not pay their share in taxes. As well, it is the sons and daughters of those in upper income groups who personally benefit most from the publicly supported university system. It is our feeling then, that the private sector has escaped paying their fair share through the tax system, and that the university should redress this situation by soliciting their monetary assistance.

A particularly ill-conceived aspect of the report is the subsection on alumni giving. The expansion of the sixties should presently be placing the University in the "golden years" of alumni support, simply because of their numbers and because of their new earning power. The monies received could be used to support such capital expenditures as library acquisitions, laboratory equipment, and the like, after the university's building program is largely completed. To us, this would indicate that the University should expand the budget of the Alumni Office and the Vice-Principal (Information and Development); yet these are the very areas to which the committee applies to proverbial axe. It would seem that indeed in some cases we must spend some money to make some.

The A.M.S. therefore recommends

Rec. No. A6: that the University examine the possibilities of, and develop a spectrum of imaginative proposals towards, increasing revenues from private donors and organizations.

5. Increased Rentals on University-owned Properties

It would appear from this subsection that the University is willing to take advantage of a high demand and low supply situation in housing to make its own professors and students pay inflated prices. It is shocking when one realizes the University has tax exempt status as well. Also it should be borne in mind that if the University rents houses to the A.M.S. at market value, then the actual rent to the student will be well above that. The increase would result from the inevitable handling costs involved, rather than any profit motive, which is, in fact, contractually forbidden in this operation. It is our position that different rental rates should be established for academic staff and for students. Therefore, we find the recommendation of the Report of the Principal's Committee on this matter quite unacceptable. The A.M.S. therefore recommends

Rec. No. A7: that the University housing rental policy should embody the following principles: the inappropriateness of charging inflated rents, and the recognition of the more limited financial resources of students.

6. Overheads on Contract Research Funds

The question that comes to mind is: why is it limited only to contract research funds from the Federal Department of Supply and Services? It appears to us that research grants from all sources should be evaluated and every attempt should be made to cover overhead, support staff, and the costs of other necessary resources from the grants themselves.

7. Service Fees

a) Student Health Fee

The Student Health Service is in many ways redundant. There already exists an efficient well-developed health care delivery system in the community that is supported by public funds, through OHIP. In our view the Student Health Service should be little more than a referral service, and the professionals there should be paid on the same basis that any other physician is: by the province, through OHIP. The University has no business employing doctors in this manner. Instead of raising the Student Health Fee to meet that of the University, the service should be streamlined, and both contributions lowered. The A.M.S. therefore recommends

Rec. No. A8: that the Senate of Queen's University restructure the Student Health Service so that it can be funded mainly through OHIP.

b) Athletic Facilities

We find this section superficial. Firstly, it makes no mention of the PHE students. Operation of these facilities is a legitimate academic expenditure. Furthermore, everyone else should not be charged more to support the PHE program. Moreover, the section makes no mention of the $20 per student per year which is given to Athletics; yet we know that some of that money goes towards the operation of that centre. The University has yet to disclose clearly itemized financial statements so we can know exactly where we stand. Also there is some feeling that the faculty and staff make no contribution at all towards the centre's operation. If such is the case, we regard this as inequitable.

The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A9: that the University provide the A.M.S. with a clearly itemized financial statement of that operation of the University's athletic facilities, before any decision is made concerning any changes in the existing fee structure.

8. Teaching Materials

We agree in principle with this subsection of the Report. However, the cost of these materials will represent a further and not insignificant financial drain on the students' resources. We feel as well, if the student pays, there is little or no incentive to control quantity, quality, or cost of the material. The student must have some voice in the production to ensure that he-she is not being forced to buy reams and reams of drivel at a high price. Also the University should only be interested in recouping its cost and not in making a profit. Finally some of the material handed out to classes such as examinations, notices and the like are costs which the University must be willing to bear directly.

9. Sale of Excess University Assets

We agree with the recommendation of this section and would only add that perhaps buildings, particularly houses, which are no longer needed for expansion, should be included.

10. Ancillary Operations

We agree with the recommendation but state that we are indeed worried about the definition of an ancillary service. Problems arise when considering such areas as the Computing Centre since they serve legitimate and essential teaching functions. Another case in point is the Donald Gordon Centre, which serves a distinct educational function and we wonder whether it is valid to be rigid about its self-supporting status.

Also, because a service is judged to be ancillary, it does not absolve the University from the responsibility of seeing that it is operated efficiently. Food services and residences are prime examples and the University must see to it that these services are provided in the most economical and efficient manner possible.

SECTION B: INSTITUTIONAL SUPPORT SERVICES

The treatment of the services in this section reflects the tendency of the Principal's Committee to cut back on readily-identifiable areas of the University budget, rather than offering in-depth analyses leading to more concrete reforms in the way in which things are done. This method, as we have already noted, is unsatisfactory since the central services of the University, and indirectly the students, will suffer greatly from financial constraint, while other areas (faculties and departments, for example) remain relatively unscathed.

Further, the Report's recommended reductions are founded on little information, and are very arbitrary. Many of the percentages recommended were literally figures "pulled out of the air" without any examinaton of the efficiency and-or effectiveness of the areas under examination. Though we can agree that every area should operate as effectively as possible, the Report asks too much of some, and not enough of others.

1. & 2. Office of the Vice Principal (Information and Development) and the Alumni Office

In these areas the Report of the Principal's Committee makes what appear to us to be paradoxical recommendations. At the same time that the University will be increasing its relations with outside bodies, the Offices themselves will have to undertake these duties with fewer staff resources. In our disscussion on increasing revenues, we foeused on the need to expand external and alumni relations in order to gain assistance in times of constraint; these efforts, we fear, may be imperilled if action is taken as recommended in the Report. The Alumni Office alone collects, on an annual average, $650,000 in contributions. An 8 percent reduction in this office will result in the loss of one position, the field secretary. We believe that such a loss will limit the effectiveness of the office at a time when their activities may be crucial. As the number of alumni of Queen's increases, the University should be devoting at least the present level of support to these functions. The A.M.S. therefore recommends

Rec. No. A10: that the University encourage the Alumni Office to overcome financial strinency by permitting advertising in the ALUMNI NEWS, the University adjusting the Office's budget accordingly. Further, no changes should be made in the staff complement of the Office of the Vice Principal (Information and Development) unless it can be proven that such reductions will not have a detrimental effect on the conduct of this important office.

3. The Registrar's Office

The 6 percent budget reduction suggested by the Principal's Committee is much less than could be achieved by this office. As the Report suggests the "productivity" of this office has increased; however, over the years, many functions have been transferred out of the office to the various Faculty offices. At one time, the Registrar's Office controlled counselling and many administrative functions. Through reorganization, the Office has given up many of these duties; the functions of admissions, scholarships, student aid, records management and registration remain. There are two foci for our concern: the Admission Office, and the Richardson Hall records division. The Admissions Office appears significantly overstaffed, considering the role that the Faculty offices take on in this area. As for the records section, their service is notoriously poor. We think that the Registrar's Office should be able to fulfill its functions effectively with a smaller staff complement. The A.M.S. therefore recommends

Rec. No. A11: that the University undertake a review of the functions and conduct of the Registrar's Office, with a view to effecting savings, especially in the area of record-keeping and admissions.

4. Senate and Board Secretariats

We would welcome the changes suggested in these areas.

5. The School of Graduate Studies and Research

It is our understanding that this office has taken on significantly greater duties over the years; as the School grows and research proceeds apace, its responsibilities are likely to increase. The Report's suggestions appear to have no firm basis, and we question their appropriateness.

6. Department of University Services

We support the Report's recommendation.

7. Campus Planning Office

So long as university growth is curtailed, and steady state a reality, we agree that the Joint Senate-Board Campus Planning Committee can fulfill the responsibilities of the office of Campus Planner.

8. Performing Arts Office

If the recommendation of the Report of the Principal's Committee on this subject were to be implemented, we believe that an important university resource would be sacrificed. The Performing Arts Office contributes significantly to the unique character of Queen's and to its relations with the surrounding community. We feel that it is an important university responsibility to maintain these services, even in the most difficult times. The A.M.S. therefore recommends

Rec. No. A12: that the University maintain its support of the Performing Arts Office.

We further recommend to the A.M.S.

Rec. No. B3: that, if the University reneges on its responsibility to the community, the students, and its own employees, by withdrawing support from the Performing Arts Office, the A.M.S. should not undertake to support that Office.

9. Graphic Design Unit

We applaud the efforts that have been made to centralize printing and purchasing, and to create a consistent graphic image. These tasks appear complete, and we have serious doubts that further changes in the University's graphic design system would greatly affect its external image. Given current financial limitations, we would hope that people would have a higher priority than paper, and that all possible savings will be effected in this area.

10. Publications

The remarks of the Principal's Committee on this subject are sensible, and merit our full accord. We would only add that Campus fulfilled a very useful news function, and that role could be taken up more fully by the Gazette than the Report suggests.

11. Energy Savings

We applaud the thrust of the Report's recommendations in this field. We believe that, through careful management and the application of some imagination, much greater savings might be possible in this area. The A.M.S. therefore recommends

Rec. No. A13: that the University review its energy consumption stressing more stringent control of energy.

Area Still to be Investigated

We recognize the need for extensive examination of the areas suggested by the Principal's Committee. These studies should be undertaken with all possible speed, the Department of Physical Plant particularly seems to be notably inefficient. We believe that many valuable cost-saving strategies will be discovered.

SECTION C: ACADEMIC SUPPORT SERVICES

This section contains several areas within the University, areas which must be considered as crucial adjuncts to the instructional process: equipment, and the management of the Library and Computing Centre. Other matters - administrative and secretarial services, for example - touch students rather indirectly. A lack of information on much of this area is an effective limitation on the concreteness of our response. But we feel strongly that here, as on other matters, the Principal's Committee has attempted to deal with the problems by applying a "scissors and paste" financial outlook, rather than suggesting genuine reforms which could result in reduced costs, while at the same time maintaining, or even upgrading, current levels of service. We fail to see any clear rationale for some of the recommendations, beyond mere budgetary paring.

(i) 1. Administrative & Secretarial Support in Faculties and Academic Departments

We can agree that the scale of reductions recommended appears quite reasonable, though in the absence of more solidly based analyses, it must be left to the Faculty offices and the departments, whether such reductions can be made without undue harm to the functioning of those offices. We wonder if the rampant departmental ethic of Queen's has not, in itself, resulted in the creation of an overly-rigid structure, the use of shorter contracts will go some way towards overcoming this, but we would like to see more. We wonder if greater savings could be achieved by moving away from a strict departmental concentration towards a more flexible arrangement involving, perhaps, multi-departmental secretarial pools. We see a good deal of waste, resulting from the seasonality of much of the university's work.

At the same time, something needs to be said for the responsibilities of the University towards its employees. The University must not allow admittedly serious financial problems to interfere with those responsibilities; most of these employees are relatively low-paid, and most are female. We must avoid a situation where special hardship, brought on by financial limitations, is visited unduly on a group which can do little to defend itself. We also remind the University of its prior commitment, in the philosophy and recommendations of the Principal's Report on the Status of Women, to a situation of equality and fairness in the treatment of all members of staff. We must oppose any action towards members of the secretarial and administrative staff which might give the impression that the University was attempting, in any way, to renege on that committment.

(i) 2. Technical Support Services

Two considerations need to be raised here, since we are convinced that further savings may be possible in this area. It appears that departmental empire-building has resulted in what appears to us to be significant duplication of services; a closer coordination of needs would result in greater savings in such areas as audio-visual aids, photographic work, and technical assistance in the sciences. Further, once such personnel are hired by departments, the need to find sufficient work to keep these technicians occupied results in a frenzied attempt at job-creation. The results strike us as unnecessary frills; departments need to be convinced that, with reorganization of both their work and their priorities, fewer technical staff can manage the necessary work within their departments. We also wonder if the Printing Service could not have a more positive role in advising departments how to minimize costs in their work. The areas deserves further examination; we are convinced, on the basis of our experience, that significant cut-backs can be achieved.

The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A14: that the appropriate University officers reexamine the legitimate needs of departments for technical support services, with a view towards coordinating and integrating existing service.

(i) 3. Equipment

We cannot stress strongly enough our conviction that budgets for basic equipment have suffered from such severe cost-cutting that the effectiveness of the academic programme has suffered significantly. We cannot accept the intimation of the Principal's Committee that current budgetary allocations are sufficient to meet the minimum needs of the University; they do not. Students must have access to equipment of sufficient quality and in sufficient quantity to ensure the effectiveness of their programmes. Under present circumstances, they do not. Basic equipment supplies are so inadequate that the quality of undergraduate and graduate education is endangered and the external image of the University has been tarnished accordingly. We must emphasise that returning equipment budgets to minimum levels must be a very high priority. We support unreservedly the recommendation of the Principal's Committee that some measure of relief be sought from benefactors; but whatever the outcome of this, we feel compelled to insist that funds be reallocated to this area as quickly as possible.

These deficiencies in basic equipment are all the more galling when students see members of faculty devoting some of the equipment budgets to the procurement of expensive and underutilized equipment for graduate or personal research. Such purchases strike us as a terrible misuse of resources; some members of faculty seem blissfully unaware that a period of financial constraint exists. Our experience is unanimous that much greater care must be taken by the Deans that basic equipment be readily available before university resources are allocated to what ought to be items of decidely lower priority.

The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A15: that the restoration of currently inadequate levels in the supply of basic equipment to at least minimum viable levels be regarded as a very high priority. We further recommend that Deans and department heads ensure that suitable priorities are established within their jurisdictions between the needs of undergraduate and graduate work and personal research.

(ii) 1. The Library

Here, too, we cannot overemphasize the point which we made in our first submission: a well-run, adequately staffed, accessible library is a crucial component in the university structure. But reductions already made have cut deeply into the Library's ability to fulfill its functions, and we strongly support the emphasis of the Principal's Committee on the central need to maintain acquisitions budgets at least at current levels, with sufficient additional funding to cover inflation.

We recommend

Rec. No. A16: that a very high priority be given to increasing allocations for library acquisitions.

But this is not enough. We feel that the Principal's Committee has understressed the fact that damage has already been done by misdirected budgetary reductions. Again, the selection of areas for paring has been poorly made. We have already seen a steady deterioration in the quality of the library system, and we feel that now is an opportune time to reorganize and upgrade these facilities. The library ought to be a major research centre for the undergraduate programme, with maximum accessibility of materials for use, coupled with a diversified collection, of sufficient depth and breadth, to support a vital graduate student and faculty research programme. What we have now falls far short of these goals. The cataloguing backlog is enormous; even basic books take an impossibly long time to reach the shelves. Hours of service have already been cut; there are severe weaknesses in many of the collections, particularly periodicals.

But what does the Principal's Committee now offer us? It promises us further curtailed services and reduced hours, since we cannot take seriously the proposition that desk services might be handled by volunteer labour. At a time when we must upgrade a dangerously underfunded resource, the Principal's Committee offers us only further trimming. This strikes us as a further moving away from the University's clear responsibility to maintain this crucial facility, it involves a failure to point to real reforms which could enhance the library's ability to fulfill its function, while at the same time contributing to alleviating the problem of financial constraint.

What can be done? We feel strongly that the decentralized nature of the University library system is itself a source of substantial inefficiencies. These should be a source of concern, and a focus for action. Aside from the central library, the University operates twenty-one branch libraries. If convenience were the only criterion in library service, this splintering might be acceptable; in times of financial constraint, it results in costly and unnecessary duplication both in staff and resources. We realize that some of these branches are indispensible (the McArthur Library is an obvious example) and that Douglas Library could never handle a massive transfer from all of these branches, but we feel that the University must be planning for a more centralized and less costly system.

We recommend

Rec. No. A17: that the University undertake a detailed and critical reexamination of the cost effectiveness of the decentralized university library system, with the intention of providing a long-range plan to effect savings through integration of current collections.

We further recommend that the Senate Library Committee be requested to examine critically the auxiliary services provided by the Library, with a view towards cost-cutting.

We note, with approval, the suggestion of the Chief Librarian in his latest report, that charges for some kinds of research services might become necessary.

(ii) 2. The Computing Centre

The Principal already has before him the report of the Office of Academic Planning, "Working Paper on Pricing and Funding of Computer Services and Related Matters". The discussion there indicates some of the complexities of funding a facility such as the Computing Centre. It also makes clear that, with our present staff and hardware, the Centre is substantially under-utilized, our experience has been that there is significant wastage in the current operation of it. But as in the case of the Library, what we are offered by the Principal's Committee are not constructive reforms to ensure greater productivity at a lower cost, but a reduction in the central purpose of the facility, user services. This is an alternative which the working paper specifically discourages (p.7).

It strikes us that restricting access to an important resource is false economy, an inaccessible resource is no resource at all. Of the fifty people on staff, we feel that those involved in user services are the least expendable. We would prefer to see a reexamination of this problem, from a view of maintaining user services as much as possible We also question whether the current proliferation of computer terminals, much like branch libraries, is really cost-effective. The A M S recommends

Rec. No. A18: that the maintenance of user services be given the highest priority within the Computing Centre, and that the question of savings in this area be referred to any new Committee on Financial Constraint for further study.

(iii) Examination Service

With all due respect to the faculty as a group, we question that their substitution for Registrar's Office staff will effect the savings suggested, without resulting in significant loss in the effectiveness of the service provided. What we see as a result of the implementation of this recommendation would be a very unhappy group of faculty, very unequal levels of examination supervision-and students suffering from the effects of both.

We feel that many areas received insufficient study to justify the recommendations of the Principal's Committee; this service is one of those areas. It seems to us that the case, for or against reductions in (or elimination of) this service have yet to be made There is some strong feeling that Queen's T V has outlived its usefulness, while others believe just as strongly that significant progress in cost-cutting might be achieved, while maintaining academic standards, by an expansion of this unit. We feel that the matter deserves more critical study.

The A M S recommends

Rec. No. A19: that the effectiveness of Queen's Television be referred to any new Financial Constraint Committee for further study.

SECTION D: ACADEMIC STAFF

Before responding directly to the Committee's section on academic staff, we must address ourselves to three important issues, affecting the academic quality of the university, namely, staff terminations, salary policy and teaching loads. These issues have always been basic to the achievement of our academic goals, and our recommendations are directed above all to the improvement of academic quality It should be particularly noted that these problems must be addressed regardless of the financial situation of the university. Until now, we have been able to avoid these issues, the stringencies imposed by financial constraint, however, make our recommended actions imperative, simply to maintain the current level of quality

Our recommendations all stem from our fundamental belief that the performance of those in academic positions must be assessed on a continual basis, and not just at the time of appointment or the granting of tenure. The utility of performance assessments are at least two-fold. First, if the staff member is judged to be inadequate then quite obviously the University would benefit academically by his-her removal. Secondly, if a staff member is judged to be superior, then the University should acknowledge this with a substantial merit award. Merit awards and terminations must stem from the same assessment criteria, and must be considered curcial to the maintenance and improvement of educational quality. We cannot stress too strongly our discontent with a university which aspires to excellence, yet fails among its own staff to assess merit honestly, or reward it adequately.

Teaching loads must also be assessed so that the university can be assured that any disparities there do not impede its efforts to attain its academic goals.

In the last portion of this section, we will address the specific recommendations made in the Report of the Principal's Committee.

Staff Termination

The Report's recommendation concerning academic staff terminations is its only hard edge. Financial constraints are immaterial here because some terminations are necessary strictly for academic reasons. However, the current financial climate does afford the University the means to rid itself of incompetent staff. The quality of the institution will be enhanced, student morale will be boosted, public confidence in the University's responsibility will be increased and faculty morale can be little harmed by having the worst staff removed from their midst. Indeed faculty would cease to be tarred with the same brush used on those who have abused their position within the university community and their responsibilities to society.

The non-academic staff component of the budget has already been considerably reduced at Queen's to protect all academic staff. So it is important that terminations be made earlier rather than later and quickly rather than slowly.

The A.M.S recommends

Rec. No. A20: that necessary staff terminations be effected before any other reductions and that all terminations be completed by 1978. The majority of these must not be term appointees.

Salary Policy

The Report has noted the profound effect of salary policy on the financial situation of the university. There is a similarly profound effect on the academic situation. The Report's recommended policy of staff terminations will improve academic quality if done selectively. The Report dismisses a policy of salary decreases, but admits "continuing discussion" of salary policy is needed.

A third and academically sound policy option is still available: the implementation of a meaningful merit award system

The Report of the Principal's Committee exhibits a curious philosophic dichotomy in its treatment of academic staff as compared to all other members of the university community. The overall thrust of its recommendations dictates that most students, non-academic staff and administrative departments must suffer some, but a few of the most vulnerable members of the academic staff must suffer all. This constitutes a betrayal of the community spirit of the university.

The usual argument made against any recommendation of salary decreases is that some of the best and most mobile staff might choose to leave the University. The decrease necessary to meet the Committee's projected saving is only 1 per cent of the salary budget per annum and we question whether such a cut would have such a drastic impact. Also, it is debatable whether people who would choose to leave because of a 1 per cent decrease would be a greater loss than those whose positions might be terminated. Here it must be noted that the importance of money to the best academic staff can be overemphasized, and that the role of salary should be discussed in conjunction with the other benefits to be derived from a university position. The opportunity to teach and do independent research, the satisfaction of defining one's own job and hours, and the university's current place in society are all more important in the life of good academic staff than dollars.

The problem of mobile staff can be circumvented if necessary salary decreases are offset for the best staff by a policy which honestly rewards merit.

There is now a component of Queen's salaries labelled a "career development increment" but it is not a meaningful merit award. These increments are not determined in accord with any publicly defined or approved policy. This policy vacuum is serious and surprising in view of the very clear procedures established for appointment, promotion, tenure and leave. In practice the increments are only 2-3 per cent of salary and are very similar in amount for most staff, implying rather uniform "development". The increments are incorporated into the individual's base salary so that a few productive years suffice to guarantee a well above average salary independent of subsequent career performance. Increments have also been used to raise the salaries of the entire staff in a particular field or department (e.g. economics, law) to some perceived "market level" under the guise of recognizing career development.

Merit awards should instead be made on an individual basis in accord with a publicly approved policy. They should be substantial in order to ensure that the best staff are recognized even in the face of general base salary decreases. The merit award is a bonus, a very prestigious bonus, for superlative performance on the particular year's work If treated as such, it will be recognized as such by all members of the university community and society at large.

The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A21: that a small, but broadly-based joint Board of Trustees - Senate task force be struck immediately to outline a university policy and mechanism for awarding a substantially larger portion of the academic salary budget according to individual merit in performing the year's duties.

Salary decreases in conjunction with a merit award system will enable the university to meet its financial constraints objectives while retaining the best academic staff.

Teaching Loads

The general staffing policy of non-replacement recommended in the Report means an inevitable increase in the student-staff ratio. This might be reflected in larger class sizes, as envisaged in the Report's introduction, or instead in increased teaching loads. But what is the teaching load? The rapid growth of the university has led to significant disparities in teaching loads across campus.

A M S. recommends

Rec. No. A22: that clearer definitions of required teaching loads be established and that increases in the student-staff ratio be reflected in more teaching hours per staff member and not simply in larger classes.

The disparities in teaching loads that now exist among and within departments are due to the complete lack of any definition of what teaching responsibilities are to be fulfilled by staff members. The dictum occasionally heard, thought to be applicable in Arts and Science, of a 2½ (or is it 3?) course load ignores the different levels of effort required in lecture and seminar courses, and at most it represents a maximum, not an average, load. It also ignores the fact that scheduled lecture hours may not be actually used (eg. the outright cancellation of Friday afternoon lectures) The question of whether the instructor has any teaching assistance in tutorials, seminar groups and marking does not seem to be a part of any decision as to course load; neither is any recognition given to thesis supervision, whether undergraduate or graduate, in assigning course loads; and disparities in theses loads are even greater than in formal teaching loads. Informal contact with students is just as important as formal teaching, and while difficult to quantify, it is obvious that such contact varies tremendously from staff member to staff member. Finally disparities have arisen due to the double numbering of courses (undergraduate 400-graduate 800) wherein some staff members, under the current fuzzy feeling for course load, may claim double credit for teaching a single course.

A clear definition of all teaching responsibilities will enable the university to evaluate the cost of current inequalities and to decide whether the costs incurred by staff members with lighter loads can still be justified. Community decisions will have to be made to define course load, taking cognizance of the differences among faculties, among lecture, seminar, laboratory and tutorial hours, the availability of teaching assistance and the demands of thesis supervision. The modest increases in student-staff ratio projected in the short term can easily be accommodated by identifying and increasing any excessively light loads, a solution that is more equitable and acceptable than increased class size.

By bringing the academic staff into greater contact with students, this solution will also restore the primary importance of teaching in the university and reduce the current overemphasis on publication and personal research.

The rapid growth period has also led to some creeping course proliferation. The value of an undergraduate education is exposure to broad areas of the field before specializing at an honours or graduate level. However, in order to provide riding rings for pet hobby horses, there has been an unhealthy trend towards increasing course offerings regardless of academic goals or student interest. While the student-staff ratio should be increased primarily through teaching hours, some increase should also be effected by eliminating small enrolment, specialized undergraduate courses and so improving academic quality.

1. Casual Academic Staff

Casual academic funds constitute an immense ($3 million according to the Report), unaccounted for, university "slush fund". No one has compiled information as to precisely where and how departments spend these funds, although it is known that some of it goes to pay full-time faculty, some to entertain visiting speakers, and some to pay teaching assistants. The Report recommends reducing assignments, laboratories, tutorials etc. in order to save a substantial portion of these funds, noting that this economy is not to affect graduate students. If the School of Graduate Studies and Research is correct in its belief (based, of course, on less than precise information) that most of the casual academic funds are used to employ graduate students, it is difficult to imagine how the criteria enunciated in the Report can be met. This uncertainty underlines again the Report's pre-occupation with Central Services and its continuing ignorance of where economies might be affected in the far larger faculty budgets.

More important, however, is the Report's assumption that reducing assignments, laboratories and tutorials while maintaining the same lecture and seminar hours will still allow the University to achieve its academic goals. Feedback on assignments and experience gained in laboratories and tutorials is absolutely vital to the learning process. It cannot be replaced by merely "exercising greater individual initiative".

The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A23: that there be no reductions in assignments or in laboratory or tutorial contact hours even if this means some reduction in the full-time academic staff budget.

Of course reducing the full-time academic staff budget need not necessitate terminations (see Salary Policy) nor reduced contact hours (see Teaching Loads). Other casual academic funds, whatever they are, might well be reduced and we strongly urge the University to find out precisely what they are and what they are used for.

2. Term-Appointed and Tenured Staff

(a) Retirements: It should not be necessary to replace most retiring staff since their immediate pre-retirement years are not in general nearly so productive as earlier years and the departments will have accommodated this already. Early retirements, both compulsory and voluntary, should also be considered.

(b) Resignations and Deaths: It should only be essential to replace such staff in isolated cases and the Report's assumption of 50 per cent replacement is much too high

(c) Reduced Period of Responsibility:

Much more substantial savings could be made in this area by having some academic staff on eight or nine months, or even four out of five day, appointments. This will be easier to implement once a clear definition of teaching and supervision responsibilities is made, leaving the remaining time free for research and administration if the staff member is on a university salary or for alternate work if on a reduced period salary. Those with services for hire outside the university could continue such consulting, yet maintain a reduced period university appointment and elaborate University restrictions on such external activities would no longer be necessary.

(d) Negotiated Leaves: Leaves should in general be negotiated only for staff who will not be replaced or else no saving will be realized. Again the 50 per cent replacement figure is too high.

(e) Over-Load Teaching: With a clear definition of course load and with opportunities for reduced period appointments, it would no longer be possible for staff to be paid twice for the same working hour. Overload teaching also includes that performed at other institutions, a frequent oversight in the past.

(f) Terminations: The first portion of the response to this section of the Report noted the need for some terminations of tenured and possibly term staff to improve academic quality. Other reductions in the academic staff budget will also be achieved by implementing a new salary policy which offsets salary decreases with meaningful merit awards, by equalizing course loads, by not replacing staff and by reducing periods of responsibility. If additional terminations must be made to achieve the required reduction in the academic budget, then the same provisos discussed above must apply.

SECTION E: STUDENT SERVICES

1. Don's and Wardens' Apartments

We concur with the Report on this matter and wish only to point out that Dons in Women's Residence are already being paid for from residence funds.

2, 3, and 4. Dean of Women, Student Counselling Service and the Padre

We agree with this recommendation that the residence management and operation function of the Dean of Women's position be funded from the residence budget. We would further suggest that there is in fact no need for this function to be fulfilled by a Dean. An administrative post, parallel to the one existing in the Men's Residence, should be established to handle these duties. It may, as well, be possible to amalgamate the two offices into one and thereby pare the budget.

It is recognized that the Dean of Women also performs a women's counselling role. Again the logic for having this function performed by a Dean escapes us. However, this type of counselling is seen by the Committee to be a necessity. The fulfillment of this counselling role must be viewed in the more all-encompassing context of student counselling. The Committee recognized the need for both academic and personal counselling of female students. With regards to the former, the Committee would recommend that the University take immediate steps to implement Recommendations 40 and 41 of its own Report of the Principal's Committee on the Status of Women At Queen's. The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A24: that the University take immediate steps to implement Recommendations 40 and 41 of the Report of the Principal's Committee on the Status of Women at Queen's.

The personal counselling of women, however, must be viewed as an integral part of the Student Counselling Service.

The Report though recommends the discontinuation of this service, a recommendation which the A.M.S. must flatly reject. We feel strongly that the University has a social responsibility to deal with the individual problems of some 10,000 members of its community. It is a responsibility which the University cannot abrogate.

We do not deny, however, the need for a critical assessment of the Student Counselling Service. It is suggested that the service be de-institutionalized, People who have a talent for personal counselling could clearly be identified as counsellors, but would not necessarily be housed under one roof. In fact, there may be some advantages in having peripheral counsellors in different geographical locations. In many ways this is an extension of the manner in which the Padre and the Dean of Women carry out their counselling roles. It should be clear, however, that it is the person, not the title, which is important. The Padre, as a case in point, was a person which the committee felt should not, and could not, be replaced. A replacement for the personal counselling function he fulfilled must be found, hopefully under the guise of the Student Counselling Service.

Psychologieal testing is one serviee which is not dupliealed anywhere else in Kingston and is not fundable under OHIP. It is viewed as an integral part of many facets of student counselling, and as such, any cutbacks in this area would be unacceptable. The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A25: that the University undertake a review of the Student Counselling Service with an eye to improvement rather than elimination, and that it continue to fund this service.

Under the realm of Student Services, the Psychiatric seetion of the Student Health Service was seen to be a necessity. The reasoning is the same as that for the Student Counselling Service. It is recommended that the Psychiatric section be operated on the same referral basis as was suggested for the general health Service in Section A.

5. Career Planning and Placement

The Committee felt that it did not have sufficient insight into this area to enter into detailed analysis. The Report's recommendation however, appears to be a blind and arbitrary cut. It was our feeling that a more detailed review should be undertaken, before any substantial cuts are initiated, giving consideration to the idea of eight month appointments and the institution of a registration or finders fee which would be levied against corporations who use the service.

6. Student Bus Service (Bus-it)

It must be stated that the Committee considered the Report's recommendation, with regards to Bus-It, to be decidedly unacceptable. It must be remembered that the University accepted the gift of McArthur College from the government, built the new stadium, and erected the large number of residences that now exist. These West Campus Residences house a large number of undergraduate as well as married students, who must attend classes on the Main Campus. For the other students, it is obvious that they must have ready access to the central services, which in most cases are available only on the main campus. In addition, because of the increased number of students that the University has enrolled during the last few years, the pressure for housing in areas contiguous to the campus is severe. Students are being forced to live further and further from the campus, and some form of mass transportation is rapidly becoming imperative. Finally, the University must uphold its responsibility to integrate the West Campus and the Main Campus

It is in this light that the University's current percentage contribution to the service is viewed as the absolute minimum. It should be stated as well, that the University is expected to maintain, or better, this percentage even in the face of rising costs for the scheme. Any other move can only be considered an abandonment of its responsibility. The A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A26: that the University maintain its percentage contribution to Bus-It despite increasing total costs for the service.

CONCLUSION: MATTERS OF IMPORTANCE

1) Salary Policy

Though we have already made a number of comments on this crucial topic in our response to the Committee's recommendations on academic staff reductions, some further general comments are in order. We would like to impress upon the administration of Queen's University that Queen's salary policy, and the contours of the faculty make-up, have distorted the proportion of the University budget currently devoted to academic staff. Even if the changes recommended by the Principal's Committee are made, as the Committee's own figures, contained in figure 2, page 2, make clear, Queen's will still be devoting significantly more to this area than most other universities in Ontario. Because of the inflexibilities inherent in this situation, no easy solutions will be possible. Hard decisions, of the type suggested in our discussion on terminations of academic staff, will be necessary.

The trade-off set forward in the Report of the Principal's Committee, between terminations and lower salaries, is a difficult one. The implication of our alternative, a meaningful merit award system, will mean selective, rather than general, salary decreases coupled with the termination of incompetent staff.

2) Health Sciences

This is a difficult area to assess, but it is clear that the whole health sciences area is a substantial drain on University resources, a drain which BIU income falls well short of covering. No area of the university can hope to remain untouched by constraint.Externally the University must make the point to the Ministries of Colleges and Universities, and of Health, that the province cannot have the benefits of a high-quality medical training facility within the present funding levels. Within the University,the point must be bluntly put: the students in other faculties must not be made to suffer a deterioration of their education in order to provide funds for under-weighted areas. The Principal's Committee preferred that the Ministry of Health, rather than MCU, take on a greater commitment to funding the Health Sciences.

Rec. No. 27: The A.M.S. recommends that the University make strong representations to the Ministry of Health demonstrating the drain which the Health Sciences are on University funds; further, the University should lobby intensively for an increased level of funding for the operating costs of these facilities.

3) Investment Income

The students of Queen's University have been the beneficiaries of the generosity of a large number of donors; we can also be grateful to university authorities for their careful management of these funds We agree with the statement on application of discretionary investment income, with the following reservations:

- We are concerned that a too-strict distinction may be attempted between academically related and non-academically related student services. While it is clear that some rational basis should be devised for fudning policies, the A.M.S will oppose any arbitrary withdrawal of funding from any student service.
- In line with our desire for an increased commitment to the undertaking of innovative teaching techniques (detailed in our discussion below on the instructional process), we feel that the expenditure of investment income for this purpose can result in significant academic returns. We must, at the same time, be strict in the support of start-up costs of new academic programmes or services, ensuring that the cost-effectiveness of these programmes has been evaluated. Strict limits must also be placed on the length of time for which these projects will receive special funding

We support, in the current situation, the Report's recommendation of a freeze on uncommitted capital expenditures. We also recommend that the university officers redouble their cfforts to recover the capital investment in Mackintosh-Corry Hall from the government.

In terms of specific allocations, we wish to note the following:

- We regret that University has denied its very serious responsibilities to graduate student support, by refusing to accept a $3000 minimum income policy for graduate students. Though Queen's has been generous in its allocations towards graduate student support from investment funds, much more needs to be done. We believe that much more can be done, through more careful management of Casual Academic Budget funds, and through more thorough exploitation of externally-funded grants and scholarships Similarly, undergraduate student support is seriously underfunded in this province
- The upgrading of our library holdings and the acquisition of scientific and technical equipment will have no impact on one central purpose of student support, accessibility We feel that Queen's has been less than forthright in dealing with this critical problem. We deplore the alarming deterioration of the socio-economic mix of the students of this University.Queen's has an increasingly upper middle class socio-economic bias, and the purchase of more books or test tubes is an inadequate way to tackle the problem. We feel the university can, and should, do much more.
- We recommend a full review of allocations from investment income to student services; we wish to reiterate our very serious reservations about the Committee's priorities, expressed in our review of Section E. The area of contributions towards cultural activities also needs careful review, we repeat our opposition to cuts in the Performing Arts Office, as outlined in our response to Section B.
- Awards made by the Advisory Research Committee of the School of Graduate Studies and the Senate have been of two types: "seed" grants to junior researchers without established reputations, to start up their research programmes; and computing grants to supplement externally-provided funds. With the dwindling rate of new staff hiring, the need for grants of the first type will be severely cut back. The computer grants appear unnecessary, though "hardship cases" might continue to be reviewed on an individual basis. The reduction in the need of the Advisory Research Committee to act as a granting body will free it for its principal responsibility which is to review the overall state of research at Queen's and to recommend research policies.
- Our concern in relation to past allocations is that funds have been misdirected. Some faculty appear to view university funding as a more attractive substitute for external grants Deans and department heads should be more active in maximizing heads university dependence on external awards, as opposed to university resources.

4) Athletics

The A M.S agrees to undertake a review of the allocation of the athletic fee, though, to do so, we will have to be given a much more detailed accounting of the expenditure of these funds than has been given in the past. We are opposed, in principle, to taking upon ourselves the funding of programmes, such as athletics, which are properly and traditionally the University's responsibility It must also be made clear that non-academic fees are non-transferable Each fee is levied for a specific purpose, and each can be raised or lowered only by a general student referendum

The A M S Committee on Financial Constraint recommends

Rec No B4: that the A.M.S. establish a committee to investigate the allocation of the athletic fee, in keeping with the recommendation of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint. Such a committee should examine how that fee is spent and should determine its adequacy and appropriateness in view of the possible increased financial burden placed on students by the University's deteriorating fiscal situation.

5 Sabbatical Leave Policy

While we support the philosophy behind sabbatical leaves, we wish to raise three matters. First, there seems to have been a distinct lack of follow-up and evaluation by department heads and Deans The concrete results of sabbaticals often appear minimal, and greater efforts must be made to ensure the effectiveness of these leaves. Secondly, we feel that there has been lax administration of the policies regarding payments supplementary to the University's reduced salary allocation Thirdly, we wish to question one impression left by the remarks of the Report of the Principal's Committee Our experience has been that departments often fail to maintain the courses of faculty who are on sabbatical. This is unfortunate, though most students can cope with variations in course offerings if sufficient advance warning is provided But frequently students are given inadequate or no notification of sabbatical arrangements. If the University acts further to make the granting of sabbaticals a positive retraining and financial policy, much more long-term planning must be done by Deans and department heads, to ensure that changes in course offerings will be advertised well in advance, so that students can better plan their academic programmes

6a) The Cost of Democratic Government

We have reviewed SCAD Report No 4, and endorse its recommendations regarding increasing efficiency within committees But efficiency within committees and the effectiveness of a committee structure itself are issues which are in danger of becoming confused. The question is, do we need all the committees, boards, task forces, councils and other administrative bodies that we have?

The current level of "participatory democracy" is the result of a long series of attempts by faculty, staff, and more especially, students, to open up the university to a broader-based decision-making process. As students, we would be loathe to give up such gains. Groups which have traditionally been excluded from the University's decision-making processs — we think particularly of support staff, students and women — have found that current structures, albeit with varying degrees of effectiveness, admit access to a hearing on matter of importance to them as well as permitting input on all other issues. We will participate willingly in discussions leading to committee integration, where such actions genuinely result in savings of time We would also point out that students are rarely the cause of delays, and are definitely cost-effective, in committee work

6b) The Instructional Process

In our introductory remarks we alluded to our disappointment with the meager and belated treatment of this topic in the Report of the Principal's Committee. This lack is particularly disturbing because a number of administrative bodies have already noted the need for modifications in the instructional process SCAD Report No 4, for example, spoke broadly of the need to employ "changes and innovations of various kinds" in order to guarantee "the most effective use of university resources" The decision to embark on a steady state was accompanied by warnings of the necessity of changes in the academic programme in order to make the period, as the Task Force on this subject put it, "a stimulating period of intellectual growth at Queen's".

What has come of years of exhortations? We regret that very little of substance has resulted We have seen many reforms come forward only to be rejected by a tradition-bound faculty, some of whom are intent on maintaining their personal status quo and hence are repelled by any moves towards innovation. The faculty have been raised on a rich diet of unplanned and rapid growth, the expansion of new courses and programmes, and the availability of increased physical resources On the whole, they are unprepared to deal creatively with the limitations of constraint. Powerful direction towards reform must come from somewhere. the "me too" response of the Report of the Principal's Committee constitutes the loss of a perfect opportunity to make more concrete some of the sensible generalizations of the past. The absence of strong leadership by the Principal's Committee on this point reflects a disturbing lack of initiative during the past several years towards creative reform in the instructional process

Our response on this issue has been, and is, unequivocal: significant change in the instructional process will be necessary, in order to maintain quality in times of constraint. We focused our first report to the Principal's Committee squarely on this issue: that initiative seems to have had little effect. The point needs to be made again: quality and the maintenance of the status quo are not the same thing. In order to live within financial constraint, faculty and students alike will have to work together towards a new order. It is clear that, at least in the first instance, the burden of work will fall largely on the faculty, in making any new system operate effectively.

The question is, how do we proceed? Faculty, administration and students will have to join together in an honest commitment to melding innovation and a quality curriculum There are clear directions to be taken: they are by no means original with us, but their central importance is enhanced by our belief that we are rapidly nearing a point where options will progressively become closed to us. We must look at core courses, at greater interdisciplinary and multidisciplinary research at all levels, at greater use of independent study programmes, at the incidence of course overlap, at changes in the number of courses offered, at streaming, at the reduction of the number of classroom hours, and at an increase in student-directed learning. Central to any modifications will be a continuing evaluation of the instructional process, an evaluation which is sensitive to educational needs and critical of current practices

We have had sufficient discussion of these problems at the university-wide level: it is now time for constructive action by individual members of faculty, by departments and by the various Faculty Boards. Therefore, the A.M.S. recommends

Rec. No. A28: that substantive action now be taken by individual members of faculty, by departments and by Faculty Boards, based on an extensive and critical review of course and programme offerings, in order to improve the quality of the instructional process at Queen's University.

The A.M.S itself needs to examine this whole question in greater detail; therefore the A M S. Committee on Financial Constraint recommends

Rec. No. B5: that the A.M.S. direct the Education Commission to fulfill its responsibility "to conduct an ongoing analysis of the educational process of the university" as provided in Bylaw 4, section 1(a) of the A.M.S. Constitution and Bylaws.

wind roaring through highest pinnacles of light whirling in arched black depth blows a few fickle stars off balance; falling, streaming into our darkened forest
there is a silent wailing of fire behind the cruising wind, nonchalant having completed its mischief returns to more familiar lands;

moon-pulled, this wrecker of heavens
flickers our weak candle flame, and raises the delicate hairs on your arms with a shivering reflection of cold vcancy.

the soft wind gentles our

CBC presents:

A Doll's House

When Henrik Ibsen's play A Doll's House was first staged in 1880, it became a heated topic of discussion in drawing rooms and theatre lobbies all over Europe. The slamming of the door as Nora walked out on her husband and children was echoed in the rallying cry for women's rights. Recent stage and film productions starring such actresses as Claire Bloom, Jane Fonda and Liv Ullman have been regarded as vehicles for the cause of women's liberation and Ibsen has turned into a kind of patron saint of feminists.

Director Ron Hartmann doesn't see it that way at all. "It's a problem of social injustice, a drama between people," he says firmly. Last fall he directed a new adaptation specially commissioned from writer-actress Marian Waldman, for the Bastion Theatre Company in Victoria. He then persuaded Robert Weaver, head, CBC Radio Arts programming, to let him direct it for CBC Radio.

Hartmann's production of A Doll's House, starring Irena Mayeska in a re-creation of her stage role from the Bastion Theatre, will be aired on CBC Tuesday Night, October 21 at 8:03 p.m. (Thursday, Oct. 23 at 8:30 p.m. on CBC-FM's Encore).

Completing the cast are Frank Perry as Nora's pompous husband Torvald Helmer; Frances Hyland as Mrs. Linde, Nora's friend and confidante; Ruth Springford as Anna-Marie, the children's nanny; Sandy Webster as Dr. Rank, the family friend who is dying; and Jack Creley as Krogstad, the blackmailer and catalyst for Nora's awakening and release from the gilded cage.

Special music for the production is composed and conducted by Morris Surdin, who, incidentally, has written the background scores for three other versions of A Doll's House. Production assistant is Cheryl Willett, technician is Derek Stubbs, with sound effects by Bill Robinson.

Last April Hartmann won the ACTRA Award for best dramatic performance for his portrayal of the title role in Othello, aired on CBC Tuesday Night last year. That production was adapted from a Theatre New Brunswick staging directed by Ted Follows. In January, Hartmann played in Sheridan's School For Scandal, again for Follows and Theatre New Brunswick. It, too, was adapted for radio and broadcast in July.

During the CBC Tuesday Night Season of Celebrated Comedies in February, Hartmann played the lead in Christopher Hampton's The Philanthropist; he'll also be heard in a program about the history of the Salvation Army in Canada scheduled for Nov. 25.

Renewing his association with Marian Waldman, he has produced a new play by her about life in an old folks' home, Twenty Years of Twilight, scheduled for CBC Stage, Dec. 20. He also directed Freak by Mayor Moore coming up on CBC Tuesday Night, Oct. 14. His CBC Stage production of Back to Beulah won for W.O. Mitchell the ACTRA Award for best drama writer.

Currently he is teaching a course for directors, and working with Canadian playwrights Carol Bolt, Eric Nicol and Grace Richardson on three new scripts for CBC Stage.

Hartmann obviously enjoys the mobility which allows him to move from stage to studio to control room. His knowledge of working both sides of the stage and mike gives him a greater awareness and understanding of the other side's problems.

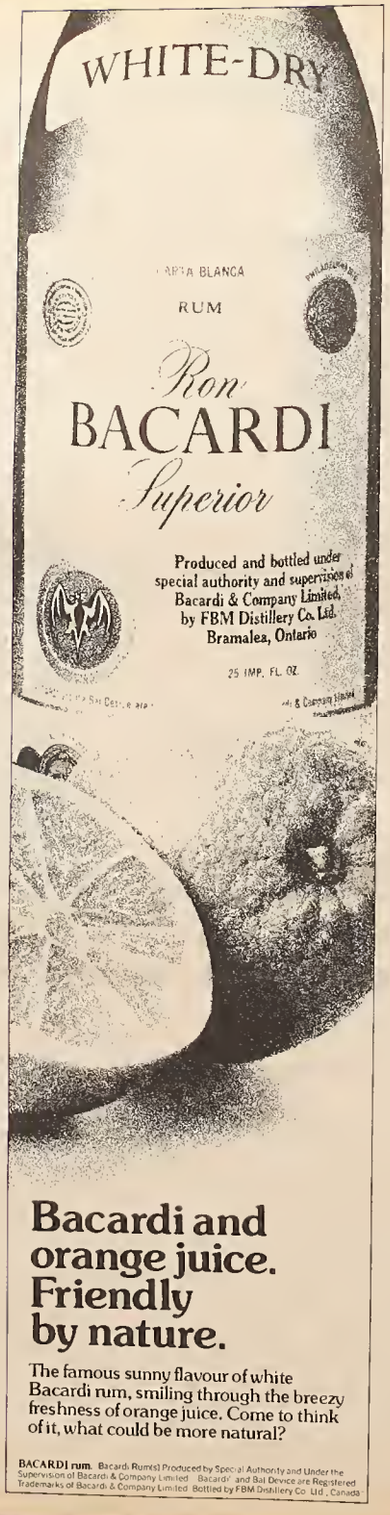
Bullfrog leaps on

by Sandra Bernstein

Bronco Bullfrog, the second work screened in the New Cinema Series, might be termed a documentary-fiction film. Director Barney Platts-Mills shot it in the Stratford area of London's east End, using local adolescents as actors. Apparently these kids played a large part in shaping the plot and style of the film, although its overall success and visual unity may be attributed to Mills' organizing presence.

The film centres around the adolescent love affair of Del and Irene, whose main problem is that they have no place where they can be alone. Any efforts to escape their gloomy, violent milieu seem futile. They finally take refuge with Bronco Bullfrog, a reform school refugee whose life epitomizes the irregular moral code and stopgap consumerism of Stratford.

Mills' accomplishment lies in his portrayal of this environment and the way he conveys visually that its inhabitants are trapped in it, doomed to repeat the dull vocations or crimes of their parents.



Using grainy black and white stock, his camera roams the streets with the kids, frames them in grey tunnels or gloomy, cramped, noisy interiors, watches as doors are slammed in their faces. Their constant motion is always horizontal; the camera is locked into a level or down angle.

Even in an abortive escape to the country, the lovers are not allowed an open, long vista, but are confined in a rutted path or surrounded by shrubs. All these factors make the audience share their claustrophphobia.

The actors speak a colorful, laconic dialect which, we are told, is unintelligible a few miles from their district. Mills stresses this social barrier by putting the action behind English subtitles, which often do not correspond with what the characters are actually saying. This interplay between two sets of dialogue raises questions about the politics of language.

Given the utter boredom and constant search for sensation (crime, TV, watching motorcycle racing) that are endemic to Stratford, one wonders how making this film changed the lives of the participants. Perhaps Mills will make a documentary on them, five years after Bronco Bullfrog. One hopes that some have continued acting careers, especially the principals, who convey very well the strange mixture of teenager and middle-ager that results from a Stratford adolescence.

The next screening in the series is Decameron by Italian Pier Pasolini. It will be shown on October 31.

Winners

Enough wit for a comedy; enough death for a tragedy

by Donald Rayko

Brian Friel's Winners is a simple enough play.

On a sunny June morning, planning to study for final examinations, Mag and Joe climb to the top of the hill overlooking their home town, Ballymore, County Tyrone. Joe is seventeen and a half. Mag is seventeen and pregnant; they are engaged to be married in three week's time. They study, dream, joke, quarrel and finally descend, giddily intent on "borrowing" a boat for a madcap lark on the local lake.

In the course of the periodic interpolations by two narrators, we early on learn that Mag and Joe, non-swimmers both, are drowned. Subsequent intercalations dwell on the search, the discovery of the bodies, the post mortem, the inquest, and finally the observation is made that "life goes on".

Last week's Drama Department production, under the direction of Maurice Breslow, started out well. It began with grace, charm and wit. But as the performance wore on, it became increasingly tiresome; until finally, as Mag and Joe skipped off toward their imminent deaths, it had achieved a pinnacle of mordant boredom.

It is difficult to know quite where to lay the blame, or at least, how to apportion it. The play, itself, is rich in possibilities for cheap irony and schlock sentiment, but Breslow and company seemed inordinately eager and ready to milk it for every last sniff and sigh--So young, so promising, so tragic (sniff)! but, yeas, life does go on, doesn't it (sigh). The verdict is, therefore, open.

Lorraine Forbes's performance as Mag was a joy. Pretty, vibrant, ingenuous, she showed a sense of pace and technical confidence that impressed and delighted. Mag does nearly all the talking in the first half of the play, and Ms. Forbes made it work; she laughed, pouted, joked, and we believed. It was as the magnitude of her contribution decreased that the show began to die.

Leonard Judge's Joe was disappointingly clumsy. Mr. Judge's movements were awkward, his voice (with its dubious brogue) monotonously unmodulated, and his characterization sterile. A bore.

Frances McArthur and Richard Trousdell, the narrators, had fine, flat voices and competent no-nonsense deliveries. Bernard Burkom's design and Richard Bronskill's incidental music were simple, clean and pleasant.

Winners has enough wit to make it a comedy, and enough death to make it a tragedy. I suppose that the ultimate shortcoming of this production was that it failed to intimate the necessary connection between the two

X-Country victorious

Queen's victorious for the third straight meet defending the title it won last year against teams from U. of T., Guelph, Waterloo, York, R.M.C. and Ryerson.

Standings	Pts.
Queen's A	45
U. of T.	69
Guelph A.	88
Waterloo	106
York	157
Queen's B	169

The meet's individual winner was Bill Marcotte from Ryerson who is a member of Canada's national team.

In second place was the top Queen's Runner, Clauss Rinne, who has been having a fantastic competitive season as a freshman.

Queen's also tied down fourth and fifth spots with Murray Hale and Mark Fields. Murray has been showing continuing improvement in each race this fall and Mark is also having a fine season and is definitely in the best shape of his life.

Max Barr was the fourth Queen's runner, finishing 15th in the field of 67, with Mice Seguida behind him finishing 19th.

In addition the fine performances of Ian Gales and Roger Wheate from the Gael's B team have made coach Walter's decision about who should represent Queen's in the OUAA's very difficult. Other Queen's runners worth mentioning were Bob McCormack, John Edwards, Dale Freisen, Art Stelpstra and Mike Riley.

Anne Brown also accompanied the team and was the meet's top woman runner competing over the same six mile course as the men.

Next week some of the Gaels will be up in Ottawa for the Eastern Ontario Championships while the rest will travel down to the London Open cross country meet.

Track and Field does well by Beav.

Last Friday at McMaster saw the Track and Field Gaels stretching their legs in the first meet of the short outdoor season. Although the temperature was a pleasant relief from the wintry days of the weeks before, a strong wind made for gruelling races and disappointingly slow times. Nevertheless a number of results were good enough for the finals in Sudbury.

Rookie Lauren MacWilliam placed fourth in the Women's 200 metre hurdles.

Tom Dixon, Vic Goodings, Duncan Card and Stan Woodman ran strong heats in the men's 100 metre Card and Gooding advanced to the finals to place 1st and 3rd respectively.

Adam Shoemaker hung on through a tough 5000 metres to place 2nd. In the men's 400m. some new faces for Queen's - Clyde Shepherd, Tony Verhoeven (not so new!) Tim Paige, and Steacy Merritt - made a creditable showing with 4th, 7th, 8th and 12th spots.

Women's captain Jan Pipe was the only representative of the distaff side of the Queen's team to run the 400 m. but managed a fifth place out of 11 runners.

Captain Marc Macaulay beat U. of T.'s Mike Hart Handily in the 110m hurdles. Newcomer Anne MacMillan, a strong runner, led the Queen's middle distance crew, placing third in the women's 1500m.

Bob MacCormack won a squeaker of a race over Pat McKeigan of Waterloo in the men's 1500m. Paul Spence and Jeff Giles both look to be headed for a good season - they pulled off a 3rd and 5th respectively

The 4 x 100m relay teams (men's and women's) were 2nd and the men's 4x400m relay team beat a power-packed U. of T. team to come 1st.

In the field there were impressive performances from Peter Becke and John Darlington (1st and 2nd in triple jump, 2nd and 3rd in long jump) and Tony Verhoeven, placing 1st in javelin.

Karen Rahn was fourth in women's discus with team-mates Sue Sisson taking fifth spot. Lynn Souter was fourth in the women's long jump.

This Friday the Gaels and Gals travel to Waterloo where they will be looking to meet the all important standards for competition in the outdoor finals at Laurentian the following weekend. In the meantime they fervently hope that Walt learns to control his foot fetish.

Archery tournament

by Wendy Earl

The Maid Marions of Queen's archery team were in Guelph last Saturday for Part One of the OWIAA Outdoor Championships. The tournament was won by the strong Toronto team. Guelph and Western were a close second and third respectively, followed by Queen's in fourth. Top individual shooter was Linda Kasienko from Guelph with 787 points.

The tournament consisted of a Junior 900 round, shot at 45 metres, 35 metres, and 25 metres.

Part Two of the OWIAA Outdoor Championships will be held at Queen's on October 17-18.

P.S. Special thanks to members of the Queen's field hockey team who came over and gave us moral support.

LAW SCHOOL

ADMISSION TEST

The Law School Admission Test required of candidates for most Canadian law schools will be given at centres in Canada on October 11th, 1975, December 6th, 1975, February 7th, 1976 and April 19th, 1976. The test will be given at Queen's on October 11th, 1975 and February 7th, 1976.

Candidates are advised to make separate application to each law school of their choice and to ascertain from each whether it requires the Law School Admission Test. Queen's University Faculty of Law does require the test. Since law schools select their first year classes in the spring preceding entrance, candidates for admission to next year's classes are advised to take the test as early as possible. Queen's University Faculty of Law recommends that the test be taken no later than February 7th, 1976.

The half-day objective test is given in the morning. It is designed to measure certain mental abilities deemed important in the study of law, and thus to aid law schools in assessing the academic potential of their applicants. The Law School Admission Bulletin, which includes sample questions, registration information, a list of test centres, and a registration form should be obtained by candidates in Canada at least 8 weeks in advance of the desired testing date. The registration form and fees must be sent airmail and post-marked forty-eight days before the test date to guarantee being tested. Registration material may be obtained from most universities or law faculties, including the Queen's Faculty of Law, General Office, in Macdonald Hall, or by writing directly to Law School Admission Services, Box 944, Princeton, New Jersey 08S40, U.S.A.

Blues Overpower Gaels 32 to 10

by Tom Shand

Under ideal weather conditions at George Richardson Memorial Stadium on Saturday, the University of Toronto Blues soundly defeated the Queen's Golden Gaels by a score of 32 to 10. The Gael's performance was much improved from last week's fiasco at Varsity Stadium but the end result was much the same as the Gael's are simply not strong enough to handle the league leading Blues. However it was an entertaining afternoon of football for about ten thousand fans as the Gael's passing attack showed promise for the first time this season.

The final outcome was never in serious jeopardy although the Gaels did gain momentum when the Queen's defence, led by Dick Bakker, blocked a 23 yard field goal attempt by Mike Sokoonin late in the first half. Norm Hagarty recovered the ball on the Queen's 43 yard line and for the first time in the game the Queen's offense was effective in moving the ball. The drive culminated with Doug Latham's 11 yard touchdown pass to Colin Nickerson who had one of his finest afternoons in a Gael's uniform as he caught four passes for 43 yards.

In the final play of the first half Bob O'Doherty (4 catches-71 yards) received a Latham pass for a 30 yard gain. This play altered the fans to the fact that the Gaels held no intention of surrendering. However, the Gaels came into the match knowing that if they were to maintain any hope of defeating the Blues they could not afford to make any mistakes. The Gaels threw up a couple of interceptions but what hurt even more were two roughing penalties they received which set up the Blues' third touchdown early in the third quarter. The Gael defense had originally held the Toronto attack to five yards on three tries from the 15, but the second penalty in the drive gave the Blues a first down on our 5 yard line. On the following play U. of T. quarterback Langley took it himself for the major. The point after was missed but the damage had been done.

The Blues looked much sharper than last week as their passing attack improved vastly with the return of Mark Ackley who caught five passes for 103 yards, including two touchdowns. Mark Bragagnolo was held to 66 yards rushing but fellow all-star Libert Castillo devastated the Queen's defense with 125 yards on 12 carries. Toronto's excellent offensive line proved to be too strong for the Gaels whose most effective penetration came when they blitzed their outside linebackers.

Queen's offensive line were unable to move the huge defensive line of the Blues and as a result our rushing game was limited to 81 yards, compared to well over 200 yards for the Blues. Once again our defense was on the field for most of the sixty minutes. In the final analysis the Blues' balanced attack and weight advantage in the pits combined with a solid defense virtually void of weakness, proved to be too much for the Gaels to tackle.

At this point the Gael's playoff hopes are dim. A victory next week is essential but speaking realistically we stand very little chance of victory over the Ottawa GeeGees who are co-favourites with Toronto to win the College Bowl. The Gaels are trying hard to put a winning season together in Coach Tindall's final season but it is only a 8even game schedule and our record now stands at 1 win and 3 losses.

Notes: Darrel Penner interrupted 2 passes and Jim D'Andrea got his first. Many alumni were present Saturday afternoon and the entire crowd was very appreciative of the excellent half-time show and the pre-game sky-diving display. Mark Redfern and Brian Titley were both injured. Early word on Redfern is that it's a torn knee cartilage and a cracked wrist while Titley's injury was also to the knee. Darrel Craig looks like our best bet for All-Star recognition.

Waterpolo "submerges" victorious

Queen's held the first OUAA East Division tournament this past weekend and the Waterpolo Gaels emerged victorious in the season opener.

The tournament opened with a game between Queen's and R.M.C. Coach Simon Beitler and the Queen's players would like to give a special thank-you to the Queen's Marching Band and cheerleaders who paraded into the gallery to give the waterpolo team a tremendous sense of spirit which carried them on to victory. Queen's dominated the game against R.M.C. and outstanding performances were made by Queen's captain Mike Fox who scored five times, and Dave Kay, Queen's goalie who stopped the hard shooting R.M.C. team and gave up only three goals. Paul Nolan accounted for Queen's final goal, and the final score was 6-3 in favour of Queen's.

Queen's second game was against Carleton University and waterpolo Gaels kept up the same pace that had beaten R.M.C. High scorer in this game was Peter Trebuss with four goals. Dave Ardell and Bob Brisebois each scored twice while Chris Whately and Paul Nolan scored three times each. Final score was 14-2 for Queen's.

Queen's vs. York turned into a runaway scoring spree for Queen's. Chris Whately scored five times, Dave Ardell three goals, Craig Render two goals, and Paul Nolan, Peter Trebuss, Mike Fox, Bruce Hopkins and Bob Brisebois each scored once. Final score was Queen's 15, York 0.

Evidence of Queen's waterpolo ability and team work showed up in the breakdown of goals scored for and against. Offensively, Queen's hammered in 35 goals. The offensive line of Dave Ardell, Mike Fox, and Peter Trebuss accounted for 16 of those goals, while the defensive unit of Chris Whately, Paul Nolan, Orville James and Bob Brisebois produced 16 goals of their own. Both offense and defense were played with superb co-ordination and backed up by perhaps the best goal tender in the league, Dave Kay. Dave Kay kept the opposition off the score board and also set up some of the key passes that led to the many Queen's goals. Queen's alternate goalie Alan Cameron, handled his waterpolo debut by blanking York University's scoring attempt in the last game.

The outcome of Saturday's tournament puts Queen's in the lead of the OUAA East Division with three wins, no loses, and a goals for-and-against total of 35 goals for Queen's and only 5 against as compared with Queen's closest rival, Toronto whose finish was 34 goals for and 14 goals against.

Coach Simon Beitler was well pleased with his team's performance and feels that the East Division championship is within easy reach. Again, special thanks to the Queen's Band and cheerleaders for the recognition. Queen's waterpolo resumes action on Oct. 18 at York University.

Queen's hosted tournament which they won this past weekend

Golf wins

While sixteen candidates originally turned out for Intercollegiate golf this fall, the various qualifying rounds revealed that very few newcomers were able to displace members of last year's team from their spots on the team. Ultimately, the five man team was formed of four of last year's representatives, namely, Bill and Ron White, Bob Russell and John Colwell. Three new members became available to make the fifth spot: Rick Downing, Jace Kohlmen, and Marc Westfall, all very good prospects, making it hard for coach Al Lenard to choose.

The team has participated in two tournaments to date: the White brothers, Colwell and Russe; teamed up in the Carling - O'Keefe Open tournament in Georgetown to place second among 20 universities and college teams on Sept 20, 21. This past weekend in the OUAA East section playoffs, the Queen's team, including Rick Downing, placed first among six teams, including Carleton, Toronto, York, Trent, and Erindale College of Toronto. In gale-force winds at the Garrison Golf Club, Queen's finished 13 strokes ahead of Toronto, and Rick Downing had low gross score over the 36 holes.

Next weekend October 8, 9 the Queen's team will be tested by the best golfers from the East and West Sections to battle for the OUAA championship at Al Balding's posh golf club at Woodbridge, Ontario. The Nationals - GOOD LUCK guys!!

Ann McKinney of Queen's Intermediates Field Hockey team at Guelph U. on Sat.

Field Hockey opens season

by Atwood

On Friday afternoon the Queen's Field Hockey Gals (Sr. as well as the last remaining Intermediate team) departed for Guelph to take part in the annual "Early Bird" Tournament. This tournament is the first official one of the season and the last official one before Part I and Part II of the OWIAA Field Hockey finals. This light league schedule demands that all of the University Field Hockey teams play many exhibition games to train for the finals. This past weekend, however, is the only time that Queen's will see game action before the final tournament.

On the whole, the weekend turned out to be a successful one. The new coach commented that she has "2 promising teams--and they are starting to play together well...we gave all the teams a good run for their money."

On Saturday the Queen's Seniors played four games. They won the first one by scoring two goals on Guelph to beat them 2-1. Les Ferrari and Carol Ford can accept credit for the goals. Queen's lost the next one, a close game against Waterloo 2-1. Carolyn Broadhurst scored the lone goal (Broadie has no limits!). Queen's lost the next two games 3-0. The first one to McGill, whose team didn't lose a match all weekend, the second to U. of T. whose team has always been the team to beat.

The Intermediates lost to Laurentian by a 2-1 margin. Lyn Atwood scored. In the next game Margie Bartlett ran 75 yds. on a break-away to score the only goal of the game against Trent.

Sunday was another beautiful day (your basic) and the sun was certainly shining on Queen's as they won 4 games and tied one.

The Seniors play McMaster defeating them 2-0 with both goals being potted by Pearl Dixon. In the next game York University was defenceless against the whirlwind attack put forth by Queen's. Carolyn Broadhurst, Pearl Dixon and Nanette Cuddy all contributed to the 3-0 score.

The Intermediates played their old rivals University of Toronto Blues only to end the game in a scoreless tie. It was perhaps the best field hockey game that was played all weekend as far as teamwork and fieldplay goes. Their last game against York was sloppy, slashy and hackey and ended in a 1-0 score with Lyn Atwood netting the sole goal.

Part I of the final tournament will be held at U. of T. two weekends after Thanksgiving. If you're in Toronto come around and give us a cheer.

CRISIS

The Alma Mater Society government is in the midst of crisis.

It has grown so large that it cannot find enough capable students to run its spreading bureaucracy. Its size threatens to affect eventually every organization that the AMS runs, including the Pub, the constable system and Tricolor.

The student government is aware of the trouble that they are in; they cannot overlook the resignations of three commissioners and the QSA director. These students were angry, disillusioned and frustrated with the AMS when they quit. AMS Pres. John Gray, unsteady as people challenged his ability to govern, prescribed increased student participation to cure the weakening AMS. He has launched an attack on apathy (Queen's Journal, Sept. 19), a public campaign to improve the AMS image, and has demanded that student reps work harder and longer.

These solutions are futile. It should be clear by now that students do not have hours of free time to devote to campus politics. Academics are demanding and sap the energy of most students. All the student politicians who have resigned this year have said that heavy academic loads were the main reason they quit.

We need to evaluate the AMS. We must find out what you, the students, want from a student government, if you want one at all.

You must be asked your opinion of the AMS, its policies, and its services. Do you want services such as the Pub, the typing service and the yearbook? Do you want to be involved in political action; do you want to pay a full-time researcher to investigate student issues? Do you want to continue as the primary support of social services such as the Drug Centre, TAK, Teleclinic and others?

Your demands must be heard via polls, referenda, questionnaires and campus media. A core group of students has been asked to develop methods for listening to your opinion.

The questioning process will be long; the results won't be ready until January.

This way you will decide what the Queen's student government should be; and you will determine how much it should cost.

It is time for a dwindling few to stop prescribing, and time for you to declare what you want.

Here's to Rev. Guy, Arts '97

A telegram sent from St. Catherines, Ontario, to Mr. Herb Hamilton of the Alumni Association, last Friday, read as follows:

"Best Wishes For A Happy Reunion. Regret Age 96 Prevents Attendance On 70th Graduation Anniversary. Queen's Forever.

E. W. Henderson

Mr. Henderson is one of Queen's 10 oldest living Alumni. The oldest is the Rev. W.A. Guy, B.A. '97, B.D. '01 who lives in Vancouver. Reverend Guy is 98.

Wouldn't it be a nice idea if the AMS President and the Principal sent congratulatory telegrams to the 10 oldest Queen's Alumni on their birthdays?

Spade a spade

Dear Editors,

It is about time that the cards were laid on the table for everyone to see. With regards to the proposed financial constraints at Queen's University, the students are being used.

Cutbacks involving reduced library hours, fewer tutorials, and less teaching time are all measures conceoneocted by the administration for the direct purpose of creating student alienation and political noise. Politicians will tremble, the present financial squeeze will be eased, and as if by magic, the administration is again free to operate in its own irresponsible way. A nice neat way to beat the austerity programme, but a damn kick in the head for the students.

When will we realize how we, as students, are being used? Let us point the finger straight at the guilty for all to see and call a spade a spade. For in the game of politics, it is the full house that beats the royal blush anyday.

Intolerance

Dear Editors,

Monday, September 27, was to my knowledge, the first publicly announced homophile meeting held in the midst of our self-proclaimed 'liberal' students. It has taken years for this to happen, and even still il appears to be a social embarassment to many students. Doesn't this betray the existence of a very intolerant environment at Queen's University? It is perhaps more evident now how hypocritical it is to support our consciousness-raising organizations concerning theimselves wilh international issues while maintaining so repressive an atomsphere on our own campus.

A low capacity for the acceptance of the oppressed in general, at Queens seems to be coexisting with a high receptivity to liberal, tolerant attidues about issues silhouetted against a very safely distant canvas. It is one thing to boycott California grapes, another to accept a human being.

Sexual preference is irrelevant to the respect due another person. For some reason Queens' students feel threatened by another's free choice of an alternate lifestyle. It happens to be in vogue to support the poverty-stricken, or racially oppressed of the world. This allows one to feel arrogantly liberal, without questioning ourselves and opening our minds to really honouring personal freedom.

We promote the cause of oppressed groups as long as their goal is to attain a life-style similar to our own. Are we sincere enough to give our support to a group who ask only to be allowed to express an alternate understanding? When faced with such a group which does not desire to mimic our life style, our liberal attitudes are challenged.

The Student Christian Movement traditionally has been concerned with promoting the unity of humanity, by actively supporting groups in their attempts to alleviate socio-economic injustices and prejudices. We wish to extend our support to the Queen's Homophile Association and hope there will be a new level of understanding and acceptance on Queens' campus, a denuncement to the antagonistic situation which unfortunately presently exists.

New backpage

Dear Editors,

Last Tuesday, the prof having not yet dropped out of the rafters, I was peering at my copy of the Queen's Journal. I happened to mutter something about missing the Backpage of previous years with its news summary, and was heard by the chap across the lable (who was listed in Friday's issue under the affeetionate title Siek and Weird). He informed me that the Baekpage was deleted because you felt noone read it, and not a noise had been heard since its disappearanee.

This is your Official Squawk. The news situation in Kingston is, to put it politely, lower than whaleshit on the bottom of the oeean. The radio news is the pits ("Mrs. Rosie Schwartz, of Burnt HillRoad, is in hospital today suffering shock after the two-tractor collision that took place on her front porch this morning..."), the local paper, fondly known as the Whit Substandard, is exactly that - local -, the Globe and Mail carriers deign to deliver about once a month, the Golden Words hardly touches on international issues (i.e. "Dipsticks I Have Known and Loved" "Tasteful Methods of Chueking Moons at Weddings")...need I go on?

All this blather is to try to convinee you to reinstate your Backpage news summary -- it's an exeellent way to keep your captive audience from rolling up in its eocoon of due papers and Ex labels and losing track of the outside world. If anyone else would like to see the Baekpage return, take 57 seconds, scribble a statement to that effect on a scrap of paper, and chuck it in the Journal mailbox in the Union basement.

Thanks.

Lynn Mason.

Corrections

Dear Editors,

Whoever decided that our only chance to check our Who's Where listings would be the 6-hour period from 19099am to 4-00pm Wednesday, Oct. 1, must be using cold porridge for brains!

Having thus spent our fury, let us study the facts. If all 10,000 of us were able to respond to the extremely short notice (29 hours at the most, if the Journal appeared at 11-00am Tuesday), we would each receive one ten-thousandth of 6 hr., or 2.16 seconds to check the information and make any necessary corrections, credulously assuming that the doors would open on time, which of course never happens.

Surely it is unreasonable to expect that this very badly publicized and all too fleeting chance at corrections will be of much benefit. Let us hope that better can be done in futre.

Brian Judge and others.

Dean of Women

Is this office vital, or an antiquated fixture?

by N. Flood

Is the office of the Dean of Women a vital part of the Queen's community, or is it just an antiquated fixture? If the position is an important one, what sort of woman should fill it and how should she function? These are among the questions currently being considered by a 7-member committee on campus.

According to a member interviewed by the Journal, the general feeling of the committee appears to be that the office of the Dean of Women is at present, ineffective. Though she is one of the most powerful women on campus, they feel she is unknown to many and visible to few, even within the residence community. She notes however, that at some point in the future the office may be entirely unnecessary as "student counselling services overlap". The Don-Warden system presently in existence in Men's residence, she suggests, is working well providing a viable substitute for the now non-existent office of Dean of Men. A similar alternative system may sometime be possible for Women's residence.

That is not to say, however, that they are about to recommend the termination of such a post. Rather, a member of the committee suggested that the trend appears to be, "not to abolish the post completely, we're not sure that's the solution; just because something is not working well doesn't mean that we should just scrap it - by modifying it we may find the answer."

Apparently, according to this member, the committee does feel that in future the Dean of Women will have to serve more people. She will have to be more accessible to female students and even faculty. This, it has been suggested, might be accomplished by providing her with a few more duties and moving her office or apartment out of its isolated residence location, putting it in a place more open to all women on campus.

The task lying before this recently formed committee is a large one - essentially a consideration of the relevancy of the Office of the Dean of Women as a whole. They are to recommend to the Senate in this regard and also, if they feel the office itself should continue, on whether or not to rehire the present Dean, Evelyn Reid.

The committee, which has already met twice hopes to be able to report on these questions to the October meeting of the Senate. If it is considered wise at that point to hire a new Dean, the committee will continue to function then, into the new year, as a selection body.

Under the chairmanship of Principal Watts, the group is composed of Sue Pearson, a representitive of the WRC; Dr. Sinclair, Dean of the Arts and Science Faculty; Student Senator Jane Toller; President of the Alumni, Mrs. Sylvia Mackey; AMS member Jane Bryant and Psychology Professor, Dr. Marilyn Bowman.

Though the question of whether Queen's needs a Dean of Women is now being looked at on a philosophical level as well, it originally came up in response to the problem of financial constraints. It was recommended in the report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Food Co-op "

"University is dragging its heels"

The tenants association at West Campus is planning to set up a food co-op. The AMS Executive supports the idea and has been corresponding with Vice-Principal Kennedy so they ean come to some sort of mutually acceptable agreement on how the whole thing will operate.

Steven Crafts who lives in the married student quarters originated the idea here. Plans are to involve 50 people. They will give their order a week in advance to buyers who will get the food from a wholesaler. They hope to sell the goods 5 percent above the wholesale price, considerably cheaper than buying from a retail outfit.

The only commitments those involved must make is to give $20 which will cover operating costs. This can be returned after 3 months if anyone wishes to opt out. As well there will be a duty roster, involving four hours a month on a rotating basis for packing, buying, and delivering.

The university, landlord of the married students residence, seems to be as Craft puts it, "dragging its heels". The problem is that the co-op passes as a retail business and it may need a zoning change in order to operate. The university has offered the co-op a room in the building, which they already have use of, at $2 a square foot. As well, the university feels that the co-op should incorporate beeause of the amount of money involved in the venture. As Mr. Lazier (assistant to Vice-Principal Administration) puts it, he wants the co-op to operate on a businesslike basis for the protection of the university. They might, he feels, want to move into the car insurance business because this sort of thing has happened before.

The co-op is now waiting to be recognized by the AMS as a legitimate student organization. This would save a $400 fee to incorporate, and the AMS would be their agent if any problems arose. John Wilson AMS Vice-Pres. feels that the AMS executive, and probably Outer Council are committed to the idea because they hope to set up some sort of student tenants association some time soon. As well, Wilson feels the university is making unfair demands on the co-op. At present the AMS and Kennedy's office are ironing out the last of these difficulties. The co-op Wilson says, will be introduced to Outer Council at the next meeting, no doubt to await a virtual life or death decision.

"University serves the community"

by Svetlana Borsbevsky

All right, so we're here for at least 3 years, but how much do we do to help Kingstonians learn about the better aspects of Queen's? On November 14th and 15th, Queen's will host Open House (sponsored by the AMS) to give Kingstonians and students a fresh look at Queen's.

Open House's theme is "the university serves the community". The campus will be opened to all comers - a sort of everything you wanted to know about Queen's but didn't known whom or what to ask.

The departments put on displays (from Hebrew to Mechanical Engineering) also planned are movies an art show, and folk singing. Many buildings will be opened to the public on Sat. 15 Nov.

A meeting will be held for those interested in helping out in the 2nd floor common room of the Student Union on Thurs. 16 Oct. at 7:00 p.m.

Ottawa women to protest gov't non-action

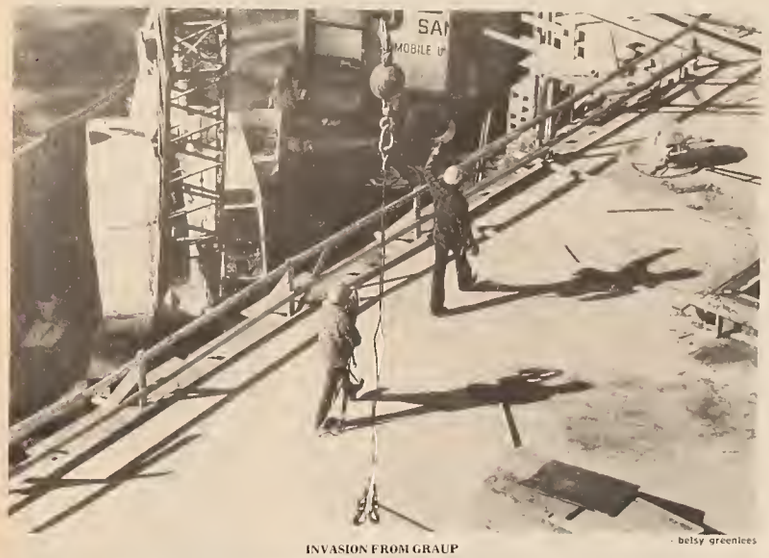
OTTAWA (CUP) ---- International Women's Year in Canada may have lauded and applauded females across the nation, but "the rights of these women have not been assured and their needs have not been met," says the Ottawa Women's Centre collective.

To protest the lack of effective government action on women's issues, the Ottawa Women's Centre, together with other women's groups and interested organizations such as CARAL, Voice of Women, Gays of Ottawa, and Women's Career Counselling, is organizing a march October 25, to coincide with the federal government's announcement of it's achievements this year on behalf of Canadian women.

The march will protest ineffective and extravagant spending in lieu of acting upon equal pay for equal work; access to free quality child care, safe, effective birth control for all; and equal job opportunities. Other neglected issues of concern include equal rights in marriage and property law, removal of abortion from the criminal code, equal custody rights for lesbian mothers and the inclusion of sexual orientation in the Human Rights Code.

About five million dollars (or 50 cents for every female Canadian) has been spent by the federal government on International Women's Year.

"Much of this money has gone into setting up the IWY Secretariat and funding elaborate publicity campaigns and conferences," claims the Ottawa collective, asking how this benefits the working mother with poor daycare facilities in her area, the university graduate who cannot land a job unless she types, or the female worker who is paid less than her male counterpart.



"Most of us would rather this public display of concern be replaced with real, lawful solutions", says the collective.

Lunar real estate bonanza

SANTA CLARA (ENS-CUP) ---- Looking for a little spot of country land away from the hustle and bustle of urban life?

Well, if you really want to get away from it all, Mike Mason of Santa Clara, California will sell you a 10-acre parcel of real estate on the moon, complete with a government-approved deed for suitable framing.

Mason, founder of a company called "Green Cheese Enterprises," says he's sold more than 100 parcels of Lunar real estate for five dollars a piece since he started the venture a few days ago. He says he spent hours pouring over Lunar geological maps to scout out the most desirable locations in such wonderlands as the Sea of Tranquility, the Sea of Fertility or the Copernicus Quadrangle, which, he advises, "has the nicest looking craters."

INVASION FROM GRAUP

Two masked invaders from Graup systematically destroy the remnants of the civilized world, which fell yesterday (as you probably know) to the aliens' stream of knock-knock jokes and bad puns which numbed the defenders into a state of idiocy not unlike that found in California before it slid into the ocean and was swallowed by a squid, mutated into gigantic proportions by nuclear fallout.

Constraint that the upkeep of the Dean of Women be transferred from the university as such to the residence i e that she be paid by residence fees rather than by university salary. According to our source this new committee has several other suggestions in this regard. They note that former Deans of Women taught and Principal Watts presently teaches at the university. They seem to think that a new Dean of Women should indeed be qualified to teach here. This, in addition to further justifying her salary, would put her more in touch with campus problems and activities.

What type of woman should this new Dean be? The committee, says our source, seems to feel that she should be a younger person, in touch with academic and university problems. She should have a formal university education and a broad cultural background. Above all she should be capable of inspiring respect but also trust and confidence. She should be willing to give herself and her time to the university.

The committee hopes to hold three more meetings before the end of October. When asked, a member of the committee remarked that the meetings are going quite well, with 100 percent attendance and much interest and participation on the part of all members. They hope to have all matters concerning the position of the Dean of Women decided by early in the new year.

CFRC broadcast

"Woman has two souls"

by Dave Raymont

A terse communique, found on the front page of a yellowing newspaper that was lining the floor of the attic in my house, could very well upset many of the common beliefs presently held concerning women today. I enclose a transcription of the article as it was found on the front page of the Kingston Daily Standard for Thursday, 13 June, 1908.

"WOMAN HAS TWO SOULS
May Be Strangers to Each Other, Says G Stanley Hall.

Boston, June 13 - Women have two souls, perhaps more, according to President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University.

He gave this as the explanation of the "fickleness" of woman, of her "erratic methods of jumping at conclusions, and her intuition" in his address on "Psychotherapeutics" before the graduating class of the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

"Woman is much more susceptible than man," he said. "There is a good reason for this. We know that she has two or more souls. She may love and hate at the same time, and the same person. She may say and think that she is sick or well when the reverse is really true. It means simply that one soul is in the ascendency. These two souls may be absolute strangers to each other, but they certainly exist. We have proved it beyond the shadow of adoubt."

May I add that further revelations of an even more scandalous or fantastic nature were contained within this newspaper and others, of similar vintage, will be broadcast to the world over the facilities of CFRC on the Overview program, Saturday, 11 October.

Female faculty shafted

London (CUP)--Women at the University of Western Ontario are paid less, promoted less and hired less than their male counterparts, says the recently completed report issued by the President's Advisory Committee on the Status of Women.

The report says female faculty members are behind men's salaries by as much as $2,231 a year for senior positions.

There are 154 women on a teaching staff of 1,250, about 12.3 percent of the total. Only 14 percent of women staff were offered tenure, while 46 percent of male professors were offered that security.

NDP: Invest in schools

EDMONTON (CUP) -- Perceiving education as a social investment, NDP federal leader Ed Broadbent says Canada's educational system must be more closely tied to the needs of the communities it serves.

In an exclusive interview Sept. 29 with Canadian University Press (CUP), Broadbent said a "reciprical system of responsibility is needed."

Arguing that "the public already pays 80 per cent of the costs per student" for post-secondary education, he said "the student has an obligation to work for his or her community."

A community work plan "should be used throughout the educational system", and the community should assume complete responsibility for educating Canadians.

Provincial and federal government programs "to gaurantee tuition, a living allowance, and jobs that would provide productive labor for the community" during a student's more formal, institutionalized education period are needed, he said.

Citing the Reserve Officer Training Program (ROTP), the NDP leader said, "We have already instilued such a plan for students training for military pruposes.

"Justification for similar programs would apply more strongly for people doing non-military work in the future."

"Once a university student graduates, he or she almost automatically becomes a member of society, paying higher than the average income tax. The student would then pay for the university education costs."

It's unreasonable, he said, to except students to shoulder the burden of tuition fees and living expenses while a university the age when students are in their worst income position."

Gay supporter dumped by dean

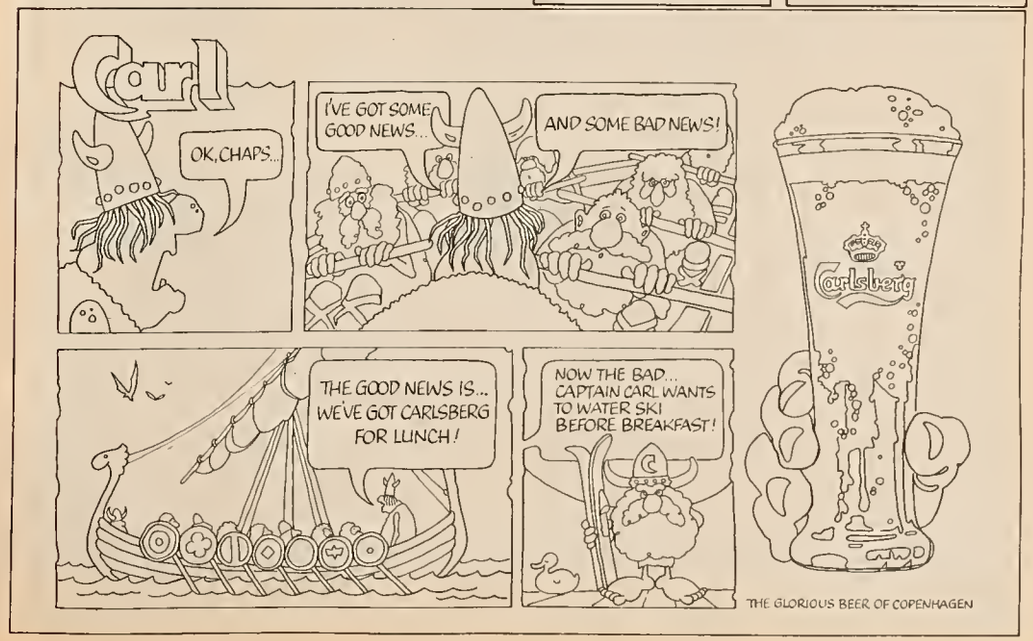
SASKATOON (CUP) -- Gay Rights' movement supporter and education class lecturer Doug Wilson was declared unfit to supervise student teachers by University of Saskatchewan education dean J.B. Kirkpatrick last week.

The Carillon says Kirkpatrick "verbally attacked" Wilson on Sept. 24, after the former president of the Education Students Union advertised in the university newspaper that persons "interested in participating in a campus gay organization" contact him.

Although the criteria for determining student teacher a supervisors apparently doesn't exist in writing, Kirkpatrick told Wilson's superior that the lectrer's public association with the gay movement would hurt the College of Education's working relationship with the Saskatoon school system

Kirk patrick said his decision was made solely on the basis of the newspaper announcement

Panhandlers' loot



NEW YORK CITY (ZNS-CUP) -- Panhandlers can earn about $17,000 a year, a newspaper here reports following tests "in the field."

Despite the city's much-publicized financial woes, gross pay totalled $48.96 for New York Post reporter Gene Weingarten following an eight-hour shift hustling for spare change on downtown streets.

On a yearly basis the average take home pay would amount to $12,729 ($17,100 gross), the Post computed.

Henninger. A different tasting beer.

Meister Pils. Different again.

Henninger tastes different from Canadian beers because it's made from different ingredients and in a different way. Only two row barley is used. Yeast is especially flown in from Frankfurt. It's doubly fermented. It is allowed to carbonate naturally. It tastes like a German beer because it is.
Henninger. Das Schmeckt.

Meister Pils is a true light tasting German pilsener brewed from the same ingredients and in the same way as it is in Henninger's Frankfurt brewery. Now you can enjoy the light distinctive taste that has made pilsener the most celebrated of all the world's beers.

Both Henninger and Meister Pils are made in Henninger's own independent brewery and are available at your brewers retail outlet for just a few cents more than regular beer.

Two German beers in fat little bottles.

Backpage responses...

Dear Editors:
This letter is to agree to Lynn Mason's letter in the Journal on October 7. I too enjoyed the backpage of last year's Journal and would like to see it reinstated.

Ruth L. Hayward.

Dear Editors
Bravo for Lyn Mason! I think Backpage was the most important part of the Journal. Supposedly Backpage was discontinued because students did not want to see the outside world. To quote from one of Brian Copeland's greater speeches, university should be an ivory tower but the tower must be firmly embedded in the bedrock of society. Backpage will allow students a flooring from which to jump to the ivory tower.

Gerry Lewarne

Dear Editors:
With regards to Miss Mason's letter of complaint about lack of international issues appearing in local papers such as Golden Words, Queen's Journal, or Whig-Standard we wish to refute her suggestion for a "new backpage". If she truly wishes to be informed of world news the Kingston radio station does offer some information of this sort albeit brief. This being unsatisfactory, Newsweek or Time magazines are available at local stores (waiting for eager minds to seek them out). Under circumstances such that Miss Mason mightn't have the time to go out and buy these--in which case where would she ever find time to read them-- the Globe and Mail does deliver daily and not as Miss Mason implies spasmodically.

Failing all of the above perhaps Miss Mason should enroll in the University's Political Studies program.

Vandalism strikes Commie Crests

Dear Editors
In the past week several of the students of Commerce '77 and '78 have taken it upon themselves to paint their respective year crests on the pavement outside Dunning Hall.

Since the completion of the crests some people have had some "fun"--by defacing these crests by spreading paint on them. I would suggest that if these people want to let everyone know about their artistic talents that their efforts might be directed in a constructive rather than a destructive manner.

The crests add a unique flare to the campus and such actions turn them into eyesores.

Whether this was a Homecoming prank is irrelevant. The real issue is that people should start paying more respect to the work and property of other groups on campus.

Try and find other ways to amuse your sick sense of humour.
Robert Butterill
President, Commerce Society

Individual does not mean outcast

Dear Editors,
Upon perusing the Oct. 3 edition of the Journal, the article 'I'm different' commanded my attention. While reading, I could not find myself in complete conjunction with the rather severe attitude expressed by my friend and fellow student Mr. Dave Neu:

I submit, Dave, that you in your own fashion have indeed conformed. Perhaps not in the sense that you have described, but to the general attitudes and values that are incorporated into university life. Don't scorn the raucous parties and blaring stereos, they will fall silent around mid-term time. The general hell-raising activity of Dick or Jane's first time away from home will end.

As far as the word 'straight' is concerned, I suggest that an individualistic attitude will not permit one to recoil at the mere mention of the word. 'Weird' or 'anti-social' persons are people who simply assert themselves in other ways, whether it be intellectually, artistically or what not. Universities would not exist without these students who share a common understanding of the words 'study' and 'work'. Perhaps these individuals should be more in vogue than the frecs or engineers whose squalid way of life (at times) is only surpassed by the fledgling politicians of the AMS (although one cannot shun the excellent organizational capacity these groups possess).

The point is, that you as confirmed individualists are not rejects of the system but rather an integral part of Queen's life-blood- the students. I myself am not one who could be considered real 'in'. I have been actively involved in the reserve component of the Canadian Armed Forces for the past two and one half years, have short hair and do not like loud music. But during my stay at Queen's, I have not found it difficult to make acquaintances with either pseudo-intellectuals or engineers- down to earth people.

The fact is, that the university system allows us to: produce editorials on the nature of individuality i.e. whether its existence is real or false, criticize our teachings, aimlessly conform if we so desire or, even wear white shoes to dances at Leonard Hall.

Individuality does exist at Queen's; it does not have to be promulgated by open retaliation to subjective garbage like 'Queen's archetype' (Q.J. Sept. 30), although I feel Mr. Neu's condemnation of that article should be applauded as a forceful expression in opposition to staunch rowdies and winos alike. In your wanderings through the mysteries and realities of university, do not shrink at the notion of your own non-conformity, but rather seek to express your opinions and I'm sure you'll find those in agreement

A free case of beer to the person who submits the best caption to this cartoon. In keeping with the holiday weekend the caption should relate to Thanksgiving turkeys. All entries must be submitted to the Queen's Journal office no later than Tuesday, October 15, 5:00 p.m. (if nobody's around slip it through the unclassifieds slot). Winner will receive a case of beer and the original cartoon. Winning caption will be published in next Thursday's Journal. Oh boy!

Budget is Backwards

The old song 'Oh we ain't got a barrel of money. Maybe we're ragged and funny,' pretty well describes the AMS budget. Every student pays $9.20 of his activity directly to the AMS. The expenditure of these monies is the responsibility of Ian Nordheimer and the Board of Directors, but in their concern for democracy, and the Canadian way of life, the Board has given the Outer Council the right to strike a budget. That has now been completed, and the resultant document stands as a tribute to the lack of thoughtfulness, creativity and humour in the AMS.

The budget priorities indicate two factors. One, that the AMS is still very much a business-service organization and secondly, that it costs us too damn much just to administer it. Administrative salaries and fringe benefits totalled $36,770, out of a total budget of $104,275. Not only are you paying a student activity fee to run the Journal, Tricolor, and concerts, but they are making a profit off of you in the Pub. The AMS turns around and subsidizes these services through the AMS budget by not charging these services a realistic administrative cost.

It is no wonder there isn't enough money for Speakers, BCAIR, and SVB to provide proper and adequate programs for students, because the AMS is eating up its own money in subsidies to the Pub and other services. But that is a reflection of student opinion and concerns. We would rather build five universities for middle and upper class kids than try to help an underprivileged kid even get the chance to come to university.

You want services and you've got them. Nearly 75 percent of the AMS budget goes to administration, and service concerns, the other 25 percent goes to the cultural, moral and social enlightenment of students. But even if you want more services, the AMS is still top heavy. There is no way under God's given earth that it takes 36.4 percent of a budget to administer the same budget. We pay for luxuries like two summer V-P's, who's combined work didn't amount to a pile of horse dung, and we paid them $2,000 each for their efforts. Not only do we pay for a business administrator, we also pay a bookeeper, a typist, and a receptionist.

Some of the budget highlights include the Arts Festival, which could only justify itself by saying that we ran it last year, so we should run it this year. The problem is that, like the AMS itself, we've never sat down, once the program started, and decided whether Arts Festival is still performing a valuable service. After all it's the token cultural concern of the AMS and that puts it in the class of motherhood and apple pie.

The AMS has planned to hire a researcher at $135 a week for 21 weeks. Rector Bruce Trotter wanted to know why students couldn't do this work, and the reply he received was that students really don't give a damn about researching tuition fees, etc. and therefore we will have to pay someone to perform this task. Next thing you know the Executive will need personal secretaries.

The advertising budget is up, as John Gray attempts to PR people out of their public apathy. Gray should remember that action speaks louder than words!

Community services grabbed $6955.00, over half the External Affairs budget, and yet Peter Lane, the Commissioner, says that we have not overextended ourselves in these services. He should look at his budget again, and do an evaluation of his return on investment. The unfortunate part of the exercise is that BCAIR, Drug Centre, SVB, TAK and Television have been put in the motherhood and apple pie category.

The other side of the coin is that, Outer Council members don't have the intestinal fortitude to eliminate AMS support for them because they are the only services that we perform for the city. But after Dover's or Joe and Paul's soak you for a jacket or a pair of jeans, you will be wondering whether we should be doing something for the citizens of Kinston. The fact is that if the AMS removed its funding, these services, if they were valuable, would find other funding, and it's about time we seriously thought of getting out of community services.

Finally, you should know that approximately $1.00 of your $9.20 AMS specific fee goes to pay Joyce Roe, and Ian Nordheiner and John Wilson, each take approximately $.20 from you. I think I'll ask for my share of their salaries back Two beers sound good right now.

Elections for AMS

Rees Cosgrove

It seems obvious to me that the AMS is not representative of the student population and for this reason I do not consider the AMS as responsible to the average Queen's student. Whether the fault lies with the executive of the AMS or the individual representatives is a matter of personal judgement But I believe that the cure for both of these choices is very clear: strong representation, responsible to the students will consequently make the Alma Mater Society an honourable and clearly democratic political system. Many people will tell you that the power of the AMS rests with a triumvirate. At the moment this is true and the situation requires a solution. But the fault does not lie entirely with these three people. If the other members of the AMS are not actively involved in and consider it their duty to question decisions and concern themselves with the balance of power, then the situation as it exists today will never be remedied It is the onus of the student representatives to question decisions and ensure a responsible and representative form of government at Queen's. I intend to do just that.

Colin Gibson

Douglas Library is perhaps the most important resource centre at this university The practise of cutting acquisitions must be stopped, and the dwindling acquisition rate must be increased with a yearly sum to offset inflation. The closing of the library, as an economy measure seems to me to be a bad mistake The evening hours are those when most students have an opportunity to use the library without interruption for classes If I am elected I shall push hard for Douglas Library to be kept open at night

In this time of "energy crisis" I feel that the University can save money by following the steps of business and government by lowering the heat in buildings by a small amount (to say, 68 degrees F), and lowering them again during the night, when the buildings are not used. A considerable amount of savings would appear in the long run - maybe enough to pay for the re-opening of the library

The 50 percent surtax on bar profits at Queen's functions should be reevaluated. Other methods of paying for renovations should be examined. Perhaps a lottery for students and alumni might raise a substantial amount.

The A.M.S. must push the O.F.S. for vigorous lobbying on behalf of students at the new legislature in Toronto. I am sure that with the wobbly structure of the legislature, the Liberals, N.D.P., and even the previously deaf Davis government will be much more responsive and sympathetic to students Leniency or exemption from some of the requirements of the Canteen Licence, granted by the L.L.B.O. should be investigated

I support whole heartedly the idea of an A.M.S. co-op food store. Investigation of the feasibility of this concept should begin immediately A co-op would lower the food prices for students living off-campus, provide employment for students, and make a profit for the A.M.S.

I ask for your support, and promise the best representation that I can give

Sarah Edmborough

Resignations, bickering and marathon meetings that accomplish little - such is the picture of the AMS which is presented to the Queen's students in each successive issue of the 'Journal'. Letters to the campus newspapers have expressed a certain amount of frustration with our student government - criticism has been freely offered - but it has been mostly from a negative viewpoint. Perhaps what is needed to improve the situation is some positive student involvement.

As a former member for the Artsci '78 Executive I have had some experience with student government at Queen's. For the September-February term last year I served as social convenor of Artsci '78 - during that time I also worked with the ASUS Executive in the organization of a lecture series on the Role of the University. I enjoyed my term of office, and I firmly believe that if one is willing to work, and enthusiastic, positively trying to work in the students' best interests much can be accomplished. As an English DSC I am already working for student interests on a departmental Faculty-Student basis as an ASUS representative to the AMS I am willing to work hard for the interests of Arts and Science students as they are affected by the AMS.

What I offer you as a candidate for a one-year term as ASUS Rep to the AMS is dedication and enthusiasm; what I ask of you is your support on October 16th.

Danny Peart

Experience - Floor Senior, Gael, 1st year rep to PHESA. Vice-president of Artsci '78, member of ASUS Interyear Council, Chairman of Phys. Ed Orientation, English D.S.C., PHESA rep to ASUS, member of University Council on Athletics.

The primary obligation of the ASUS rep to the AMS is to represent the interests of the Arts and Science students as the largest faculty on campus. Effective representation of such a vast and diversified body requires a broad and sensitive understanding of the issues which affect this group, and strong vocal presentation of their wishes at the AMS Outer Council.

It is the responsibility of the rep to devote the necessary time to ensure that he/she is aware of the issues as they occur and their consequences to the student body. This aspect of the position is especially crucial today with the quality of our education, as well as many important student services, seriously endangered by the impact of the financial squeeze. We must work together to tackle the major problems that are facing the university and spark interest and concern, first in the university community and then abroad. The AMS must provide the necessary leadership to convince that public that universities are making a valuable contribution to society and are worthy of more support.

The AMS Executive have presented their policy statement for 75-76, a document which I believe can provide a firm direction for our student government. It is now the responsibility off Outer Council to see that they are not dominated by executive decisions, but present strong opposition when it is necessary, and give support when it is appropriate. As an ASUS rep I would fulfill these obligations with conviction and enthusiasm. Vote for accessible, responsible, and hardworking representation of your interests. That's You.

Debbie Sibler

I am a second year student majoring in history The reason I am running for A.S.U.S. rep. on AMS is mainly because I want to get involved Arts and Science is noted for being an apathetic faculty, so I thought, instead of complaining about it, why not try and do something? Many of the things that happen around the university involve the AMS in one way or another, and Arts and Science, being such a large faculty could really make themselves heard. Maybe we can begin to show Arts and Science really is alive and well

Jim Turner

A position on the AMS outer council would be of great personal value and would provide me with a first hand learning experience into how the university functions. Being a first year student, I can't boast an impressive track record, but I know that my past experience and present involvement in activities outside the realm of student politics are assets which I would like to contribute to the outer council.

As an ASUS rep. I feel it's of great importance to represent my area interests that being the Arts and Science Faculty. I believe the diversification will not be solved, but responsible representation can certainly help in protecting the many different interests that we as Arts & Science students face, in the area of quality of Education, financial constraints etc. It's important now to critically evaluate or measure faculty productivity and get back to basic fundamentals such as ..teaching

Considering the cutbacks the university have had to make, the AMS should seriously look into the tenure policy: the policy whereby a professor is guaranteed job security until retirement regardless of incompetance. Many, I am sure are familiar if they haven't already experienced the cold truth, that a prof. can "make or break" a course for a student. Should not the AMS force the university to re-examine its outlook on this issue? If in fact Queen's has a reputation for academic excellence, how then can we afford to give the "tenure" policy and the infringement on library hours second priority, which it seems to be receiving at the present time. The AMS has the political weight to do something. Why then the delay

As ASUS rep. I will work hard to fulfill and uphold my obligation to ASUS and the AMS and I believe my previous experience will aid me in this cause. I am willing to devote the time and energy to ensure not only effective representation but active participation as well. You can count on a complete effort. Thank-you

Elections for Senate

Chris Nind

The Senate is the ultimate level of academic decision and policy making in this university. As such it determines the academic direction that Queen's will follow in the future. Financial constraints and academic rulings concerning acceptance standards are two of the Senate's more pressing problems today.

This year the Senate passed a motion allowing senior citizens to take courses at Queen's without paying any tuition. I feel that this is a very positive move toward integrating Queen's and the Kingston community. The presence of these people in our courses cannot help but make the lectures more enjoyable It would be well worth while investigating other ways in which Queen's and the community could become closer.

Financial constraints will probably emerge as the greatest problem the Senate will face this year. In order not to reduce the quality of education at Queen's, the Senate must look for greater productivity from the faculty in the area of teaching. Less emphasis should be placed on committee work, and more on research and publications. Responsible student input will be needed when the cutbacks come later this year to represent student interests somewht different from faculty ones.

I have been involved with student government this year as the AMS Page Editor and Treasurer of Artsci '77. I attended the last Senate meeting as an observer and I have put in my application to sit on the Senate Committee studying Scholarships and Student Aid. Also, I have been following recent developments concerning financial constraints very closely.

Students need active and responsible input into the Senate. I would like very much to supply this input, so on Thursday, Oct. 16, please vote for Chris Nind.

Julie Wein

I have chosen to run for Senate because it is my opinion that it is the most encompassing body upon which students sit as elected representatives (that is it deals with all sectors of student life at Queen's). To function effectively, the Senate depends upon the input of representatives from both student and faculty senators. The quality of that input is determined by sincerity of these members to act in the best interests of the university population, not only the present classes but those in years to come

Interest in the concerns of the university is most important This interest must be backed by a willingness to take on responsibilities. As a student senator, it is necessary to acknowledge that although one is not elected to be responsible to the particular society (ASUS), one must be a representative and can only be truly so it sensitive to the priorities of fellow students, while at the same time conscious of the demands of the institution

In my past two years at Queen's I have served in various capacities with different student groups including Homecoming '74, Orientation '75 and Camp Outlook Regarding Orientation, I was co-responsible for the organization and staffing of a coffee house each afternoon at Ban Righ. With Camp Outlook, a group member of the Student Volunteer Bureau, I staffed events during the year and organized a series of guest speakers and activities designed to offer perspective staff an opportunity to meet and be exposed to aspects of Outlook.

In closing, I remind you, the Senate is very important Please give it your support

John Say

The Senate is the body that overlooks the university as a whole. From this vantage point it directs and-or controls many aspects of the students' life Students should take interest in it and want to have some say in its functioning

I wish to express the view of the student on this governing body. I have had experience in government functioning and am aware of what methods to avoid. A determined desire to get the ideas and expressions of the student across at the body level. The AMS expresses the desires of the students. The Senate expresses the desires of the university We, the students need a forum in both areas. I wish to be the exponent of this expression.

Ian Jarvis

Fourth Year Political Studies Previous Involvement -Journal Reporter on AMS activities, Queen's Birth Control Centre, ASUS Visitorship Committee Chairman

I've decided it would be presumptuous to present a list of prepared positions concerning issues, the changing substance of which will demand above all, flexibility Rather I intend to present a framework of ideas within which you can trust that my decisions will be made

While the university's cup runneth over, the distinction between words such as necessity, luxury and priority seems to have vanished from our decision-making vocabulary With the imposition of financial constraints it is vital that we reinstitute them. It must be remembered that this is not so much a financial question as an academic question in that our academic priorities should be dictating in what areas and in what proportions cut backs are to be made. If we should decide that the library and other academic faculties are our top priority and we realize our funds are limited then we must reduce certain other services Whether or not these services do a good job is no longer the question. This process of establishing priorities is too often crippled by the defensive reactions displayed by whatever group feels the edge of the accountant's blade--in this case everyone. What is needed are imaginative solutions under the cooperative direction of strong faculty-student leadership.

Another area of critical importance is housing, an area plagued by short term patch-work solutions. If we are to avert a serious crisis in coming years we need to establish a task force among whose first priorities would be to re-examine the allocation of the many properties which the AMS and the University own themselves

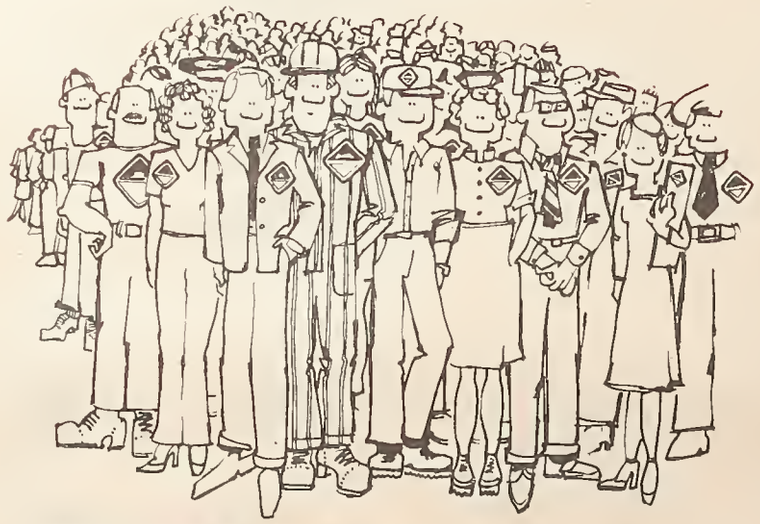
To speed the examination of this and other questions we need greater exposure of the sort of quiet acquiesence to faculty demands that goes on now For most the Senate remains "a riddle wrapped in a mystery within an enigma." It should not be so

Ken Hayglass

I want to get it straight right away I'm not going to give you a long line about Apathy, Lack of Involvement or any of that It is your right to vote and then to have to sit in on AMS or Senate meetings to find out what is being done with your money your University It is your right to have reps responsible enough to value your confidence and keep you informed is their job to tell you

Did you know: 1. Queen's, for experimental purposes along with three other universities will start using Achievement Tests for students coming out of high school These may eventually replace SACU as a measure of students standings

2. The problem of library hours cut back has been referred to the Senate Detailed review of the entire University budget begins in a few weeks



3. Queen's is part of a study showing that from '71-'74, though educating more students per capita than most other provinces, the amount spent per student by Ontario was below the National average. Government estimates for this and next year show it falling still further

What is needed are Student Senators that bring these issues to you and don't make you dig through the Queen's Gazette I know I can do that job.

I do not like them because they often sound insincere, but I really feel this one is necessary Here it is first and last election promise. If you decide I am what you want as a representative in the Senate, I will report after every meeting, what happened, why, and how it affects us. It will be in one of the campus papers, where you can easily find it If something bothers you, let me know, if everything is O.K., then fine I have done my job and we are both satisfied.

That is the quality of Senator which Queen's needs Keep it in mind on Thursday

Queen's office, clerical and technical employees:

200,000 Canadian employees want you to join them.

They're members of CUPE – the Canadian Union of Public Employees. And they know what a job can be like without a strong collective agreement.

There's little or no job security. Promotions are often based on favouritism and there's no system for fairly settling disputes on the job.

You know it too. That's why you've established an association of employees. But an association can only go so far. You need a collective agreement backed by all the strength of Ontario's labour laws.

With CUPE you'll get that and more. You'll also get the backing of CUPE's experts in bargaining, public relations, job evaluation, research and law. And you'll always have a full-time representative on call.

If you do decide to join CUPE you'll form your own autonomous local, elect your own officers and decide your own bargaining goals and tactics.

Remember the Ontario Labour Relations Act says every employee has the right to join a union. Your name is always kept in strictest confidence.

CANADIAN UNION OF PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

Dave dines out

by Dave Colburn

I was wrong. Morrison's isn't the best food buy in Kingston. Seto's Chop Suey House on Division near Princess has value and quality equal to if not better than Morrison's. The most expensive dish in the house is the Sub Gum (assorted meats) at $3.00; most meals ring in at somewhere between $2.00 and $2.50.

The restaurant is small, there are only 14 seats, ten of which are at the counter. The place is a family run business; three or four generations of Setos work at various aspects of the operation. One of the younger members of the family does the interior decorating: His drawings hang on various portions of the walls.

Seto's has a wide variety of Chinese and Canadian food. The Canadian-style meals come complete with soup or juice and dessert. I figured, though, that if I was going to be eating in a Chinese restaurant that I might as well have Chinese food. Never having eaten in Seto's before I didn't know what the best buy was, but being a shrimp lover I quickly decided upon seeing the Shrimp Chow Mein with mushrooms on the menu that I'd give it a try. At $2.15 I couldn't have made a better buy: the shrimps were plentiful (nums) and the Chow Mein was fresh, and carefully prepared. The meal included a plate of white rice to pile the Chow Mein on, if one has to find fault with a place like Seto's it could be here, the portion of rice could have been slightly larger as there was not enough to compliment the large portion of Chow Mein. Including a glass of milk the meal totaled an economical $2.40. If t'd had a friend with me it would have cost a mere 35 cents extra for a double portion of Chow Mein.

All in all Seto's offers a friendly, high quality low-cost meal. I recommend that you try Seto's next time you are looking for a good meal out and don't want to hurt your bank balance.

Æ A Rake's Progress

William Hogarth (1697-1764) was one of the most popular of English artists in the mid-eighteenth century. He achieved this position largely through a new kind of picture, an anecdote or a narrative series dealing with "modern moral subjects", as he describes them, in the manner of a dramatist. The titles of his series, such as The Harlot's Progress, The Rake's Progress, Marriage a la Mode or An Election, suggest some of the themes with which he was concerned in his visual satires.

He reached the general public by making engravings from his paintings which were sold in large numbers through the printsellers, or by "subscription tickets." They were often pirated by inferior copyists, so popular were they. Hogarth's works sparkled with life and wit and were full of visual clues to people and manners of the time, appealing alike to the sophisticated and the naive. He was interested in more than entertaining the public with narratives of 'bawdy' life and directed his satire at effectation and pomp as much as at immorality and corruption. His art became a new form of social criticism.

The engravings had to be read, and read they were by a wide public as we would read the topical or political newspaper cartoons today. Hogarth frequently updated his prints by making changes in the plates between one 'state' or stage of printing and another; a second, third or even later state might be published a year or more after an earlier one. For example, in the print Analysis of Beauty II, to be seen in the exhibition in state 3, the male dancer has been transformed, from state 2, into a likeness of the Prince of Wales, later George III. State 3 was published at least three years later than state 1. Photographs of details of earlier states of several prints are included in the exhibition for purposes of comparison.

The Great? Gatsby

by Tom MacGregor

Jack Clayton is a director who often misses subtety but when he doesn't, he lets us know with the finesse of a Roman Legion. Thus inspite of the talent at his disposal he presented a rather minor The Great Gatsby at Dunning Thursday night.

The script was bascially good. Hollywood's biggest money-child Francis Ford Coppola played it safe and took almost every line right from Fitzgerald's novel. That was best since when they started adding those long scenes of Gatsby and Daisy lounging around the mansion the film started losing pace and slipping into sentimental boredom. Adding the scenes of Wilson tracking Gatsby sacrificed stunning surprise for cheap suspense. All in all it was still at the hands of Clayton that the screenplay suffered most. As Daisy seemingly innocently asks "Gatsby? What Gatsby?" Clayton takes us right back to Mia Farrow's soap opera days with high pitched violins and a zooming close-up. Clayton goes on to add a nuance of his own: That Daisy and Gatsby are actually having an affair when most of Gatsby's charm stems from his pure Platonic devotion (Maybe he thought a 1970's audience was incapable of accepting such a thought.)

Also, much to my surprise, Robert Redford was good as the mysterious Mr. Gatsby. His role only suffering from Clayton's turning our sentimental buffoon into a foolishly sentimental lover. Mia Farrow, first of all lacking the great beauty Daisy was supposed to have, is constantly losing attention to the her much stronger supporting cast of Lois Chiles, Karen Black and the especially fine performances by Bruce Dern and Sam Waterston.

The Great Gatsby is a social comment on the world in which Gatsby was such a stranger. This Fitzgerald drives home in the epilogue with the tidying up Nick does; but here most of all the film falls apart. It repeats things said or seen earlier in the film, drifts back and forth and uses Mr. Gatz's appearance as a sentimental cadience when it should have just made Nick's disillusionment the more obvious.

I see I've made the mistake most common to English students: I've gone to a movie with the book in mind. However I'm sure my attention to this facet was what kept my attention in an otherwise dull and overdone film.

LAW SCHOOL ADMISSION TEST

The Law School Admission Test required of candidates for most Canadian law schools will be given at centres in Canada on October 11th, 1976. The test will be given at Queen's on October 11th, 1975 and February 7th, 1976.

Candidates are advised to make separate application to each law school of their choice and to ascertain from each whether it requires the Law School Admission Test. Queen's University Faculty of Law does require the test. Since law schools select their first year classes in the spring preceding entrance, candidates for admission to next year's classes are advised to take the test as early as possible. Queen's University Faculty of Law recommends that the test be taken no later than February 7th, 1976.

The half-day objective test is given in the morning. It is designed to measure certain mental abilities deemed important in the study of law, and thus to aid law schools in assessing the academic potential of their applicants. The Law School Admission Bulletin, which includes sample questions, registration information, a list of test centres, and a registration form should be obtained by candidates in Canada at least 8 weeks in advance of the desired testing date. The registration form and fees must be sent airmail and postmarked forty-eight days before the test date to guarantee being tested. Registration material may be obtained from most universities or law faculties, including the Queen's Faculty of Law, General Office, in Macdonald Hall, or by writing directly to Law School Admission Services, Box 944, Princeton, New Jersey 08540, U.S.A.

The above paragraph is applicable for all tests. However because many Canadian students have been unable to have their applications for the October test date accepted by the stipulated date, provision has been made that a number of students may be accepted on a walk-in basis at the test at Queen's in Ellis Hall on Saturday, October 11th.

For further detail on time, etc. please check with Room 12, Richardson Hall before October 11th.

Applicants for law school should note that the deadline for applications for all Ontario law schools is February 2nd, 1976.

Pianist Ock Hyon Shin

Music Dep't Presents:

Piano in concert

On Wednesday, October 15, at 8:30 p.m., pianist Ock Hyon Shin will give a piano recital in Dunning Auditorium, under the sponsorship of the Music Department. Admission is free.

Born in Korea, Mrs. Shin began her music career when she won a first prize in a public school concert in 1955. She obtained a B.A in piano at Seoul National University in 1970 and in the same year appeared as soloist with the Korean National Symphony Orchestra. A member of the Korean Baroque Chamber Orchestra she also appeared as solo recitalist in Seoul.

In Canada in 1973, Ock Hyon Shin undertook advanced studies in piano at Dalhousie University in Halifax where she gave a recital in the same year. She came to Kingston in 1974 when her husband, Dr. Kyu Shin, joined the staff of the Kingston General Hospital. In Kingston Mrs. Shin has continued working at the piano with Sophie Bristow, a Studio Instructor in the Music Department. The programme on Wednesday will be: Bach's Italian Concerto; Beethoven's Sonata No. 8 in C Minor, Op. 3; Ravel's Jeux d'Eau; and Brahms' Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Handel.

Bound to flip over Bromberg

by Peter "Ferg" Gilbert

To anyone with ears, it's a well-known fact that in recent years musical boundaries have been blown wide open well beyond any distinct field. Of these creative endeavours perhaps the most surprising has been the new dimensions produced by those artists traditionally belonging to the country-blues music field. In most cases people are apt to designate many such current trends as particularly rock, jazz, blues, or country oriented. There are few musicians who are able to provide in their music a liberal sprinkling of borrowings from all categories: that is, a presentation of sounds which touches on all contemporary musical approaches. For those who are able to do this, their musical testimony ceases to belong to any specific compositional ambient and represents the performer's individual and unique effort. David Bromberg is one such artist.

Bromberg has been kicking around music halls and night club bars for quite a while, and you'll find his name on a lot of albums. His style is focused around an easy-going voice which is as characteristic as his technique on guitar--mainly due to his excellent ability to convey a mood through a natural tonal quality.His overriding asset as a performer is the immediate and controlled rapport he is able to establish with his audience, who soon find themselves listening, stomping, cheering, and sighing knowing most especially that his songs are mostly their own. Whether it be his tongue-in-cheek one liners, his relaxed yet intense grin or his general clowning antics, he and his band are able to do with their music what music should do for you. Most of the time you smile

Of course, the key to a good band is personnel. In this department Bromberg lacks nothing and nobody. His band consists of Hugh McDonald thumping away on bass and holding steady with Steve Mosley on drums. Brantley Kearns plays violin with an old-time passion which matches his classically country supporting vocals. Dick Fegy never misses a riff picking away on banjo, guitar, mandolin or whaling away on violin. John Fernon toots saxes and trills penny-whistle alongside Warren Nichols who performs just as supremely on banjo, steel guitar and trombone. Bromberg himself is best known for his ability on accoustic guitar, although he does go off on an electric blues tangent occasionally. He displays a technical proficiency rivalled by few on banjo, violin, and mandolin.

The collection of such skills in one band is bound to meet if not surpass your greatest expectations. Bromberg's entertaining asides and the carefree attitude of each member of the band adds up to a flowing and original musical comment which is never strained. Each song is fresh and never the same since he uses a sensible approach to performing--whoever is especially hot may boogie away more than another member of the band during a show. As often as not everyone's on top of things. Then anything can happen.

On October 19th the Queen's Concert Committee brings you the David Bromberg Band--a show which guarantees every song to be an intelligent statement made by a group of performers who are excellent and aware contemporary talents brimming with vitality. Most important of all, these musicians play for fun. With this in mind you're bound to have fun as well. Be sure not to miss the opportunity

Soccer still undefeated

by Gary Barnes

The Gaels soccer team emerged from a very difficult road trip this past weekend with four of a possible 4 points With a victory over York on Saturday and a draw against Laurentian on Sunday, the team remained very much in contention for the top spot in the league

Queen's was well prepared and anxious for their match against perenially strong York University last Saturday afternoon, and came through with a well-deserved 4-1 victory. From the beginning, it was obvious that Queen's was outplaying York, but having difficulty in finishing off their plays. Jim Monaghan broke the ice for the Gaels with his first goal of the season, on a good high shot. Aldo D'Alphonso scored for York after a goalmouth scramble to even the count at 1-1.

In the second half the Queen's defense, led by Chris Clarke and Ron Heidebrecht, completely shut off the York attack Horst Labeneick broke the tie and York's spirit by scoring a goal on a beautiful solo effort. Queen's conditioning paid off near the end of the game as they kept the pressure on the York defense and were rewarded with two more goals Mark Bennett scored Queen's third goal on a head ball and Brian Sawyers came cold off the bench to score the final goal on a pass from Jim Monaghan.

After a long bus trip Saturday night, Queen's took the field on Sunday against a very physically strong and also undefeated Laurentian team Queen's was dominant for the first 20 minutes and then Laurentian seemed to take command for the latter part of the first half Neither team had very many good scoring chances and the half ended in a 0-0 tie With the wind in the second half, the Gaels again started out well with their system of short passing and ball control but failed to penetrate the Vee's defense consistently.

A lot of the play took place in the midfield area with few good shots by either team Laurentian scored the first goal on a quick shot which beat keeper Dave McIntyre cleanly. Queen's came back with some good pressure only to have Laurentian score again on one of their few rushes. The Gaels naturally were discouraged but kept plugging away. Bill Ersil turned out to be the hero of the day, in a remarkable comeback, as he scored 2 goals within the last 2 minutes of play. The game finished 2-2 which just goes to show that the Gaels will never say die.

Rugby Gaels trounce RMC

by David Bowker

The College rugby side travelled across the bay, on Wednesday evening to play against the Queen's firsts. This match is often very aggressive as the army boys relish the thought of beating the long hairs. The long hairs, who were out to protect their undefeated record, dominated their opponents through most of the game. Jeff Evenson and Jim Stone, who was making his debut on the firsts, were extremely effective in smothering the RMC running game. The Queen's forwards controlled the ball well in the loose play hence giving the backs ample opportunity to show their speed and scoring potential. Roger Bartley, on numerous occasions, showed some powerful running by driving through his opponents. His efforts resulted in two trys. Tom "Yogi" Yovanoff and Nigel Costaloe, also playing for the first time on the senior team, both scored a try. John Gibson made a brilliant flash down the sidelines, in the process sidestepping several opponents, and added another four points to the score Jeff Evenson's hard work was rewarded with a try. Peter Kopp converted five of the six trys and completed a penalty kick for another three points. An excellent evening's rugby, at least for the long hairs

The Queen's firsts are now tied for top spot in the OUAA league with York University. On Saturday October 11 we play York on their home ground in one of the toughest games of the season

Up, up, and away..... Queen's Rugby Gaels now tied for first place in the OUAA.

WIC-ly

WIC is off to a good start this year with a sizeable turn-out for the aetivities. (This means less unfit people on the campus.) A few people are a little confused as to when they are supposed to play basketball. Check the lists in the changeroom or have a word with your athletic stick.

Next Wednesday night at 7:00 we're holding a paddleball clinic. Come down to the courts if you want to learn or learn more about paddleball. Don't worry about equipment, it's supplied. The synchronized swim competition will be held at 10:00 also on Wednesday. Flag football, badminton, soccer and co-ed volleyball continued on next week. For more information call Christa Craig: 544-4864.

Bews News

Wednesday and Thursday nights of last week saw the Bews Relays and Track & Field Meet respectively. This year the two events were combined for the purposes of scoring. Wednesday night was unfortunately a dismal night to be out and the rain kept many people away. Of the six relays run Commerce '76 and P.H.E. each won three. Commerce '76 took the 4 x 400, the sprint medley and the distance medley relays. P.H.E. won the 4 x 100, 4 x 200 and Paarlauf events.

On Thursday night P.H.E. showed its continued dominance of this event in winning six of the fifteen events. Jim Van Meer took both the 100 & 400 metre events, the latter in a record 54.3. John Hay took the 200 metre sprint. Tasso Eracles won the 200 metre hurdles. Tim Warrop captured the pole vault and Mark Hudson took the triple jump. Other winners were Stephen Earle of Commerce '78 who took both the 800 and 1500 metre events, the latter in a record time of 4:26.5. Dieter Stein managed Commerce '76's only victory in the 5000 metres. Steve McDonald of Law '77 took the 110 metre hurdles. M. Barnes and Steve Watt both of Arts '77 won the high jump and shot put respectively. Larry Humphries took the long jump for Business Grads, Pete Sabiston won the discus for Education and L. Mitchell won the javelin event for Commerce '77.

So over the two events, the winner was P.H.E., 2nd was Comm '76

The harrier was run last Wednesday. Results will be given in next week's Journal.

Flag Football, Soccer, Rugby, Indoor Softball, Innertube Waterpolo are all continuing on in their schedules. Volleyball and Hockey start next week. Tennis singles and doubles, Paddleball and Squash singles are all underway. Entries close for doubles Squash on Tuesday and for doubles Paddleball a week next Wednesday.

Incidentally, Bews officials are needed for Softball, Rugby and Football. If you would like to become an official for any of these sports, fill in an officials form in the Recreation Office, Room 102A of the Phys. Ed. Centre. Note that Bews referees do get paid.

Reminder to athletic sticks: M.I.A.C. meeting at 7:00 next Wednesday in Seminar A of the Phys. Ed. Centre.

Money is the root

Everybody likes money. Money does nice things for you. What can you do with a degree in Philosophy? When I get out I'm going to own a cottage and a couple of cars and a servant. That's what money can do for you. I'll be able to eat all the best foods, caviar and stuff, and still be able to pay for the doctor. Without money the world would end. Who cares about something if it doesn't get you a job? I want a job: that's why I'm at Queen's and not some dumb community college somewhere. And after all, everybody knows that in this world it's me or him. And what's better, me being hungry or him being hungry? We just couldn't operate without our third car. Money talks in this world. Without money there wouldn't be any CN tower for instance. No wage slaves for another instance. Imagine having to drive a Datsun instead of our Mercedes. I'm glad my degree will get me a job I usually forget what I took the year before, but that's okay, I'll still get my degree, and then, Look out World! Especially Queen's degrees. They're the best. You can get a good job with a Queen's degree...Sometimes I wish there was something else to think about.

McArthur protest

Dear Editor,

I have just completed reading your Journal, representative of the students at Queen's University. I was interested particularly in the reporting of the AMS budget meeting, October 2. I was extremely dismayed by the incomplete reporting of the financial statements on page 5. You missed one point of information of importance to approximately 800 students at Queen's, those students attending what is known as the West Campus. You failed to report the cut in funds to McArthur College. Last year McArthur College was granted $1000 by AMS. This grant was dropped out of this year's budget. Whether you wished to expose the issue of funds or not, at least you could report the facts relevant to all Queen's students.

The Whig Standard issue, Friday, October 3, gave more than just a statement of monetary change. It reported the circumstances also. (The Whig Standard is a newspaper representing all residents of Kingston). As a newspaper representing all students of Queen's University, you could at least have reported the change in your financial allotment to McArthur College.

AMS crisis

Dear Editors,

I cannot agree with your analysis of the Alma Mater Society crisis (Journal, October 7).

You pinpoint the size of the AMS as the cause of the recent resignations. The AMS has "grown so large that it cannot find enough capable students to run its spreading bureaucracy." I would suggest that the AMS has not enlarged its operations substantially, that even its most time consuming activities such as the Pub, the constabling system, the commissions and the publications have been operating since long before the present AMS executive took office. Surely there are enough capable persons among the 10,000 talented and intelligent students at this university to fill AMS posts.

"It should be clear by now that students do not have hours of free time to devote to campus politics". Perhaps this is true, but they never have had an overabundance of free time. The difference now is that students do not choose to place the same high priority on involvement in student politics as in the past. They do not make time for AMS participation the way Marv Bloos (a Law graduate), Andy Pipe (a Meds graduate) and many others with heavy academic loads have done.

The AMS must be an attractive organization to work for before students will place a high priority on campus politics. Discussion must focus on real issues that affect students and that appeal to students. Outer Council members must do their homework for informed fighting debate on these issues. These same members, and to some extent the student press must challenge the executive to provide strong programs, policies and leadership, and where it falls short to take the initiative on their own. Student politicians should move out of their sheltered cubby-hole in the basement of the Union and into residence common rooms and co-op living rooms to determine student opinion.

You suggest that we need to evaluate the AMS, again. Rather than more navel-gazing (suggested time and again every year by AMS critics), or asking the next student in the cafeteria line if he desires AMS services such as the Pub, it would be more profitable to get on with the hard work of making the AMS a vigorous appealing organization.

Instead of calling for evaluation, urge student leaders to accept this responsibility. If and when they do, capable students will come forward to help the AMS.

Drinking spree?

Dear Editor:

I am wondering if the Homecoming game against U. Of T. is any sort of typical illustration of the behavior and attitude of Queen's students.

As we walked through the gates, my friends were shocked at first by being rudely frisked. Not until we asked why were we told they were looking for bottles. Bottles?!

Well, we let that one slide, but found the appalling lack of sportsmanship in the stands and the truly obscene yells of the crowd harder to dismiss. We had come hoping to see a football game and join in supporting the Gaels, but we found few people who seemed to be interested in the team at all, as we moved from section to section in search of seats where we could follow the game. A good time at a football game is one thing, getting a bit rowdy when the game gets exciting is one thing, but being totally absorbed with whoever in the crowd is most drunk and who can yell obscenities the loudest seems to be quite a different sort of sport, if "Sport" at all.

We were also appalled at the lack of interest in the game displayed by the cheerleaders. They, too, seemed more preoccupied with entertaining themselves and some of the crowd than with supporting the team and unifying support in the crows.

Am I super idealistic or has football become merely an excuse for a bawdy public drinking spree?

Who's Where

Dear Editors,

This year's Who's Where will not be much different from last year's in content.

Nobody will be happy with the date of issue: late this month or in the first week of November. The biggest problem right now is that press time is at premium right now, and printers have to try to squeeze Who's Where in among all their other rush jobs.

I have a suggestion which would solve both problems: choose the editor of Who's Where by January. This way he can get student contributions, so that information will not just be repeated year after year. He will also have a chance to book press time well in advance, to avoid the problems of conflicting jobs having to be run at the same time. He could do some serious work at redesigning the book, making it better organized and easier to read.

The listings in Who's Where are what everyone wants most, of course. The problem is that various companies want them too, to put Queen's grads on the nefarious lists. If you get a call from someone like this, try to find out where he got your name from. If it seems likely that it came from Who's Where, tell the AMS about it.

Another point about listings: we realize that the time allotted for checking them was short, and so the Journal will publish a free page for corrections, one week after Who's Where appears.

Non-student Gray remains President

by Dan McClelland

John Gray was reaffirmed as President of the Alma Mater Society for 1975-76 by Outer Council at the meeting last Thursday night. Debate arose early in the meeting after Gray announced that he had decided to withdraw as a student from the university.

Gray felt his effectiveness has been undermined due to the tremendous workload of his two major roles at Queen's - that of a student and that of the AMS President. Gray asserted that he could not continue to be effective in both positions and as a result had decided to withdraw from Queen's as a student. He expressed his desire "to continue with the term of office as president", stating that the "AMS is my priority at this time". For him to continue as president, Gray felt a vote of confidence or non-confidence was necessary.

The question was, however, could John Gray remain as President of the Alma Mater Society if he was no longer a student. The AMS constitution, by-law No. 8, Section 2 necessitates that the President of the AMS be a member of the Alma Mater Society?

According to the constitution, Article 2, Section 2, part c: All intramural students of Queen's University shall be ordinary members of the Society, provided they pay the non-academic activity fee...". Ian Nordheimer, Vice-president (Operations) contended that it is the payment of the non-academic fee that entitles Gray to be a member of the AMS, and therefore allows him to hold the office of President. MacArthur rep Doug Bonnell disagreed with Nordheimer's interpretation and felt that membership of the Alma Mater Society hinged on being an intramural student at Queen's.

Several members of Outer Council suggested that Gray enrol in one course and in that way remain a student.

An immediate need to act was felt by several Outer Council members. Paul Steep, recently appointed Internal Affairs Commissioner, saw the matter as an immediate problem and felt Council should decide on whether to agree or disagree on Nordheimer's interpretation. John Wilson, Vice-president (University Affairs) stressed that "we cannot stand two weeks of limbo; we want to see some productive work done."

New AMS committees

by Giles Gherson

Last Thursday's Outer Council meeting saw the inception of several new committees in an atmosphere considerably enlivened by an unscheduled debate and the consequent reaffirmation of AMS president, John Gray.

Attendant on Gray's personal predicament, a committee investigating "the structure of the AMS Executive" will include in its considerations the apparent irreconciliability of adequate attention to academics and the office of AMS president under the present system. The committee will be headed by MBA rep Linda Ketcheson and will consist of both Outer Council members and independents.

In the light of some of the more overzealous orientation activities an orientation committee has been set up. The committee will evaluate orientation and partieularly the way in which it relates to the Kingston community. An AMS orientation policy will then be recommended. The committee will include faculty presidents.

Fund raising schemes are particularly important during a period of financial constraints. With this in mind a committee, headed by Jim Henderson, has been formed to look into money raising programs from parents, Alumni and the public and to "report on present Alumni office activities in this area."

Another committee will "investigate the Day Care situation in Kingston". It results from the feeling that Queen's should provide some material input into an area from which many students derive much benefit. Kathy Wood, who will chair the committee, also noted that the Kingston area Day Care Centre's resources are being considerably strained.

Residence fees

Blue Jeannes

The following is an edited version of a letter sent to the Journal by "the residents of Jeanne Mance" in reply to an October 1 Journal article written by Ross Bartlett:

Mr. Bartlett failed to see the true nature of the complaints of Jeanne Mance residents. After living in the residence for about one month, we feel the issue of residence fees far outweighs that of communication.

For the price we're paying we find we have not received facilities comparable to the Leonard Field residences.

Although residence fees are lower than those charged for single rooms at Leonard Field (for example, first year Arts and Science students pay $75 less at Jeanne Mance), our "standard of living" falls by a far greater amount.

The $75 reduction doesn't compensate for:

1) the lack of private telephones, accounting for about $60 of the $75 reduction.
2) bare, bubbled linoleum tiles, instead of carpeting.
3) cracked paint that falls off the walls.
4) meal tickets that exclude breakfast and weekend meals, without supplying or permitting cooking facilities,
5) a common room the size of a double room that lacks storage facilities and tables and contains one refrigerator for 33 students.
6) the ping-pong table we purchased ourselves because of the lack of recreational facilities and space.

We are paying for more than we are receiving.

Although we appreciate the director of residences' endeavours to supply us with residence rooms, we feel that, since this building might be demolished next year, the administration is reluctant to make the building and our rooms more comfortable.

As the Journal article stated: "maybe someone should think of us."

Peart out

Danny Peart must withdraw from the Ballot for ASUS rep. to the AMS. He is presently a member of the ASUS executive, and to hold two ASUS positions is not constitutionally permitted.

Pub profits

The profits for the House of Commons for the month of September has greatly increased over the profits for the comparable time last year. According to Berni Koch, recently reappointed QSA director, the increased profits are a result of "a higher volume of sales" and "increased prices". Kock stated that the increase will provide a "padding" when the new pub opens. "You do not know what unexpected costs may arise," he said.

SVB News

130 students have signed up with the Bureau as student volunteers. Have you? Most of the agencies still need help, and we'd like you to consider being a volunteer. You need some free time, so check your timetable. You need some commitment - if you sign up, let us know if you have to withdraw. But do not be discouraged - we only ask for an hour or two a week, that's not much! Once you have determined that you have the time, come in to the SVB Office on the second floor of the Grey House. Office hours are 12:30 to 4:30 pm weekdays. We still need 18 males for a dance at the Prison for Women (Dct. 29th). As well, tutors for school age children and swim instructors for Tuesdays or Thursdays; Day Care Centres and the 'Hot Lunch Programme' need help desperately! Come in to the office and sign up!

P.S. Thanks to those who have volunteered. If you have any problems come and see us or give us a call at 547-5766.

Wage and price controls introduced

by Gerry Lewarne

Prime Minister Trudeau introduced selective wage and price controls, Monday to combat Canada's double-digit inflation. The controls will apply to all firms that have over 500 employees, all construction firms with more than 20 employees, all federal government employees, including Crown corporations, and finally, professional people such as doctors, lawyers, accountants, and engineers.

Wages and salaries will be allowed to go up by 10 per cent in the first year and 8 per cent in the second year. Those people not included in the controls (approximately 75 percent of the population) will be expected to follow the guidelines voluntarily.

Prices will be allowed to rise to cover increased costs for a firm and if costs decrease, then prices will be expected to follow.

These guidelines will be monitored by an Anti-Inflation Review Board. The CBC news announced Tuesday morning that two of the three members of the Board will be Jean-Luc Pepin, former Industry, Trade and Commerce minister and Beryl Plumptre, presently Food Prices Review Board chairwoman.

Many people have already commented on the Prime Minister's plan of attack. Robert Stanfield said that he agreed in principle with the action but did not like the long-term implementation of the program (it should last at least two years).

Ed Broadbent said Monday night on CTV that the guidelines affect only the low and average income people and not the wealthy people who will connive ways to get around the legislation.

Fifteen Queen's economics professors said in a letter to the Globe and Mail last Friday that a long-term incomes policy would not work because black markets and shortages would arise because the market system would not be allowed to function. I congratulate Mr. Trudeau on taking a courageous stand. His wage controls will work if those people controlled continue to work. The price controls are much more difficult to impose. The Soviet Union has been trying to impose price controls for close to fifty years and they still can't make it work. Can we?

Is the Journal an organ of the students? Don't be absurd: we all know that the students are an organ of the Journal! (A funny looking one too). So the Journal refused to bow under the pressure to reinstate the backpage with all sorts of news stories. Instead, to spite all those nasty students, we now introduce all sorts of news stories: on page THREE!!!!

Postal strike

The head of 22,000 inside postal workers, Joeseph Davidson, has rejected a 37 percent wage increase over the next 30 months with a cost of living clause. Instead he wants a 71 percent increase over 12 months.

Obviously now, after the Prime Minister's announcement, he will get neither. However there will still be a strike, because before they knew about the legislation, the postal workers said that they would negotiate on their proposal "until there is some evidence of a serious change of heart on the other side of the bargaining table on many matters, including wage rates".

The "many matters" include a demand for a thirty-hour work week and the hiring of casual labour.

The strike could start as soon as this Friday but don't worry, it won't last very long. There is no strike fund for the inside workers. Also the letter carriers will begin to put pressure on the postal workers because they don't want the public to think badly of them come Christmas lip time (Many letter carriers make as much as $300 00 at Christmas time from tips) The many postal strikes of the past few years cannot entirely be blamed on the workers, claim many experts, including John Belanger of CFRB radio of Toronto. Belanger says that management of the Post Office is the height of government inefficiency. This alienates the large majority of workers and consequently they make such outrageous demands.

Skool!

A group of parents in Kingston Township have banded together and hope to start a co-operative nursery school at St. Thomas' Church, Reddendale, in January.

A co-operative nursery may generally be described as a non-profit organization and beeause of parent effort and participation the fees are usually lower than those charged by a private nursery school. In this way, more parents can afford a nursery experience for their child. More important than the reduction in cost is the fact that the co-op nursery school may be a family project with mother, father and child all interested in the same venture.

Parents form a committee to organize the operations of the nursery school. Each parent is required to help the teacher supervise the children for one session approximately every 3-4 weeks.

It is hoped to start off with two classes with 15 - 20 children in each class. The $2\frac{1}{2}$ - $3\frac{1}{2}$ year olds will meet Tuesday and Thursday mornings and the $3\frac{1}{2}$ - 5 year olds on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings.

In order to start operations in January the parent committee needs to be formed now. If you are interested in more information and in registering your child please contact Hazel Clayton at 389-3780 or Jennic Lowther at 389-6767 preferably between 5 p.m. and 7 p.m.

United Way

The United Way Campaign has begun to roll on campus under the direction of John Gray, President of the Alma Mater Society. Student support is essential for the success of the campaign. All interested persons should contact John Gray, at the AMS office.

Tricolor

The Tricolor production staff may soon join the ranks of the Alma Mater Society salaried employees. Duter Couneil passed a motion on Thursday night to recommend to the AMS Board of Direetors "that up to six people receive wages of $550 each for the period covering the production of Tricolor, at the discretion of the editor retroactive to May of 1975".

Corrections

Candidates for ASUS positions on Senate and the Alma Mater Society were Debbie Sigler, Kent Hayglass and Tim Turner. These names were mispelled in the Friday, October 11 Queen's Journal.

Peace prize

Andrei Sakharov, generally considered the Soviet father of the H-bomb but who now preaches for eivil liberties in the Soviet Union, won the Nobel Peace Prize last week. The Soviet press has, in past years, denounced Sakharov continually, but this has not silenced him. Sakharov feels that the Nobel Peace Prize will greatly help the political prisoners in the Soviet Union and in Eastern Europe.

Back to work

In B.C., David Barrett's NDP government passed legislation in a emergency session of the legislature last week that forced striking workers back to work. Strikes and lockouts affected several industries in B.C. including supermarkets, the pulp and paper industry, and the B.C. Railway Company.

Labour leaders have called this action "repressive" and a complete reversal of the platform on which the NDP government was elected. However they did go back to work. Labour minister Bill King has said that no rights are absolute in society and that the action was taken because the man on the street was being crushed in the battle between labour and management. The different strikes and lockouts have paralyzed the B.C. economy but the action was still surprising because NDP leader Barrett has said many times that he has great faith in collective bargaining and that he would not interfere in that process.

Patty Hearst was not brainwashed So says Rolling Stone magazine. Instead she was an "inspiration" to the SLA during her year and a half with them.

The new Minister for Colleges and Universities is Dr. Harry Parrot, member from Dxford. No official edicts from him yet, but at least he has a university education, which is better than James Auld the former minister with a college education, can boast.

The new Ontario Housing Minister, John Rhodes, says he is not in favour of rent controls which was one of the PC campaign promises in the recent provincial election. He says that he is looking for a "better alternative".

Women to rap

Shades of Doonesbury's Ms. Joanie Caucus!

Starting today Queen's hosts a Women's Law Caucus conference dealing with "Ontario Women and the Law"

The four day conference features a talk tomorrow at 10:30 a.m on "The Ideology of Male Supremacy" by Lorrenne Clarke, a criminology professor and the founder of the Toronto Rape Crisis Centre, and Carol Areber, a New Yrok women's collective law firm member.

Saturday, a workshop on health care will be led by Dr. Slyvia von Hannah, a McMaster University medical school graduate, now practising in Toronto and formerly a member of a consumer-run health clinic.

Sponsored by the federal secretary of state department and the AMS, the conference will hold the Friday talk at McArthur College (West Campus) and Saturday's workshops in Macintosh-Corry

A $10 registration fee is required from those wishing to attend, with registration tonight from 7:30-9:00 in Lower Vic in Victoria Hall Residence. Persons wishing to attend the conference can call the Women's Law Caucus at 547-2689 for further information

War research nixxed by NDP

EDMONTON (CUP)--War-related research at the University of Alberta funded by the U.S. military was criticized last week by NDP club members.

A statement issued by the club called for a halt "to research for the American war machine" and appealed to the university's Board of Governors and the Canadian Association of University Teachers (CAUT) for support

Contracts awarded to the university and Calgary University over the past few years include:

a U.S. Army-sponsored ballistics study of the properties of "liquid filled projectiles" conducted by a faculty member in the U. of A physics department;

a $10,000 study of microwave communications, also for the U.S. Army;

a U.S. Navy-funded investigation of the effects on humans of immersion in cold water

A public-funded institution shouldn't be allowed to undertake contracts with the military arm of any foreign government," the statement said.

"When some of these studies are aimed at producing more effective weapons, accepting or soliciting such contracts is grotesque and inhumane."

Following a Board of Governors meeting Oct 3 university president Harry Gunning didn't deny the university was doing research for the U.S military, but said none of it was "specifically war-related".

But dean of graduate studies John MacGregor said earlier the research was "defence-related," but has other applications as well.

The club also said some U.S.-funded research contracts contradicted a university policy of public access to all research. A similar provision is contained in CAUT's professional code of ethics.

But Mac Gregor denied the research was secret, saying all university research is "open to the public."

Rock stars 'stuff it'

SAN FRANCISCO (ZNS-CUP)--Food feasts figure high in rock contract demands, a local rock promotion company, Cellar Dorr Productions, says.

Take Elton John, for example.

A hot sit-down show-time meal for at least 20 persons is required by the man whose first hit record featured the lyrics, "it's a little bit funny, this feeling inside"....

Elton also requests large bags of chips, eight bottles of French and German champagne--with the brand and years specified--fresh vegetables and fruit and, to top it all off, a case of Heineken beer.

The Grateful Dead are no easier to please.

Their show-time dinner demands 60 quarts of milk, six cases of Heineken (it's popular), and steak, lobster and vegetarian meals to feed up to 30 people.

But the Average White Band compromises a little -- their only request is "no fried chicken."

Hoechst thinks ahead

Helping Build Canada

Products and ideas from Hoechst have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. As an affiliate of the worldwide Hoechst organizations Canadian Hoechst Limited has a full century of research and achievement to draw upon. In Canada, Hoechst is an autonomous company employing Canadians to serve Canadian needs.

Hoechst in Canada concerns itself with supplying both the present and future needs of Canadians. The range of products and services covers the spectrum through industrial chemicals, dyestuffs, plastics, printing plates, human and veterinary medicines, pharmaceuticals, and textile fibres. Hoechst products and services, Hoechst techniques and know-how in these fields, combined with a large international fund of experience, have given the company a reputation for expertise which takes constant striving to live up to. Hoechst thinks ahead.

Ideas: The spark we run on

Hoechst develops a constant stream of new ideas to keep its research pointed in the right directions. Ideas about what is needed, ideas about what is wanted. Ideas about what is possible, ideas about what is probable in the light of a constantly changing, ever-increasing body of basic knowledge.

Imagination steers the ship

Imagination is a prime source of the new ideas Hoechst uses constantly in order to keep developing better products — more effective medicines, better chemical and industrial materials. Imagination is only half the battle, but when good ideas are properly teamed with the discipline of applied research, they constitute a formidable force in the search for improved products in every area of modern life.

Scott Joplin whirls in grave

by Jane Doublas

Although Homecoming '75 might not have been a financial success, it was generally summed up as a social success by this year's Homecoming Organizer Jim Henderson. The theme for Homecoming '75 was "Prohibition, gangsters, ragtime, and the big bands" - that catching theme of the good ol' days back in the twenties and thirties.

Prohibition was not just a theme at Friday night's Ooh Cha Cha. It was, unfortunately, the state of affairs. No liquor license could be granted for the event since it was held in Jock Hardy Arena. But the Interyear Organizers and Jim Henderson had hoped that the Big Band sounds of Noel Talarico's expensive Montreal-based orchestra would be appealing enough without alcohol. They were proven wrong and Interyear has lost over $2,000 as a result. Henderson commented bitterly:

"I was disappointed with the attitude shown by the students who felt that an unlicensed event was not worth attending and I was even more disgusted with the behavior of many who came to the door. Many students, both stumbling drunk and apparently sober, paid the $2.00 admission fee and upon then realizing that there was no liquor available, turned around and walked out without even asking for their money back. In a time of complaints about the high cost of events, liquor, etc., the fact that many students could afford $2.00 simply to check if liquor was being served, is a very sad comment on students' attitudes towards having a good time. From the reaction of the 400 or so who danced to the orchestra for four straight hours, I feel that certainly we can have a good time, without having to bolster our spirits with booze."

Henderson invites feedback on this issue and queries, "Does the lack of liquor really prohibit having a good time?"

The Saturday morning Pancake Breakfast was an unqualified success. Saga Foods was most co-operative and volunteers cooked the pancakes. This event gave students a chance to meet on an informal basis. One old fellow claimed that students today are friendlier than they were in his day.

Saturday night's Semi-Formal went smoothly. Those who wanted to escape the loud jazz music of Crack of Dawn could relax and listen to the folk singers or honky-tonk piano player in Kingston Hall. The Square Dance in Leonard Hall was well-attended.

A lot of time, effort, concern and money were invested in Homecoming '75 so that a lot of us could have a good time according to Henderson. Perhaps a little more consideration towards the alumni who come back as our guests and a little more consideration of what constitutes "a good time", would make future Homecomings even more fun for more people, he said.

Constable system defended

Dear Editors,

This letter is in reply to an editorial appearing in last week's Golden Words which criticized the AMS constable system. It is certainly within every student's right to question the workings of such a system, especially when required to do something without explanation. Perhaps this would be a good opportunity to clear up some of the queries people have regarding certain decisions made by the constables.

We are empowered by the AMS constitution to do a job that involves the prevention of damage to University property, while ensuring that people can enjoy themselves at Queen's functions. The University and the organizers of the various events depend on the constable system to help things run smoothly. This involves responsibility on the part of the constables, a responsibility not made any easier when confronted with verbal and, at times, physical abuse.

A constable's position is often viewed as a "power trip" and let's face it, nobody really likes authority, especially when being told what to do by one of his peers. Thus, unless a constable fades right into the woodwork and shys away from the job at hand, he or she is labelled as a "power tripper".

Our policy is one of preventing potentially dangerous situations from developing. If actions are allowed to reach the point where objects are being thrown or fights started then someone is going to get hurt. It is far easier to cope with a possibly hazardous situation by "nipping it in the bud", so to speak. Consequently, we have to draw the line at a certain point and stand by our decisions.

Contrary to popular belief, the "rules" are not made by the chief constable but by the organizers of the events in question and by the AMS, as outlined in the constitution. We realize in upholding these rules that the average Queen's student is a relatively mature and responsible individual. However, we must also deal with a small percentage of the student population who find it difficult to abide by these regulations.

The following is an explanation of some of the policies which have been questioned:

At football games nothing is permitted past the gate which could hurt someone if thrown. This includes bottles, plastic jugs and water bomb material and unfortunately this year we have to add hard fruits to the list. Thus the small inconvenience of a frisk at the gate. People are not allowed to be "passed up" because a few years ago one individual was passed right over the top. The same principle applies for not letting people sit in the back row of the stands.

In the arena, the track is off limits at the request of the Physical Education Centre management. It makes sense that if everybody walked on the track, it would greatly increase wear and tear on the surface and its replacement is expensive. The track is for joggers, the stands are for spectators.

At the Pub and at all licensed university events a student card is required in order to gain admittance. This stems from the number of run-ins we have experienced with non-students in the past. The constable at the front door of the Union asks to see a student card due to the amount of vandalism caused in the building by non-students last year. This should be viewed as a purely preventive measure. Alcoholic beverages cannot be carried from a licensed establishment on the campus or anywhere else for that matter because of L.L.B.O. resultations. To avoid cups being thrown, we discourage students from building "castles" out of the used cups.

Obviously, only the most common situations have been covered above but the point is that if you are asked to do something, there is a reason for it; if the reason remains unclear, feel free to question why. AMS constables are no different from anybody else and consequently do make mistakes and are not always in a "good mood". However when a constable seems unpleasant or appears to be hassling you for something trivial try to have a little tolerance for your fellow human being.

In conclusion, if the student body believes the AMS constable system should be reassessed or disbanded, then an alternative would have to be sought. Would you prefer the Kingston Police, security guards or a full time campus police force? Think about it.

Mike Zinay AMS Chief Constable
Mark Stephen Deputy Chief Constable

Dear Editor:

According to your ad on page 12 on Friday October 10th Journal, the Tricolor and Concert refunds will be available on Oct. 14-17, which happens to coincide with the MacArthur Practice Teaching rounds (Oct. 14-24).

This must be a mere coincidence or oversight for obviously the AMS would not deliberately undertake to make refunds unavailable to MacArthur students unless of course they feared that a large percentage of the 820 students here would wish a rebate, which is extremely unlikely in the face of the recent AMS decision to repeal the MacArthur Agreement.

We therefore hope to see an ad in a future issue of the Journal (one which we will be around to read) indicating where and when the MacArthur students will be able to get their refunds.

Strike at Queen's!

by Terry Collins

Once in a while Queen's students find something that really works them up. Just such a situation developed in 1928 when the student body boycotted classes en mosse in defiance of a poternalistic Queen's Principal and Senate.

The events that set the stage for the strike began with a student ossaulting another student on February 25, 1928. Subsequent disciplinary action was taken by the Senate. The AMS, supposedly in charge of such matters as student discipline, had administered a punishment deemed inadequate by the Senate, according to Alumni Association files.

Four days after the assault, a drinking contest between two students took place in a rooming house. Eoch had wagered that he could drink a quart of uncut Scotch in less time than the other (these were prohibition days. Uncut Scotch was somewhat more potent than your Johnny Walker of today). Both boys passed out and the judge put the two to bed. Shortly thereafter one contestant showed frightening signs of illness, particularly cold spells. To ease the symptoms, the judge, turned nursemaid, wrapped him in a blanket and tossed in a lightbulb to add some extra warmth. Unfortunately, the blankets ignited and the boy wound up in hospital with rather severe burns. News of the contest was reported in a Toronto newspaper.

The Senate was not amused. They suspended the two on March 14th until the supplemental exams in September. Most students agreed with the verdict but felt that the Senate had gone a little too far when they added that the two boys had to get out of town within 48 hours.

Finally, the Senate disciplined students once too often.

One week before the suspension of the "drinking" students, a dance had taken place after an evening of entertainment called the "Frolic". The Frolic had been degenerating from year to year and the Senate was becoming less enchanted with the whole thing. They censored the 1928 Frolic and entered an agreement with the AMS that the dance normally held after the Frolic in Kingston City Hall would not take place. Not to be deterred by this, two Med students and one Artsman held a dance at their house under the sponsorship of their landlord. The Senate was irate. They held the AMS responsible and suspended the 3 students for about a month. For the Meds students, this of course meant the loss of a year. On March 19 the Aesculapian Society held a mass meeting and went on strike. No classes until their classmates were reinstated. But the Senate was equally adamant.

Three days later the rest of the Alma Mater Society met in Grant Hall and agreed that they too would strike in support of their fellow students. The Senate still refused. The three had acted in direct contradiction of an AMS Senate agreement. After all, they had to maintain the Senate's reputation! News of the strike reached the media in no time. Parents phoned their children telling them to come home. Violence was spoken of in the form of burning Grant Hall's benches in front of the building but this was never to materialize. Student calls for resignations were made including Principal Taylor's (who was pretty stuffy according to all student reports and not well liked on the whole).

On March 23rd the President of the Alumni Association, Mr. Sweezy came in from Montreal and, at yet another mass meeting of the AMS, assured the students that if they were to resume classes, he would try to reach an equitable solution. He did. The 3 suspended students were reinstated after only 4 days of absence. Principal Taylor retired less than two years later.

It is believed that the student strike of 1928 was only the second in the history of Queen's. In 1873 the 125 students of that day walked out to help reinstate two "beligerant classmates".

Springsteen moves

by Paul Luke

The single lesson which emerges most clearly from this record is that somewhere amidst the calculated power chords, the electronic wizardry and the endless generic mutations which characterize recent rock, somebody forgot that technique must always be subservient to spirit. Even such group as the Rolling Stones who in terms of temp, rhythm and general delivery can rock as hard as they always have now can only mimic that manic urgency which once made them peerless. After all, it's only rock and roll.

In the magnificent Born To Run Bruce Springsteen proves as vital and desperate and committed as the Stones were at their best. The astonishing quality of this record which insists on being heard above the swooping guitar lines, the soaring saxes and the masterful fury of the keyboards is nothing less than conviction. Born To Run fairly throbs with Springsteen's fervently romantic vision of a religion whose priests are guitarists, lovers and fast drivers and whose salvation lies in a note, in a kiss and on the highway. Springsteen is a rock and roll fanatic and although he chooses to preach from within traditional musical and thematic structures unlike less honest evangelists he is sensitive to the elusive and fleeting nature of the state which he praises. Springsteen compels us to believe with him and when betrayal, broken dreams and death run him down he makes us suffer with him.

Even if you never glance at the remarkable lyrics the experience of hearing a first-rate, elemental rock band fronted by a singer whose very anguish is exhilirating and who pits joy against angst in even his most indistinct mutters is overpowering. If you don't feel inclined to weep during the unforgettable sax solo in "Jungleland" than you probably never will. This is the record that makes you believe again in magic, in redemption, in love, in all the things you thought you'd put away when you grew up and got cynical. This with the wonder and heartbreak and majesty of it all. This record is so much more than only rock and roll. It's a frantic ride into a night where music is the sound your own wounds make and ecstasy is the only price. Get on the mother and hold tight.

What moose?

During the past year Mia Anderson has been delighting audiences with her one-woman show, Ten Women, Two Men and a Moose. The production is a selection of basically non-dramatic works-poems and extracts from prose works by several Canadian writers. Miss Anderson welcomed the opportunity to combine her literary and theatrical interests; previously, the two had been developing on parallel but separate lines. She had previously read some poetry (as well as drama) for records but Ten Women, Two Men and a Moose was conceived as a specifically theatrical presentation. She was anxious to avoid the atmosphere of the lectern and lecture hall. Some literary works have to be studied to be fully understood, but a theatrical presentation demands that the audience be given something to which it can respond immediately.

In planning her programme, Miss Anderson was well aware of the difficulties inherent in such a project. Poetry and prose are, in a sense, more "complete" than plays; they do not need to be "performed" in order to "come alive." Yet many non-dramatic works have potentially dramatic qualities which do lend themselves to the theatre if performed with sensitivity. In her choice of material, Miss Anderson has emphasized works most suitable for this purpose but she has also taken care to give the show variety.

Formerly the director of the Saidye Bronfman Centre Theatre in Montreal, Mr. Marion Andre moved to Toronto and founded Theatre Plus. This summer he will present three "intelligent comedies" at the St. Lawrence Centre including 'The House of Blue Leaves' by American playwright John Guare. Miss Anderson will play the lead as she did in Mr. Andre's earlier Montreal production of the play. The part - a schizophrenic woman, who genuinely suffers, yet is presented often in terms of comedy - is a difficult but rewarding one for an actress.

"If there has been any specific direction in which I have developed my dramatic interests it is toward the merging of comedy and tragedy, rather than their separation", said Miss Anderson. She describes comedy as a kind of "saving grace": the comic vision can redeem events which, when we experience them in our crazy modern world, the comic vision is especially important. Laughter is therapeutic; so is the awareness of irony which is often an ingredient in comedy.

In Ten Women, Two Men and a Moose, Miss Anderson has mixed the comic and the tragic both in her choice of material and in her presentation. She is very skilfull at abruptly and unexpectedly changing the mood of a performance. She can create a situation which is hilarious up to a certain point - then, all of a sudden, it is not funny at all; there are other plots which seem to be deadly serious until they unexpectedly reveal themselves as totally absurd. The audience might see none of this were it to read the script; it is implied rather than stated, and the director and the actors have to present it in such a way that the audience does see it.

Janos Starker

He created standards

Over a decade ago, a leading American critic said of Janos Starker: "He is the king of cellists, and having said that, what more is there to say?" A great deal, it would seem. The same critic recently wrote: "He has the edge of authority that comes with international touring and world-wide acclaim." Now at the pinnacle of his long and unparalleled carrer, he is acknowledged as one of the greatest musicians of this generation.

Starker has been the subject of major news stories in the New York Times, The Los Angeles Times, The Chicago Tribune, High Fidelity, Time, Esquire, Vogue and Newsweek magazines. Audiences everywhere, from the college campuses to the great concert halls of the United States and Canada, outh America, Europe and the Far East have cheered Starker's peerless performances of the Bach suites, the romantic concerti and sonatas, the orchestral tone poems of Strauss and Bloch, and the impassioned works of Bach and Kodaly. Jean Martinon, Miklos Rozsa, Bernard Heiden, among other leading figures, have composed concerti for him.

In his recitals and as soloist with virtually all of today's major orchestras, Starker's globe-encircling tours include as many as 80 concerts a year, many of them combined with his now-famous master classes and string seminars. A noted educator, Starker's classes at Indiana University, where he is Distinguished Professor, attract string players from around the world

Perhaps the most recorded cellist in history, Starker's monumental output includes no less than three complete recordings of the Bach Suites, in addition to his internationally acclaimed performances of virtually the entire cello repertoire. His unique recording, "The Road to Cello Playing," is widely used by teachers and students.

Donal Henahan of the New York Times has written that "The clue to Starker's appeal as a concert performer is a melding of poet, virtuoso and thinker, the fascinating mixture of fire and ice in his playing." During his rise from prodigy to pedagogur, Starker has striven ceaselessly for perfection of technique and beauty of expression, a goat which most of the world's leading critics would agree he has reached. Starker has said of Pablo Casals that "he created standards that were unknown to his time." Today these same words are true of Starker himself

Overlaid

The Queen's Drama Department Chronicle Series opens this year with Robertson Davie's Overlaid, on October twenty-first in Room 102 of Theological Hall.

The twenty-ninth in this series of studio productions, Overlaid tells the story of Pop (Colin Brown), a retired farmer whose only passion is the Saturday afternoon Texaco Radio Hour broadcasts, and his daughter, Ethel (Nancy Palk) a martyr to the work ethic, who wishes only to turn the radio off so that it doesn't interfere with her chores. When G.B. Baily (George Pothitos) arrives to tell Pop that his insurance policy has matured, producing a winofall of twelve hundred dollars, Pop thinks that he will finally see his beloved opera stars in the flesh, but Ethel wants the money to buy a tombstone for the family plot. It isn't fair to say who wins, but the resultant battle says some very strange things about Canada's desire for permanance and a cultural heritage

Directed by David N. Fanstone, Overlaid plays October twenty-first to twenty-fourth at 7:30 P.M. Tickets are available at the Drama desk in the basement of Theological Hall. Admission is free. For further information or ticket reservations call 547-6291

David Bromberg

David Bromberg

Born in Philadelphia on September 19, 1945, David Bromberg grew up in Tarrytown, New York. Inspired by the music of Pete Seeger and the Weavers -- among others -- he began studying the guitar at the age of 13. After graduation from Tarrytown High School, he enrolled at Columbia University intent on a career as a musicologist.

Drawn to Greenwich Village's flourishing coffee house folk music scene in the mid-1960's, Bromberg opted for performance combined with his studies; he left school in the middle of his second year, however, to devote full time to his music. Shortly thereafter, his extraordinary guitar picking and exceptional stylistic range brought him to the attention of many other musicians: Bob Dylan, Ringo Starr, John Hirt, the Reverend Gary Davis, Tom Paxton and Chubby Checker are only a few of the notables who sought Bromberg out as back-up artist for recording. In all, he has played as sideman on over 75 albums.

In 1970 Bromberg decided to become a soloist performing his own and traditional American music, and following a spectacular unscheduled performance at England's Isle of Wight Festival that year he was signed by Columbia Records.

To date David Bromberg has released four albums: "David Bromberg," "Demon in Disguise," "Wanted Dead or Alive," and his latest, "Midnight on the Water."

A singular performer-writer-arranger, Bromberg's remarkable musical versatility and innovative resourcefulness have earned him vast critical and popular acclaim. He is also impossible to classify: As New York Times jazz critic John S. Wilson perceptively wrote, "David Bromberg fits no pigeonholes. He is part of everything contemporarily musical. He is a product of blues, country, jazz, folk and classical music." Added Wilson, "From his early success as a guitar virtuoso, Mr. Bromberg has developed into a brilliant entertainer."

An SRO favorite in concert halls, clubs and colleges across the nation, Bromberg is one of the most charismatic performers before the public today. Concerts by David and his band are extraordinary events. Friends invariably sit in with the group, and performances follow no set pattern of selection. Give and take between performer and audience is complete, spontaneous and totally sincere. "He now has such control of his audience," writes critic Wilson, "that he can, at one moment, hold it in his hand with a tender, touching yet funny anecdotal song, and then set it romping and stomping with a raucous bit of raunch. He is electrifying."

When talking about himself, Bromberg, in addition to being a musician's musician, is very much his own man. As realistic as he is dedicated, he speaks out openly about his career: "I figure that I'll get exactly as successful as I'm supposed to, no more, no less. I'm not going to fight it and I'm not going to grovel for it. I'm not going to act surly in order to preserve my anonymity or folkie status, and I won't eat dirt so that somebody will bill me in some special concert -- I don't believe in that. The only time that I do get surly is when someone tells me how to do my music. That's all I've got. It's the sum total. I'm not married, I've got no kids: I spend my life on the road and I've no hobbies beyond playing guitar, fiddle and mandolin. There's nothing else in my life, so don't mess with it."

a dull Roy Bean

by Tom MacGregor

Much to the distress of the American cinema's public, its most talented heartthrob, Paul Newman, recently admitted to being creatively burned-out. This certainly seems to be the case in The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean showing at Dunning Thursday night.

This movie came out in the last ebb of the great Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid and is an obvious attempt to do it again. We even have a song sequence with a bear replacing the Redford character. Again we are working with the legend of a frontier hero but instead of giving us just one phase, as in the better film, we have a whole anthology of legends. As with the usual anthology of legends, they vary in the quality of each episode, the character becomes quite inconsistant in every thing except his well established features, there is little connection between tales and we have the unavoidable return of the ghost which only confuses and irritates an overall view.

Each episode in this wandering film introduces a new guest star on whose performance the quality of the episode resides. The movie peaks with the appearances of Anthony Perkins as a frontier preacher-errant and a rustic John Houston looking for a place to rest in peace. Steacy Keetch and the bear are certainly amusing but the rest even the climatic appearance of Miss Lilly are quite forgettable.

Newman handles the role with an ease which looks suspiciously like boredom with the script, character and even salary.

All in all Judge Roy Bean's life and times are certainly dull. One would hope there wasn't a real Roy Bean or surely his ghost would ride out of the west on a mission of vengeance.

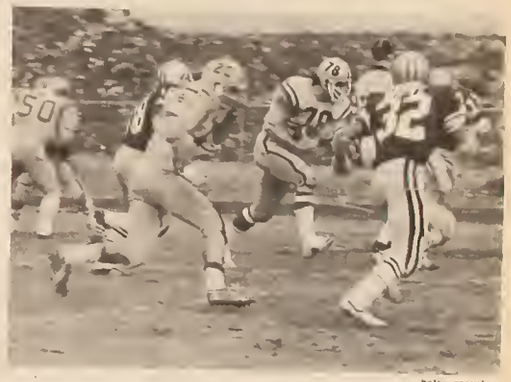
Gargantuan Gee Gees gobble up Gaels

by Tom Shand

University of Ottawa Gees Gees marched for touchdowns on their first two drives and carried on to defeat the Queen's Golden Gaels 35-14. The game, played at George Richardson Stadium before a small Saturday afternoon crowd, was an exciting one, but the Gee Gees were clearly the better team.

The Gaels, seemingly psyched out by Ottawa's reputation as one of the country's top two college teams, allowed the 'Bytown Boys' to move unchallenged for five consecutive running plays in which they gained 55 yards and their first majc score. Super back Neil Lumsden score that T.D., added a second and set an al. time O-QIFC career convert record by kicking five extra points to give him 92, three more than the previous record held by ex-Gael Doug Cozac. All-star wide receiver Jeff Avery caught two touchdown passes and Mike Kelly blocked a Will Kennedy punt and took it in for six to complete the Ottawa scoring.



Both the Gaels touchdowns were scored by Bob O'Doherty who had a spectacular afternoon. O'Doherty caught three passes for 67 yds including Latham's only T.D strike and returned four kickoffs for a total of 192 yds. The highlight of the game for Queen's fans was O'Doherty's 90 yd kickoff return following Ottawa's score from the blocked Kennedy punt in the final quarter The most remarkable aspect of his performance was that due to injuries to Bill McIver and Jim D'Andrea during the game, O'Doherty was forced to play both ways as well as doing his service on the special teams. However, O'Doherty's heroics were not enough, as our offensive line is simply too small to handle Ottawa's front four. Furthermore, our line has not been together long enough to develop into the highly co-ordinated unit required by Frank Tindall's offence. Consequently the Gaels have been unable to control the ball along the ground to date this season despite some strong efforts from our backs. Without a strong running game our offence has not been effective with any degree of consistency as Doug Latham's passing has not been one of the Gaels stronger points Our running game was limited to 130 yards against Ottawa U. with Kerry Powell accounting for half that yardage. Our total offence was held to less than 200 yds while Ottawa's offence amassed nearly 500 yds.

Queen's defence, which I still maintain is a strong unit, acquitted themselves well with the exception of the opening few minutes of the first quarter. The Gaels have been hard hit by a series of minor injuries. The defence went into the match without linebackers Kitchen and Redfern and employed only three linebackers while adding an extra defensive back. On offence, guard Doug Lowry played centre in place of injured centre Jim Murphy while Ian Forster occupied Lowry's guard spot

The Ottawa Gee-Gees deserve their widespread acclaim. They have an air-tight defence and a well-balanced overpowering attack. On Saturday, halfback Bill Harrison ran for 175 yds on 22 carries to lead the GeeGees rushing attack to which Neil Lumsden also added 100 yds. Quarterback Jim Cotton is a cool operator with a piston arm. Second string Q B Yves Leclenc also looked impressive. Ottawa can count on Neil Lumsden to kick them out of trouble whenever their offence gets stalled as Lumsden is both an excellent punter and placement kicker

The classic matchup is next week when the Ottawa Gee Gees travel down to Toronto to battle the Blues. This observer calls it a toss-up and assures you that sparks will fly as the victor will emerge as ranked No. 1 in the country.

The Gaels round out their season with away games against McMaster and Bishops.

Soccer Gaels beat Western, tie Mac to remain No. 1

by Gary Barnes

While most Queen's students went home for the past Thanksgiving weekend, the soccer Gaels were on the road again for another double-header. On Saturday the team travelled to Hamilton where they played to a 0-0 draw against McMaster. (last year's O.U.A.A. champions), and on Sunday Queen's emerged with an important and decisive 2-0 victory over Western.

Saturday's game against McMaster turned out to be a very defensive match, as neither team was able to sustain any offensive pressure. On top of the fact that the field was quite narrow both teams foolishly insisted on playing the ball up the centre instead of utilizing the wings. For Queen's, Ron Heidebrecht (yea Phys. Ed '77) is improving with every game and starting to dominate the play at his centre back position. Brian Sawyer also played a strong game in his return to the starting line-up after an injury. Near the end of the game, the Gaels had a few good scoring opportunities, but failed to connect. Dave McIntyre picked up his second shutout of the season

An unfortunate injury to Queen's captain Chris Clarke, has probably sidelined him for the next few games Chris chipped a bone in his wrist, in the first half, but still finished off the game

In the game against Western, the Gaels started off quickly as Jim Monaghan scored on a pass from Don Barager, only five minutes into the game. Horst Rabeneick upped the count to 2-0 as he scored on another of his sole efforts, near the end of the first half. Queen's did not score any more goals in the second half, but their back line continued to shut off opposing attacks. Graham Durkin, (filling in for Chris Clarke), Ron Heidebrecht, Brian Sawyers and Terry Lister all had excellent games as did goalkeeper Blair Hawkins who registered his first shut-out.

The soccer teams record now stands at 5 wins and 2 ties. A great deal of credit must go to coach John Walker. Over the past years he has instituted a style of play that is both successful and enjoyable to watch. The players have been molded into a hard-working team unit which has a good chance at the league title this year. Two important home games coming up are this Saturday at 2:00 against U. of T and Sunday at 12:00 against Waterloo. Any fan support would be greatly appreciated by the team.

Queen's 3rd in Waterloo Open; travel to Laurentian for OU-OW finals Saturday

by A.J.B.

The track and field Gaels had an early start to the day last Friday when they set off for the Waterloo Open at six in the morning. A steady drizzle which lasted from Kingston to Waterloo turned into a persistent rain and plagued most of the meet. Queen's fielded a shrunken team, as did other universities, at the beginning of the holiday weekend. However, the meet served as a "dry run" for the finals.

The men's team placed third behind Waterloo and U of T; the women's team also held down third spot behind McMaster and York.

There were impressive performances in the field with a 1st in pole vault for Don Kramer, 1st in high jump for Mike Forsayeth, and 1st in shot put for John Ongarato. John Darlington placed 3rd in both the long jump and the triple jump. Tony Verhoeven came 2nd in the discus and 3rd in the javelin.

On the track, there were no particular highlights. Most team members competed only in events for which they desired qualifying times and kept entries to a minimum because of the inclement weather. One memorable (forgettable?) incident occurred in the women's 4x100m relay. This year, the women actually have a hot-shot relay team but a little overconfidence caused Jan Pipe to drop the pass from Lynn Souter at the second exchange and resulted in a disqualification. The girls are thankful that the mistake happened before the finals where they plan to dazzle the opposition after having lulled them into a sense of false security!

On Saturday, the team will be competing in the OUAA-OWIAA finals in the frozen northern wilds of Laurentian University. The men will be looking to at least hold onto 2nd spot behind U of T and the women hope to hold down 3rd behind McMaster and U of T.

Rugby loses to York

by David Bowker

The Queen's first team had little to be thankful for over the Thanksgiving weekend as they suffered their first loss of the season at the hands of York University. Both teams were undefeated and the match was crucial in deciding who would finish first in the league and therefore host the championship game.

York opened the scoring early in the game with a three point penalty kick. Throughout the first half the York fly-half made use of the favorable wind and with his strong kick kept Queen's on the defensive. The score was 3-0 at the half but Queen's was confident that with the wind advantage and better ball control they could take their opponents in the second half. Unfortunately this did not materialize and the York team dominated the play which resulted in a converted try, putting them ahead 9-0. Queen's retaliated with some stronger offensive play but were unable to score. York converted a second penalty kick finalizing the score at 12-0. A disappointing afternoon for the Gaels.

Fortunately the team can redeem themselves by winning their remaining games which would earn them a championship berth. Assuming York finishes the season undefeated we may be able to revenge our loss in early November. The first and second teams play at home this Saturday against Western. The seconds kick off at 2pm and the firsts follow with their game at 4.00.

Bews News

In last week's column I was unable to get the team results of the combined Track & Field and Relay Meets. As I mentioned P.H.E. won the meet with 97 points and Commerce '76 was second with 58 points. Third place was Commerce '76 with 16, then Independents with 14, Business Grads with 11, Commerce '78 and Arts '77 with 10 and Education had 8.

Last Wednesday was a beautiful day for the Harrier. It was warm without being hot and there was no wind. However, in spite of the ideal weather condition, there were only 239 runners. In other years with worse weather there have been up to 350 runners. Anyway, first to cross the finish line was Bray of Arts & Science Grads in a time of 14:25.5, 10 seconds back was Dieter Stein of Commerce '76. Larry Aiken and John Burke, both of P.H.E. were 3rd and 4th respectively and 5th, some distance back, was Dave Morel of Education. The team title went ot P.H.E. who as well was taking 3rd and 4th place spots took 6th with Rick Aikman, 7th with Paul Walsh and 11th with Paul Morel. This gave P.H.E. a total of 31. Second was Commerce '76 with 64. Arts '77 finished 3rd with 140 and P.H.E.'s second team has 141. Education, Civil-Math, Commerce '77 and Mechanical filled out the top 8. It should be noted that although P.H.E. won the team event, Commerce '76 will receive the most points from the harrier. They will receive almost 1500 points in the Bews standings for sending 39 people out to run; Mining had 34 runners, Arts '76 had 24, and P.H.E. 21.

So far, in the outside sports we have been blessed with out-standing (for Kingston) weather. Not one Flag Football, Rugby or Soccer game has been postponed due to rain. In Rugby last week Education beat both Commerce '79 and Law '77, while Commerce '79 upset Commerce '76, 4 - 0. Education has now finished their schedule, because they will be teaching for the next two weeks, and complied a 5 and 1 record. This will assure them of at least a tie for first place in their division. Commerce '76 and Commerce '79 both have 2 and 1 records. In the other division P.H.E. is 2 and 0 Arts '78, 1 and 0

In Flag Football last week Arts '78 tied Mechanical 6-6 and Arts '78 defeated Commerce '78, 8-0. In division 1, Law '78 and Civil-Math are both undefeated with two wins. Division 2 has Business Grads leading with 2 wins and no losses, and Commerce '76 has won the only game they have played. In division 3 the only games played have been with Education, leaving Law '77, Medicine, P.H.E. and Arts '77 all with one victory. Division 4 has Commerce '79 and Arts '76 each with one win in one game. Arts '78 is 1-0-1.

Softball is not as far advanced in the schedule as Football and Rugby. So far the team with the best record is Commerce '76 who is 3-0, P.H.E. has two wins in as many games and every other team has at the most, 1 win.

In Soccer, last week I had two scores wrong. Education beat Mining 5-1 not 4-0 and Law '78 did not lose 3-2 but tied Mining 3-3. Last week Commerce '79 beat Law '76, 2-1 and Arts '77 beat Mechanical 1-0.

Bews Hockey started last Tuesday and Recreational League Hockey begins this Sunday. Doubles Paddleball entries close next Wednesday. Volleyball gets underway tonight.

Executive study committee formed

A motion to form a committee to investigate the structure of the AMS executive was passed by the AMS Outer Council on Thursday night. This is a step in the right direction.

The withdrawal of AMS President John Gray as a student from Queen's brings the need for re-evaluation of the AMS Executive closer to home. The workload of many of the extracurricular activities, especially in the upper echelons of student politics is tremendous and entails full-time dedication if the job is to be optimally performed. Perhaps, for example, the President of the AMS should be made to withdraw from the university for a year, go on sabbatical or at least reduce the academic workload to a part-time basis. These are the type of decisions that the committee will be faced with.

An examination of the communication problem should be undertaken. Why has the Executive become so isolated; so divorced from the student body? Why is the AMS Executive the mysterious cog in the huge, bureaucratic AMS machine? It is to be hoped that through extensive research, great amounts of student input, and the study of similar situations in student governments across the country, answers will be found.

Confused

Dear Editors,
I am confused, bewildered and amazed!?! amazed!?!

On last Thursday, the Aesculapian Society made a rather perplexing decision at a General Meeting. The issue of stipends paid to fourth year medical students was discussed and the students present, largely from third year, expressed the desire that no further efforts should be made to persuade government to increase the level of the stipend.

The stipend was established ostensibly to replace lost summer earnings, since a fourth year student must spend twelve months working as a clinical clerk in the hospital. This in-hospital work requires between 60 and 80 hours per week of regular and on-call duty. The stipend is presently $1200 for the year - the same level at which it was established some 7 or 8 years ago.

By this decision, these students are essentially saying "Yes, we'll work 60-80 hours per week; Yes, we'll give up our chance to earn our way through school with a summer job and-or part-time job; and Yes, we don't think we should receive any remuneration which recognizes the work we do."

Quite aside from the financial bind this condemns many fourth year students too, this decision is a perplexing precedent. Will these same students in a few years have the same concern for government spending and lobby against wage hikes for interns and residents? Will they also as doctors, actively oppose any increase in the fee schedule from which they are paid?

Perhaps the AMS should abandon past policy and actively seek to persuade the government to increase tuition fees, to decrease the levels of OSAP awards, and to decrease the provincial grants to universities. Perhaps all students are willing to perform a year's worth of free labour as part of their "education".

Yours in bewilderment,
Peter L. Lane

Irresponsible

Dear Editors,
The myopic and immature attitude towards the role of a student government and the function of the university displayed by the writer of the column "Budget is Backwards" is thoroughly irresponsible.

To start with, the large allocation of funds to services is a response to student demands for the continuation of such valuable assets to the Queen's student as the pub, concerts, Bus'It, Tricolor, Journal, and Who's Where. The writer appears to be critical of students for having a self-centered attitude and of the AMS for catering to this alleged attitude. We should keep in mind, however, that the AMS must respond to student needs and demands in the service area if it is to be a responsible government. The AMS should be applauded for providing Queen's students with one of the most comprehensive programs of services in Ontario, yet all the writer can do is lapse into criticism for the sake of criticism.

The column suggests at one point that money spent on services would be better spent on "cultural, moral, and social enlightenment of students". I certainly agree that these are important areas and cannot be neglected. But then the writer goes on to lambast continued expenditure on Arts Festival, the Outer Council researcher, and community services. Let me assure you that Arts Festival performs a valuable service for many people associated with the university community. Evaluation of the reasons for continuing such programs are part of the budget debate each year. This year Council gave voice to student opinion and voted to continue with Arts Festival. Where was the writer of this column? The addition of the AMS researcher is perhaps the most innovative aspect of this budget. This person's services will prove invaluable to both the Education Commission and the External Affairs Commission in preparing the many briefs and submissions that must be made to provincial and university bodies. Finally, your attitude towards community services is nothing short of reprehensible. The university cannot retreat into its proverbial ivory tower. Students are among the economic and intellectual elite of society and owe it to society and the community to use both their knowledge and their money to support such community-oriented service programs as they can provide.

I do not think that the AMS budget is backwards. As always, there are more worthwhile projects than there is money to pay for them. We in the AMS are continually trying to resolve competing interests in such a way as to bring maximum benefits to Queen's students for their investment. The writer of the column which I have been criticising seems to be more concerned with a few cents and a beer or two than with having a vital student society involved in all aspects of university life. I believe that there are enough interested students to make all the services and events for which the AMS has budgeted run smoothly.

Before closing, I must direct some criticism at the Journal for running this article in such a way as to make it appear as an editorial. It is customary for columns on letters-to-the-editor page without by-lines to be editorials. Many of your readers may think that the unjustified criticisms contained in the column "Budget is Backwards" represent the editorial policy of the Journal. I hope you would disassociate yourself from such nonsensical opinion and that in the future you will be more careful about by-lining opinion columns.

Yours sincerely,
James C. Avis,
Education Commissioner and Law Rep.,
Alma Mater Society.

Editors note:
The forementioned article, was a column by Brian Copeland, who recently resigned as Education Commissioner and predecessor of Mr. Avis. Mr. Copeland's by-line was a typographical ommission. Our apologies.

Mr. Copeland's opinion was simply that, an opioion and represented in no way the editorial policy of this paper.

Twenty-four student volunteers from Queen's ventured to a tree farm in Quebec last weekend to dig and 'ball' sixteen spruce and four pine trees. In two or three weeks time a crane and flatdeck truck will bring the trees down to Queen's as part of Project Green's plan to greenify the campus. More trips are planned.

Digging and balling for "Forever Green"

Leslie Gaukrodger

Take a good long look at the concrete court between Ontario and Grant Hall. It may be your last opportunity to view this pathway as it presently exists.

Plans are underway for the planting of two rows of tall Black Spruce and Pine in the near future. Project Green, a student organization devoted to increasing the amount of foliage on campus, is sponsoring the project. In addition to providing the funds necessary for movement of the trees, they organized the group of twenty-four volunteers that travelled to the location of the trees this weekend and dug them up - thus saving a considerable portion of the cost of their installation.

The entire project, however, would not be a reality without the generous contribution of Lou Bruce, a former Queen's football star and graduate of 1956 Arts and Phys. Ed 1956. Bruce was a member of the football team throughout his four years at Queen's. Along with Gary Schreider, Ron Stewart and Gary Lewis, he played on the team that, in 1955, won the first intercollegiate championship for Queen's in almost eighteen years. For the past few years, he has been President of Canus Equipment Ltd., an Ottawa based plastics manufacturing firm. In addition he owns a tree nursery in Shawville, Quebec, from which the trees will be taken.

As a result of Bruce's donation during the summer - and the efforts of Queen's student volunteers, the cost of the trees has been reduced to between $1000 and $1500 from the original estimation, made by Project Green, of $6000. One of the major expenses involves blasting through the limestone underneath the concrete slabs in order to make holes for the roots of the large spruce.

Students, feel proud to have contributed to the funding of the court, since the $15,000 necessary for it's completion is being taken entirely from money allocated to Project Green from student fees. Eventually, there are plans to install benches and lighting in the area.

At this time of year, when the landscape is a mass of vibrant colours, we tend to be more vocal in our admiration of trees. I am certain, however, that the results of this project will be appreciated for years to come at all seasons as a valuable contribution to the beauty of Queen's University Campus.

CIA: a multi-national corporation tool

Multi-national corporations with vested interests and government foreign policy-makers are the real issues in United States domination of the Third World, not the CIA, former CIA agent Philip Agee told a Leonard Hall audience Thursday night.

The Central Intelligence Agency, "the principal operating arm of the U.S National Security Council," is only a bureaucracy, he said, and "that's not the real problem."

"Everything I did while working for the CIA was for the benefit of the multi-national corporations alone," the 12-year CIA veteran and author of Inside the Company: CIA Diary, said.

Agee said one Venezuelan assignment involved "checking names of prospective employees who might be security risks of the Creole Oil Co., a subsidiary of Exxon Corp.--itself a pillar of the Rockefeller family fortune.

"The handful of people running the multi nationals who exert pressure on U.S government organizations," is a central problem," he said.

U.S. vice-president Nelson Rockefeller whose family controls Exxon, is a member of the NSC. Earlier this year he chaired a presidential committee investigation that looked into CIA activities.

Agee said the U.S. Congressional and presidential committee investigations of CIA activities will result in "a lot of cosmetic reforms in the CIA." Americans will be shown a clean-up campaign but little will change in substance, he said.

He didn't know if any multi-national with subsidiaries in the Kingston area who have large Third World investments, such as Alcan and Dupont, have worked with or financed activities by the CIA to safeguard their overseas interests.

"But there are really terrible, brutal regimes all over the world existing today that are the historical results of CIA involvement," he said.

Agee talked for more than two and a half hours about CIA "clandestine activities", emphasizing infiltration of youth and student organizations and head offices of large trade unions.

AFL-CIO president George Meany has "worked hand-in-glove with the CIA since the 1940's," he said.

Asked if the CIA had any positive aspects, Agee said, "If you have a lot of stock in ITT then the CIA certainly serves your interests--the agency works essentially for a very tiny minority of the people."

A gash for his trouble

Giles Gherson

Dave Jarvis, Arts '79, received a gash just above his left eye after helping an AMS constable evict another student from the Artsci smoker a week ago.

Jarvis' injury required several stitches and could affect his vision, he said.

Jarvis said he was about to leave the smoker with his girl friend when he saw two AMS constables escorting a student from the vestibule. The student broke loose and "headed for a bystander" whom he apparently punched. To protect his girl friend from the impending brawl, Jarvis helped several bystanders and one constable eject the trouble maker. He then found himself alone outside Grant Hall with him, and off balance, was thrown into the wall" on which he split his eyelid. Jarvis stressed that he himself had not been aggressive.

The scramble ended at the suggestion of a bystander and Jarvis's assailant walked away, unapprehended. Jarvis stated he then asked an AMS constable to chase his attacker. The constable refused on the grounds that it would be beyond his jurisdiction.

Jarvis will take the other student unapprehended as yet, to AMS court on assault charges. The AMS constables are looking for this student and, according to Mike Zinnay recently appointed Chief Constable, "have a good description of him". In fact, Jarvis himself has since seen him on the way to a class.

Jarvis considers that his injury could have been prevented. Earlier that evening he had noticed the other student on two occasion. The first time he was standing on a table "being very vocal". He subsequently got off and pushed one of the coordinators, who had been playing the piano, to the ground. The second time, much later, Jarvis saw him about to leave --still being very vocal". Yet at no time was any action taken to restrain the student by any of the AMS constables.

Mike Zinnay would not comment on Jarvis' charge that the constables should have acted sooner, because of inadequate information. Nevertheless he did point out that "a constable must use considerable discretion in deciding to eject somebody" and in this case it wasn't clear that a constable did witness the events described by Jarvis. Nevertheless in the light of the outcome Zinnay admits that "we did look kind of bad that night". As a result of the incident AMS constables will press charges for Jarvis when they find the suspect.

Although such unfortunate events "happen a lot of the time" at such functions Zinnay sees "no reason to alot more constables" per capita on future occasions.

If constables are too conspicuous "it spoils the atmosphere" he reasoned. On this occasion four constables were on duty, two males and two females.

New faces joined the ranks of the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society (ASUS) representatives to Senate and the AMS in the election held Thursday. Elected to the AMS were, in order of most votes, Tim Turner, Sarah Edinborough, and Rees Cosgrove. Ian Jarvis captured the one Senate position available.

Of the 4900 eligible voters, 521 participated in the election.

If you ever get in serious legal trouble try Legal Aid

john bottomley

Legal Aid, a help for students in many matters of law. But not all....

Shan Atkins

Bill White is an education student here at MacArthur College. Like most of us, he operates on a tight budget. When his landlord hit him with a $50 fine last summer, Bill needed legal advice in a hurry. It had to be immediate and it had to be inexpensive. Bill went to Queen's Legal Aid, a volunteer program staffed by university law students here in Kingston. Now in its sixth year, the program has over 150 students participating, giving up their time to advise area residents and university students on family matters, landlord and tenant problems, traffic offenses, consumer protection, and contracts and debts. Bill got the answers to his questions free from Legal Aid, along with over 1000 others who used the service last summer.

Scope of program

Queen's Legal Aid is really a conglomerate service, made up of three different agencies: Kingston Legal Aid, Belleville Legal Aid, and Rural Legal Services. The last is also the newest. A $20,000 government grant helped establish mobile legal service within a seventy-mile radius of Kingston in the summer of '75. Several days a week, students set up clinics in places like Verona, Sharbot Lake and Tamworth, giving rural Ontarians the benefit of legal advice on their problems. Pat Schmidt, Research Officer for the program and a Queen's law student, thinks the Rural Program particularly effective, because it has begun to change the way people outside of urban areas look at their situations. "Before, if someone else's cow was on your land, you either shot it or moved it off. Now you can begin to think of a legal solution to the problem." The Rural Service Program employed four full-time students last summer and has some twenty-five part-time volunteers involved this fall, each contributing one full day a week.

Client eligibility

Not everyone can use Legal Aid, though, and this is one major disadvantage. There are two eligibility requirements: 1) the problem must be within the limited jurisdiction of the program (no possibility of imprisonment, for example), and 2) there is a maximum income ceiling for clients. The program was initially started as a service to the poorer residents of the Kingston area and to help eligible people apply for an Ontario Legal Aid certificate. This document enables a citizen to obtain the services of the lawyer of his choice, free of charge. Now all cases are initially referred to the Area Director for Ontario Legal Aid, who advises the program which cases they may handle. Students are generally eligible for the university's program, and they make up about forty per cent of the cases handled by Legal Aid.

Practical education

The program keeps two offices in Kingston. One, located in a low-income area at 200 Montreal Street, is used mainly by community residents. The other office, in MacDonald Hall, receives most of the student inquiries. In future the Society hopes to move even farther east along Montreal St. into the Ontario Housing area. By doing this, they hope to be in even better touch with the people they serve, thus strengthening university-community relations.

Why do law students become involved with the program? Schmidt feels it is a valuable and necessary part of an education in law. "Volunteers see practical applications of the statutes, in contrast to the theoretical approach taken in law school itself."

Service is valuable

What do clients think of the program? White says that although he received correct information from the service, he felt that the students lacked sufficient practical knowledge to advise him properly. "I should have been told what to do, not only what my rights were," he stated. Schmidt agrees that lack of practical experience is sometimes a problem for many involved in the program. To help alleviate this, all cases are reviewed by Mr. J.R.C. Dewhurst, present Director of the program and a graduate of Queen's law school, and a letter of opinion, stating where the individual stands in relation to the law, is sent out to each particular client. Schmidt believes that the quality of legal advise would improve if a clinical program, such as Legal Aid, was a credit subject at law school. Many Ontario universities already have such programs. Schmidt hopes that a similar course will be introduced soon here at Queen's.

Legal Aid is a valuable service available to students. Twenty-five cents of your Interest Fee goes to the program, so why not find out what's happening to your money? The next time your landlord hassles you or you want to find out your legal rights in any situation, go over to the offices in MacDonald Hall. The hours are 9 to 5 Monday to Thursday and 9 to noon on Fridays. Your questions will be answered quickly and you'll have the satisfaction of knowing where you stand in relation to the law. And don't forget--all inquiries are treated in the strictest confidence.

Gay supporter suspended

SASKATOON (CUP) -- A decision to suspend a gay liberation movement supporter from supervising teachers in the University of Saskatoon's education department was supported by university president R Begg.

Complaints have since been registered with the Saskatchewan Human Rights Association and the attorney-general's office.

A committee in defence of gay supporter Doug Wilson has demanded the dismissal decision be revoked and that the university make a public statement prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation.

Wilson's open identification with the gay movement would have serious repercussions for the relations between the university and the city's school boards, Begg said, echoing education dean J.B. Kirkpatrick's earlier opposition.

Because the selection for supervisors hadn't been finalized, Begg said, Wilson wasn't a victim of discrimination and his name was simply struck from the list of possible candidates.

Begg said Wilson's open affiliation with gay people would cause resentment by student teachers he was to have supervised, possibly preventing them from doing a proper job.

Wilson was suspended Sept. 23 by Kirkpatrick following an ad run in the student newspaper which sought students who wished to participate in the campus gay organization. The ad identified Wilson as the contact person.

At a public meeting last week Saskatoon Gay Movement member Doug Hclliquist said Kirkpatrick is afraid of Wilson's presence in the school system.

If a threat was present when homosexuals were allowed to teach, he said, the threat should also be present with heterosexual teachers, since seduction of students was possible in either case.

From the thousands and thousands of entries submitted, a board of anonymous Journal staff selected Mike Gilbert's caption as the first winner of the Great Journal caption contest. One member of the selection board said the choice was especially difficult, since most of the captions 'were pretty foul'.

Staff are students

by Debbie Coyne

A new University policy was introduced in 1972 under which Queen's staff, upon successful completion of one university credit course, would receive 50 percent reimbursement of their fees. This policy was extended in September. Now employees may pursue up to two credit courses, one of which may be scheduled during working hours. Furthermore, after successful completion, the total amount of fees will be reimbursed.

Mr Fleming of the Queen's Personnel Department, in an interview with the Journal, said that, last year, sixty-five staff emmbers took courses under the sponsorship program. Secretaries and senior clerks comprised the majority of these employees. Many pursue courses out of interest, although the courses are expected to contribute to increased proficiency in their job. Others are working towards a degree.

Donna Allen, a librarian in Mackintosh-Corry Hall, already has a Science degree, and is now intending to obtain a degree in Modern Languages. Miss Allen has taken courses under the policy in the past and, this year, she is taking one course during the day and one at night. Not only does she find the experience stimulating and enjoyable, but her task of cataloguing foreign authors is greatly facilitated.

Penny Reyers, the Data Control Clerk in the Personnel Department, is taking an Introductory Business course. She too enjoys her classes and feels that the course will be useful in her present and future jobs.

Carl Duttle, the Groundskeeper for the University, began taking courses in 1971. Since then he has taken a variety of courses such as French, History, Chemistry and Biology, despite the fact that only some of these have been covered by the reimbursement policy. He is currently working towards a degree in Physical Geography and hopes to graduate next Spring.

In addition to the increased opportunity for taking regular credit courses under University sponsorship, special non-credit courses are now offered to Queen's employees. These are primarily designed for the administrative staff. This year there will be a course in "Cost Reduction at Work" in association with the financial constraint program. Presentations will be made by operating heads on the subject of the costs they encounter such as expenses related to consumption of energy and the use of stationary. The attending staff will then divide into groups and each group will be expected to submit a proposal as to how they can help to reduce these costs at work.

The staff at Queen's appears to have great opportunities to continue their education at the University. The recent extension of the reimbursement policy will, no doubt, provide employees with an increased incentive to broaden their scope of learning within the working environment.

Buffer for paper

WINNIPEG (CUP) -- A joint buffer committee responsible for the management of the University of Manitoba student newspaper, The Manitoban, has been established by the student council and the newspaper's staff.

Called the Manitoban Operations Committee (MOC), it will handle complaints lodged against the paper, and approve the choice of editor on a recommendation from the newspaper's staff.

Editorial control rests with the staff and editors, but the MOC retains the power to dismiss any staff members who "for no valid reason refuse to provide accurate and thorough campus news" or if they refuse to print a paper.

Intended to be independent of the student council and paper, the MOC is solely responsible for setting its own bylaws.

The committee will include four student council-appointed members, four newspaper staff-appointed members, and one legal representative.

NEW A.M.S. COMMITTEES

On Thursday, October 9, the A.M.S. Outer Council created several new committees. The following is a short description of these.

Orientation Committee

A committee will be struck to investigate Orientation and report back to Outer Council at the first meeting in January with recommendations for an A.M.S. Orientation Policy. Special attention will be paid to acts of destruction and vandalism which may have occurred in the past and ways to avoid these in future. This committee will be chaired by Danny Peart, and will consist of at least one member of each faculty.

Honouraria Committee

This committee, chaired by Greg Turnbull, will draw up a schedule of proposed Honouraria and will report back to Council with recommendations in two months.

A.M.S. Executive Structure Committee

Linda Ketcheson and Nick Gray will form a committee to investigate the structure of the A.M.S. Executive and make recommendations in time to be implemented for the 1976-77 Elections.

Student Government - What Kind?

A committee will be formed to conduct a survey of Queen's students to attempt to discover the type of student government the students want.

Day Care Committee

Kathy Wood will chair a committee to investigate the Day Care situation in Kingston and report back to Council in six weeks with recommendations on the subject. Special attention will be given to the possibility of developing a role for Queen's with respect to day care. Anyone interested in sitting on this committee is invited to contact Ms. Wood at 544-2055.

Alumni Fund - Raising Committee

Jim Henderson will chair a committee to investigate money-raising programs from parents, Alumni, and the public and report on present Alumni Office activities in this area. The committee, to report in one month, is to make recommendations to Outer Council regarding fund-raising schemes.

Editor's Comments

Since I have some extra space on this page, I would like to take this opportunity to express some personal views.

I would like to congratulate all those involved in the recent A.S.U.S. elections. Special congratulations go to Ian Jarvis, the new A.S.U.S. Senator, and to Sarah Edinborough, Tim Turner, and Rees Cosgrove, the new A.S.U.S. reps to the A.M.S.

There seems to be a rather disturbing attitude among several students this year that life at Queen's is not quite what it should be. University life is only as good as you make it. There are so many activities students can get involved in that I maintain, if you are not satisfied, you are to blame.

Finally, I have read many letters this year that attack the A.M.S. With the exception of a very few, these letters have cut up the present A.M.S. without offering any constructive criticism. Many students have strong feeling against the A.M.S. for no real reason. The A.M.S. Outer Council has just formed a committee to study student government at Queen's, so I challenge all students to sit down and think about what you want the A.M.S. to be and do. Try to formulate some concrete ideas, so when you criticize the A.M.S. you are able to do so constructively.

A.M.S. OUTER COUNCIL MEETING

Thursday, Oct. 23, 1975

in the McLaughlin Room Students Union

AGENDA:

1) Discussion of Proposed Ammendments to the A.M.S. Constitution.

2) Reports of Committee Selections.

Everyone is welcome.

The A.M.S. is working for you.

Open House

Brenda Lee Pickin, an executive for Open House, says that Earl Hall, Gordon Hall, Jeffrey Hall, Stirling Hall, MacIntosh-Corry, the Phys-Ed Centre, Miller Hall and the Anatomy Building will all be opened for Open House on November, 15, and more are expected.

Open House Chairman, Ron Desrosiers, has called a General Meeting for Open House, at 7.00pm on Thurs. Oct. 23 in the Polson Room, Students' Union. "I hope that at least fifty people show up," said Desrosiers.

All those that are involved are expected, and new volunteers are welcomed.

If enough volunteers show up, then tours of the University will be offered on the 15th.

Although Open House is to show Kingstonians the university and how it serves them, "we hope Queen's students will all come to the evens", said Desrosiers.

Academics stunt roles

Students and reproduction

by Jim Henderson

University does not permit either men or women to enjoy fully their reproductive roles. The academic structure should become more flexible, so that female students could have children without ruining their chances of graduating. So argued Lorrenne Clarke, a criminology professor and founder of the Toronto Rape Crisis Center, in the opening session of the Women's Law Caucus Conference on Friday, where Clarke presented her paper, "Ideology of Male Supremacy".

Clarke examined political and legal theories in support of her thesis that the ideology of male supremacy, or in fact sex discrimination, is at the foundation of all political theory. Analyzing Marxist theory in detail, she concluded that politics and political theory are "formalized attempts by men to ensure control of both the products and means of production and...of reproduction."

Believing that what Marx is to the proletariat what feminists are to women, Clarke argued that women have been seen as simply reproducers because men refuse to acknowledge their part in that process. She said she firmly believes that reproduction is necessary and must be shared fully, but especially must not be excluded from the political and public basis of society To the extent that women become producers, they become de-sexed, losing their function as reproducers, and therefore she sees socialism as a necessary condition for true liberation but not a sufficient condtion. A full liberation of men and women is not entirely possible under capitalism because the basis of such political theory sees women and the continuity of male supremacy in children as part of the private property value.

Asked about the theory proposing that women be paid a wage, Clarke answered that such a dependence would simply transform reproduction into another form of production. It is extremely vital that women not lose the encumbent full sense of sexuality.

Queried as to how this can apply to us as university students, she suggested that the educational system must be much more flexible in order to allow women and men to enjoy their reproductive roles without suffering the problems present in concurrently following their productive roles (i.e going to school, working part-time, etc.). This would mean making the number of required courses, number of hours per week, allowed to reach a degree credit much more flexible. Grad students, for example, might agree that reproduction must be seen as a social function and that political-social theory must be re-designed around this fact to eliminate "structureal sexism"

Rector: days of only pomp are past

Bruce Raddalz

In a small office on the third floor of Dupuis Hall, surrounded by books, papers, cigarettes, and a toy ear, sits Bruce Trotter, the Rector of Queen's University.

The Rectorship has an interesting history. It was held by student-elected prominent Canadians from 1912 to 1970, and consisted mainly of ceremonial appearances with the Chancellor and Principal at Convocations and retirements. A 1970 referendum decided that greater use should be made of the voting membership in the Board of Trustees, which the Rector was entitled to, and that the position would be student held. It was hoped that this would promote better consideration of student concerns in the Board's decisions of how the university's money would be spent.

In an interview, Trotter shared some of the experiences and insights he has had since being elected to the post last November.

One of the most common points mentioned in the election campaigns was the almost total lack of job guidelines. Trotter has found this to be true, and one of the best aspects of the job. The sense of satisfaction Trotter enjoys in a job where "the range of activities is limited only by the scope of the individual's interest and imagination," is great.

One of Trotter's election promises was active interest and participation, and he feels he is fulfilling it. He is an active (and appreciated) member of several committees, such as the University Centre User's Committee, and he helped plan the AMS reply to the Principal's report on Financial Constraint. He is seen regularly at AMS, Senate, and OFS meetings, and is going to add to this list the student caucus meetings of the Senate.

Trotter claims to enjoy attending these meetings, but participates only if serious mistakes are being made, unnoticed by everyone else. He feels in such cases that "someone has to do something," but these environmental factors" have created much of his work load. He would prefer the meetings to be only information sources.

Trotter's present involvement in some areas (ie. the University Centre) is a carryover from his days as Vice-president of the AMS (1972-73). Some of his present effectiveness is also due to that experience. It helps him act as an extra information link between the AMS and Senate, and among the AMS, but induces the disturbing feeling of being the "wise old man." He considers the introduction it has given him to Administrative officials, and their correspondingly increased confidence in his viewpoints to be extremely valuable. The one disadvantage; "it taints your view of people and issues. If you had a bad name with someone before, it sticks, and vice versa. This is fortunately not a great problem."

The criticism this involvement has drawn does not bother Trotter unduly. He remembers the opposite criticism the previous Recor faced, and feels that the premises under which he was elected justify his actions. The "gains" in terms of contacts and understanding of issues, make the time and criticism worthwhile.

Trotter realizes he is only one of several mediators between students and administration, but has found the Rectorship to be, in many cases, the best. The flexibility that a lack of budget, subordinates, and organizational hassles gives is unique and very valuable. Close communication between he and the AMS President is one of his major concerns. It is important that they present a united front to the administrative officials.

The committee and meeting activity is Trotter's method of finding student opinion. He feels his votes should be cast according to the conscience of the student body, not his own.

Trotter does not detect any tokenism in the Board of Trustees. He feels welcomed as a full-fledged member; his viewpoint is listened to seriously, and he feels the hope of having better acceptance of student concerns is being realized. Of all the administrative bodies, he lauds the Board of Trustees as being the most sympathetic to, and interested in, student concerns. He would not like to see the Rectorship revert to its old status.

Submit ideas or suffer!

Charles Cuffari

What are the problems facing student aid programs in Ontario? During the past year, an Interim Committee on Financial Assistance for Students was appointed to advise the Minister of Colleges and Universities of Financial arrangements required in the long run to assist post-secondary school students, as well as the steps necessary for implementing these arrangements. This committee is now inviting submissions from both Universities and students, relating to specific needs, problems, or just general criticisms of existing Ontario student assistance programs. They are also looking for revised or even completely new schemes of student assistance.

Accessibility and equality of opportunity are two problems which face student aid programs at present. It is easy to say in broad policy terms that no individual should be prevented from understanding or pursuing his or her studies for financial reasons, but how or should policy in this respect be implemented? What about the problem of totally independent students who cannot get student loans due to the high income of their parents? Should a student assistance scheme ignore labour market demands or manpower planning? To what extent should assistance be based on academic performance? Can a flexible aid program be set up which will adapt automatically to factors such as inflation and unemployment? These are only a few of the questions which must be answered if Student Assistance programs are to be altered in any realistic way.

Members of the Senate Committee on Scholarships and Student Aid are therefore looking for ideas from students. These can be given to D. N. Ellis at the Student Aid office or to any student senator.

The recent increase in the number of Mopeds in the city has prompted this purveyor of Artsci Bullshit to investigatively investigate the problem. We went right to the best source of information possible: a genuine Moped Gang Member.

David Harleyson (not his real name) answered our questions with as much courtesy as could be expected from the sub-simian mentality associated with the typical Gangman. His replies were punctuated by guffaws and suppressed laughter from other gang members who crowded around during the interview. David (not his real name) is a member of the Mighty Moped Macho Monsters, one of the vicious gangs that have terrorized the city; speeding, "burning rubbers" (in the gang's own parlance), and knocking down old ladies to steal their false teeth.

He was wearing the typical and cunning dirty undershirt, and no helmet. When this was pointed out to him, David (not his real name) snarled: 'Our skulls are, generally speaking, so tough we don't need helmets. Besides, we have a deep rooted faith that consciousness is rooted in intelligence, and were we to wear a helmet, it would restrict the expansion of consciousness experienced when we ride our machines."

We asked him why he had taken up this practice. "I'm a mean bastard, an anal retentive, you know. It fulfills me when I throttle and maim. My personality is completed, and inner tranquility results."

"Yeah, but what about the inner tranquility of your victims, not to mention the mere continuation of their physical existence? How can you just ignore their feelings?" we asked, our moral humanitarian sensibilities enraged.

"Well," he drawled, "I've done a lot of studying, especially of Queen's students and senile old ladies (these two groups are our favourite victims), and I've come up with a theory. I no longer believe in the blood and veins theory. People are solid inside, you know, like a potato. This is the only possible explanation."

"But doesn't even a potato have rights?"

"Upcoming upon future considerations should be always forefronted in the mind and thoughts of all thinkers should be the premises whose principal can be summed up as follows: The suffusion of transcendence in our multifarinaceous sociological idiom is symptomatic of a basically Freudian Tertiary. Now, what this means is this. In our democratic society those we attack are free, both to defend themselves, and to achieve their own inner security, through bleeding to death if they so choose. The democratic system, taken to its logical end, means that everyone is his own boss. In other words; it is prima fascia obvious that anything that happens is their own fault. So its not our concern," said David. (NHRN)

"Horseshit," we snorted. "By the way, I notice that your girlfriend is the ugliest girl I ever saw in my life."

"Yeah, she used to be a woman's libber, but she was so ugly that eventually more than anything in the world, she wanted to be regarded as a sex object. So that's what I do."

"Why do you use Mopeds for inner peace?" we queried.

"Well now, we realize that our Mopeds are the single most useless thing ever invented (except maybe for the electric pen), that they are dangerous to us and to others, that they make noise and stink, and that a bicycle would be better, but we don't give a good goddamn. They're fun, they're easy, they're in fashion and we aren't too smart, so we like them.

Queen's Principals

Terry Collins

A distinguished Englishman once said he would rather be Principal of Queen's than of any other Canadian University because it is old enough to have traditions, big enough to have standards and small enough to have character.

Rocky start

This was not the case for our first principal, a chap named Rev. Dr. Thomas Liddell. He arrived in Kingston after his appointment to the post by the Presbyterian Church and was surprized to find no college or students. He toured Canada West trying to drum up interest in Queen's before its opening. Fifteen students were in attendance opening day, March 7, 1842. Unfortunately, three of these were ineligible. The only building available for teaching was a small frame house on Colborne St., north of Princess. No fanfare, no speeches, no ceremonies, just two teachers and a dozen students. Of the students, only one was eligible to take Rev. Liddell's Theology course. Apparently Liddell lectured as if he had twenty students, diminishing neither the number nor the length of his lectures.

The first courses offered were Latin and Greek, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Church history and Oriental language.

Reverend Liddell quit in 1846 after a frustrating term of office because of hopelessly inadequate funds, no buildings and few students. . . . The principal's office was occupied from 1842 to 1930 by Presbyterian clergy, even though this was no longer required after 1912 as it had been under the original Queen's charter.

Reverend Machar served for two years following Rev. Liddell's resignation. Machar was instrumental in establishing a Faculty of Medicine at Queen's. He remarked at the time of his appointment, "....as the number of students is not great, my duties in the University will not add very greatly to my labours, and will not interfere with my pastoral duties."

Reverend Cook served as principal from 1857 to 1859 but he concerned himself primarily with finding a successor. It was under Cook's administration that the AMS was formed, the first student government in Canada.

For four years, Rev. W. Leitch was principal of Queen's. He helped organize a Law Faculty in 1861 which died a few years later (the Law Faculty was re-established in 1957). Queen's enrolment quintupled to 153 in this period.

Reverend Snodgrass succeeded Leitch in 1864 and worked on raising money for Queen's. He was the first to allow women to the student ranks and established a good library.

Grant Hall

Reverend Dr. George Munro Grant then took over for the next twenty five years, from 1877 to 1902. Under him the number of faculty members grew from six to sixty. His brother once said he was "the Prince of pocket pickers" in reference to his money raising success. He solicited funds from the Kingston residents for Fleming, Ontario and Kingston Halls. When he tried to get money for a convocation hall, the city voted his plan down. Grant was well loved by the students and was seriously ill at the time of the appeal to Kingston for the new building. Queen's students raised the $44,500 required and called the building Grant Hall instead of the proposed 'Frontenac Hall.' The building was opened by Queen's Chancellor, Sir Stanford Fleming in 1904 after Grant's death. Grant had also added the Ontario School of Mining which begat the Faculty of Applied Science.

Succeeding Rev. Grant was Reverend Gordon. Gordon separated Queen's from the Church, further developed the Board of Trustees and Senate and achieved an independent Theological College.

First Principal of Queen's University
1842-1846

Modern times

In 1917, Principal Taylor took over and worked hard to help the University grow at a fantastic rate. Endowments tripled and government assistance and capital grants increased substantially, due largely to his work. Under Taylor the Commerce Faculty began.

Sir W. H. Fyfe became our ninth principal in 1930. During his six year term, standards of excellence in teaching quality were greatly improved.

Dr. R. C. Wallace took over in 1936. An incredible list of credits to his name, Wallace was given no less than fifteen honourary LLB degrees as well as many others. He added to Queen's the Board of Graduate Studies and spent 15 years as principal.

Dr. William Mackintosh was another distinguished scholar and government advisor. He served Queen's for ten years to 1961 at which time Dr. Corry took over. Dr. Corry arrived at Queen's in 1936. He and Dr. Mackintosh both had been faculty members prior to their appointments as principal. Together they re-introduced the Faculty of Law in 1957.

In 1968 Dr. J. J. Deutsch began his term as principal. An eminent economist and government advisor, Deutsch was noted in Porter's book The Vertical Mosaic as one of a small number of Canadians who could step in and out of academic and political circles with ease. His outstanding skill as principal was instrumental in maintaining peace at Queen's during the turbulent years 1968-1972.

Last year, Dr. R. L. Watts assumed the principalship of Queen's and walked into a difficult time of government cutbacks. His considerable talents will be of critical importance in the months and years ahead.

Queen's has been home to some extremely distinguished Canadians as principals. She will undoubtedly continue to attract many more.

Gray should resign

Dear Editors:
It appears to us that the decision of the AMS to allow John Gray to remain President is misguided and wrong. If Mr. Gray is no longer a student, then he should be forced to resign his position as the top man in student government. The payment of non-academic fees alone is not, or should not be, enough to qualify for such a position of power. Furthermore, if the present AMS constitution is flexible enough to allow Mr. Gray to remain President without being a student, then it should be altered to eliminate such loopholes. We have no personal beefs with Mr Gray. Any student who withdraws from academic life ceases to be a student and should also leave student government whether voluntarily or involuntarily. This is simply a matter of principle.

infringement on financial right

Dear Editors
In response to an editorial entitled "CRISIS" in the Oct. 7 issue of the Queen's Journal, in which the author requests to hear student demands, I would like to make a comment.

As I understand it, twenty dollars of my student fees go to paying for "sports activities" i.e. football games. I resent this very much; I didn't come to Queen's to watch football games. I understand the concept of school spirit, but do not wish to participate in any way in competitive, organized sports. Surely this is an infringement on my financial right. Let those who wish to attend football games foot the bill.

the tones of a displeased child

Dear Editors
In response to D. Rayko's review of "Winners", Queen's Journal Oct. 7.)
Is not the aim of criticism to nourish our capacities for (positive) response to a work of art? Can this aim be furthered by dwelling on an unsatisfying experience? Your remarks resounded like the tones of a displeased child, effectively closing the mind's doors to whatever possibilities you felt were unrealized in the play. You may have found the play a negative experience - your criticism did nothing to stimulate your readers' response to their experience.

Dear Editors
On Saturday night October 4, 1975 my husband and I were privileged to be one of the couples from our Club invited to the Square Dance at Leonard Hall. Eight couples from our club attended to assist the caller in helping the students to dance and to demonstrate Square Dancing to the students. We were very impressed to the amount of participation and how much the students seemed to enjoy this dance. Many of the students asked about where they could learn to dance and this is what has prompted me to write this letter.

My husband who is a square dance caller but does not call on a regular basis now has always been interested in starting a club for young people. As most people know there is two clubs in Kingston geared mostly to older adults and we were wondering if there would be enough interest and response to starting a club on campus.

If you know of someone who is interested in discussing this further please call 389-3723 after 5:00 p.m. or during the day 547-6184. Saying once again how much all the square dancers who were guests enjoyed the dance, and also if you do not wish to further the above idea keep in mind that my husband has called square dancing to groups similar to Saturday night, and he would be glad to be of service if at any future time you would like to have another square dance. Thank you appalled at Lane

Dear Editors:
This letter is written in response to the letter by Peter L. Lane in the Thursday October 16 Journal concerning stipends for fourth-year students

I am appalled that Mr. Lane felt it necessary to write this letter to the Journal, and as well I am disgusted by the sarcastic tone exhibited. At the Aesculapian Society meeting in question, there was a very thorough discussion of all sides of the issue. Mr. Lane himself spoke at length in favour of increasing the stipend, as did others. Others made the point that asking for an increase in the stipend would not increase the net income of a fourth year meds student because OSAP would just subtract any increase from the grant given to fourth year meds students as part of student awards. Furthermore, the point was raised that the Ontario government might not look kindly upon such a suggestion of stipend increase in the face of the increases asked for by the Canadian Medical Association. The government might review the whole question of stipends and cut them off altogether, as happened in Manitoba.

But this is beside the point. The vote at the meeting was not close, and over two-thirds of those voting opposed any efforts to increase the stipend. I personally was pleasantly surprised to see such a strong indication that perhaps my fellow students will not become physicians who are obsessed with a desire to get wealthy at their trade.

In any event, a majority decision was made, and if Mr. Lane cannot accept that decision, I am sorry. But I don't like the idea of a sarcastic letter to the Journal after such a majority decision has been reached. The question was indeed a tricky one, it was well discussed, and the students in attendance all voted as responsibly as they could. I reject Mr. Lane's action following this decision.

Dear Editors:
I would like you to clarify a point I have been curious about for a couple of weeks. Recent issues of the Journal have included articles on musical groups due to appear at Queen's, for example the Earl Scruggs' Revue and the David Bromberg Band. In both cases, the advance articles were quite laudatory. In fact, they read much like a publicity release from a promotion agency. I think it desirable that the source of the writer's information be indicated, and if in fact the source is a publicity release, the article should be presented as advertising, and not as an unbiased, critical review. Would you please explain your policy in this area?
Michael Walker
Ed. Note: All advance articles are indeed publicity releases from promotion agencies. As such, the author's name is not included as this would indicate that the article, was indeed, an unbiased, critical review.

community news?

Dear Editors:
I was pleased to see students complaining about the lack of outside news in the Journal. Adding my voice to the crowd I question your lack of reporting local news in Kingston. Too often, a student's perspective, apart from Dominion, the Island, and the L.C.B.O., ends at Union and Barrie Streets.

For a city its size, there is a lot happening in Kingston. As well as the cultural aspect, there is a lot going on in City Hall that affects students. When was the last time a Journal reporter attended a council meeting? After all, we live in Kingston for four years, shouldn't students know a little more of what has happened in the community?

Dear Editor,
Today, again, I received more junk mail-words of wisdom from some Christian organization.

I myself am a Christian, but I honestly resent the fact that the people in these organizations are constantly trying to shove God and religion down my (and others) throat. They hit us as soon as registration was completed, again today through the mails, and from experience last year, they are not through yet.

Fine, many people are interested in becoming involved with these groups, but let them go to the group - we all see the posters for meetings and services around campus without getting personal invitations. This would ensure that only truly dedicated people would come out, and the rest of us "sinners" would have no reason to be so frustrated.

Dear Editors,
That adds up to a lot of blood! Congratulations Queen's students on an all time record high. This is the most blood that has been donated at Queen's since the Engineers first started the clinic in 1962. I'd like to thank all those who assisted at the clinic, setting up, helping the nurses and packing up. To those of you who attended the clinic I think you will agree that the Red Cross operates a most efficient clinic and should be congratulated. The team of nurses who operate the clinic are members of the Red Cross mobile unit from Ottawa who operate clinics in the vicinity of Ottawa, Having run clinics at other universities, they were very impressed by the turn out at Queen's.

This is the first of the semi-annual blood donor clinics, the second of which will be held in February. Queen's has broken its old record of 1100 pints this clinic and I know will be even better at the next clinic. If 1500 people donate that is only 15 percent of Queen's and we all know that there are more than 15 percent that count.

give to the library

Dear Editors,
I want to add my voice in support of Messr's Hadrill, LePage, et al. They advocated we support our library with an increased student interest levy of several dollars. Fred Cane advocated a similar student library tax last year in the Gazette. It is time to seriously reconsider what our student interest fee should be used for.

There are some who would argue that it is the function of the AMS to meddle in student services, not in academic services. That's nonsense. The library is our most important service and we should be contributing. I want to go further than the gentlemen above though. Let's cut back on athletics, forget the Tricolor, raise the student interest fee, and sweep off any bar profits that might ever show up and plow it all back into the library.

A lot of drivel about improving the AMS image has been passed about lately. Forget the image and instead take advantage of the nicely trimmed Inner Council to advocate a change in the scope of AMS services.

Amnesty International

An open letter to Queen's

This week we are asked to remember the thousands of men and women in countries around the world who have been imprisoned, and sometimes tortured, for expressing their conscientiously held beliefs.

Many of these men and women have shown great courage in speaking out openly against repression.

As academics who have a professional concern with freedom of thought and expression, we have a special duty to expose the plight of such prisoners and thus to put pressure on their governments to release them. An organization which specializes in this work is Amnesty International. Amnesty International is an international organization based in London, England; it is not affiliated with any government or political grouping, and it takes up the cases of prisoners from all over the world who have been detained in violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In Amnesty's fourteen years of existence over 8,000 "adopted" prisoners have been released. Amnesty International is also conducting a campaign for the abolition of torture, a campaign to make torture as "unthinkable as slavery".

The work of Amnesty for prisoners of conscience requires both individual participation and money. Individual participants work for the release of adopted prisoners, and money supports the research work to ensure that the facts of repression are known. (It costs on average more than $200 to prepare a case sheet on an individual prisoner).

Please take a moment to fill out the coupon below, and return it to Mrs. Marion Meyer, c/o Department of Sociology, Queen's University. Donations made to Amnesty International Canada are deductible for income tax purposes; a receipt will be issued.

For local information please contact Jo-Anne Raynes, 544-6739 or Susan Thorne 544-3232.

Integrative Education

Anti-ratomorphist thought

Stephen Ross

Today's university education is unappealing, disjointed, and too often irrelevant. Why? It's presented as separate, particulate disciplines.

Everyone today has some interest in "man and his world". Why then don't the economics, sociology, etc., courses provide us with an overview of this theme? A synthesis of man's relations, in its manifold aspects, to his environment. In economics, you get the "ideal consumer, in divine isolation, with the perfect company, in utter absurdity" Similarly, in psychology, the prototype-model human being is in the form of an inbred white rat. These courses avoid the world as we find it; that is, the world as a whole. Yes, data and hypotheses are best assembled in small pieces. But these parts should be reassembled afterwards. This is integration, and education which attempts to facilitate such a process may be called integrative.

Integrative education could help you assemble even the disparate jamble of academia in order to create a coherent, meaningful scheme. The scheme itself is up to your efforts and your tastes. But the tools, called integrative principles, help facilitate this "reconstruction of reality".

The integrative principles have been gathered from general systems theory, general semantics, communication theory, and a systems philisophy, to name a few. These are all essentially logistic schools of thought, that is to say, anti reductionist, anti-ratomorphist (ie man in the image of a rat). All strive to synthesize a view of the world which allows some room for harmony, inter-connectedness and growth, phenomena which physics, chemistry, and rat-philosophy seem to deny. People who have contributed to these "schools" include Alfred North Whitehead, Ludwig von Bertalanffy Gregory Bateson and Ervin Laszo.

If you want to put together the fragments of your mind, find the meaning of existence - or just kick some fun ideas around, Elroud College is offering a series of integrative education seminars throughout this academic year. The first one will be given by Bill Higginson of the Canadian Center for Integrative Education, and will be held in Elrond College, 9th floor, Wed. Oct. 22 at 8.00pm.

If you have further ideas or suggestions, contact the Chairman of the Education Program at Elrond, or Stepehen Ross at 546-9797.

Getting high with Bromberg

Alan Mann

"We'll be up here for a long time," said the voice from the stage, "so I hope you're not bored." The speaker was David Bromberg and the audience in Grant Hall was far from bored. In fact after two and a half hours, the David Bromberg Band had to almost sneak off stage to avoid a fourth standing ovation attempting to call the amazed group for yet another encore. Towards the end of the concert Bromberg said, "You're musical masochists, but I can't pretend I don't like it."

The concert started off a bit late due to the rather late arrival of the band because of the adverse weather conditions. After sound checks were made, the crowd of 750 was allowed to enter. When the lights dimmed, David Bradstreet took the stage. The music was smooth, the licks clean, and the songs good. Even when Bradstreet broke a string on his guitar, he quickly replaced it, but also entertained the crowd by singing Irish Shore, an achapella (a song sung unaccompanied by any form of music.) The only criticism one might make of Bradstreet is that his diction could be improved and his words slurred less. As it was, he was well received and was called back out for an encore. Bromberg joined in and the crowd had been well prepared for the show that was to come.

The difficulty in explaining the incredible time Bromberg and his audience shared will be well understood by any and all that attended. Bromberg had just completed a tour of the South-Western United States where the audience shouted and yelled at the band, but never listened; and Kingston starved for an honest and talented band willing to open themselves up to an eager audience willing to listen and appreciate. Together they created a real concert.

The versatility of the band was constantly shown and never ceased to amaze the crowd. Instruments were exchanged by the members of the band, and the music included old traditional tunes with no known composer, revamps of such old familiar tunes as High Heeled Sneakers, Wonderful World, and You Can't Do That, plus many originals such as Midnight on the Water. Each song seem to build one upon the other with no end in sight. The band kept being called back, and the band stayed willing to come back. Finally, after almost three hours of non-stop playing, the David Bromberg band left the stage

In the Queen's Journal for 25th November, 1899, there appeared an "Arts Note" commending certain students on the organization of a drama club, and wishing them more success than had attended an earlier group, whose club had succumbed to "the slings and arrows of outrageous pastime." The "Ladies Column" of the 21st December issue of the paper also supported the new club with an article denouncing all those who said that the presentation of drama would "instil into the hearts of poor unsuspecting students that most terrible of all evils--the love of the stage." Despite opposition and the failure of its predecessor, the club--the Drame Guild--worked vigorously and is now in its 76th season.

The Queen's Drama Guild will hold its first general meeting of the year this Wednesday, October 22nd at 5:30 in the "Green Room" in the basement of Theological Hall. Possible activities for the coming year will be discussed at this meeting. Any interested students should attend as this would be a good time to join the Guild.

Owing to the success of the Drama Guilds, "Guildhall Mystery Theatre" radio plays last year, arrangements have been made with CFRC for another such series this year. Men and women are needed to perform in the 13 projected shows. Anyone interested in writing a radio show for the series would be most welcome to.

Membership in the Queen's Drama Guild is open to all faculties. Anyone interested in the Guild's outrageous pastime should come to Wednesday's meeting.

Bleak Picture Show

Tom MacGregor

Artistic fads seem to turn on a wheel, the same things turn up then rotate away again. Realism is one fad which showed up quite strongly in the late 60's and early 70's with such films as Easy Rider and Five Easy Pieces. Although it sounds absurd, realism can be taken so far as to be quite unrealistic as in Peter Bagdanovich's first film, The Last Picture Show, to be seen at Dunning Thursday night.

Realism in movies tends to be justified reaction against the Hollywood - Singin' in the Rain vision of life. It demands that we look at the bleaker harder side of life. However The Last Picture Show forgets the possibility of a smile and gives us nothing but bleakness. It's most praised aspect, being shot in black and white, sets the mood immediately. It is centred on a decadent Texas community run by the only good man in town Sam the Lion (Ben Jonson's oscar winning role), and its influence on a teen-ager (Timothy Bottoms) about to enter his twenties. In the course of a summer we see a fourteen year-old mess with a two dollar whore; a forty year-old woman take a teen-aged lover; the town bitch (Bagdanovich's girl-friend, Cybil Shephard) strive desperately to lose her virginity; a child molesting; and of course the good friend who cuts open his pal's face with a pop bottle. As I said bleak

This drowning drabness carries over into the one great scene which brings to the foreground for the first time one of the 1970's best actresses, Ellen Byrstyn. In this scene a high sexual tension, as indeed the whole flick is, she plays the Bitch's mother reminiscing about the good old days when Sam the Lion was young, but alas they too are gone.

In spite of the excellent cast, the originality of shooting a movie in 1971 in black and white, and even the maintained tension throughout, this movie fails in its whole attempt. It's realism is not as believable as the clean idealized past shown in American Graffitti. Recently Bagdanovich has turned his hand to comedy. Maybe there he can find a more believable world.

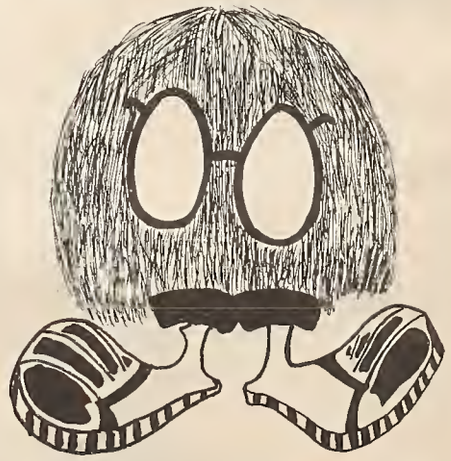
If you didn't see 10 Women, 2 Men and a Moose you missed a one woman show that proved an entertaining, Canadian response to Canadian Life. Those of us who attended the informal discussion sponsored by the Ban Righ Foundation for Continuing Education on Friday afternoon, enjoyed the engaging and frank comments of a most charming and highly professional Canadian actress, Mia Anderson. Miss Anderson has put together a witty collage of Canadian literature and brings well known characters to life in excellent dramatic form. Exerpts from works included in her show were written by Margaret Atwood, Margaret Lawrence, Marion Engel and P K Page among others.



Most of the material dramatized was written by female authors. As far as International Women's year and the Women's Lib Movement influencing her selections. Anderson states that she doesn't associate herself or her show with the militant side of the movement. In reference to equality, she assumes she is already there. This assumption of liberation is a positive contagious feeling, Anderson says, which allows women to reach a centrality in society without militant measures. She feels that women writing about women give honesty and insight to the feminine condition and are "more hardnosed" in ther approach.

In the show itself, her ingenious juxtaposition of her carefully edited material gives the audience the effect of laughter and tears which she sees as a true reflection of reality. Anderson delightedly explained her Canadian symbol - "Beaver be damned - This country's a moose!" The moose call record used in the show was wildly effective in eliciting laughter and skepticism from her audiences. She comments that her show was received differently in various parts of Canada. Anderson is sensitive to the shyness or exhilaration of her audiences adapting and toning her performance to the feelings of the cross section of Canadian people that view her show.

Her performance is a well thought out exposition of her interpretation under the direction of Walter Massey. The set design, she describes as a sort " of split circle, designed after the material was chosen, and comes out of images.,, Even her gown was chosen with Canada in mind - "Green with a lot of white-like snow" Anderson's mosaic of Canadian literary characters including the beloved Hagar Shipley (The Stone Angel), the two men and her moose had obviously delighted and surprised the people at the informal diseussion of her performance Friday afternoon. One listener commented; "When I looked at you on stage - it was Canada there!" "And that", replied Anderson,"was what was intended."

Chronicles XXIX

Overlaid

The Queen's Drama Department Chronicle Series opens this year with Robertson Davie's Overlaid, on October 21 in Room 102 of Theological Hall.

The 29th in this series of studio productions, Overlaid tells the story of Pop (Colin Brown), a retired farmer whose only passion is the Saturday afternoon Texaco Radio Hour broadcasts, and his daughter, Ethel (Nancy Palk) a martyr to the work ethic, who wishes only to turn the radio off so that it doesn't interfere with her chores. When G.B. Baily (George Pothitos) arrives to tell Pop that his insurance policy has matured, producing a windfall of twelve hundred dollars, Pop thinks that he will finally see his beloved opera stars in the flesh, but Ethel wants the money to buy a tombstone for the family plot. It isn't fair to say who wins, but the resultant battle says some very strange things about Canada's desire for permanance and a cultural heritage.

Directed by David N. Fanstone, Overlaid plays October 21-24 at 7:30 pm. Tickets are available at the Drama desk in the basement of Theological Hall. Admission is free. For further information or ticket reservations call 547-6291.

Love and Death

Sandra Bernstein

Were there cheerleaders and "red-hot" vendors on the field of Borodino? Is there a heaven, and if so, will there be girls there? For the answers to these and other questions, (unless you're one of those people who can't stand Woody Allen) you'd better hurry down to the Capitol 1 to see Love and Death, Allen's new "epic" comedy. It is probably one of his finest and most ambitious efforts to date, a witty, literate and raey picture.

Love and Death is set in Russia during the Napoleonic Wars. The objects of verbal and cinematic parody include Russian masterpieees of literature, Hollywood's previous depictions of same, Bergman's high-style classic, The Seventh Seal, and the most famous sequences from Eisenstein's revolutionary films. Allen has apparently been a long-time enthusiast of Russian culture, as he showed several years ago by publishing in Getting Even a Weight-Watchers' article in the style of Dostoevsky. Love and Death reinforces the faet that after conscientious, intelligent study of major works, his obvious respect is combined with doubts about the praeticability of heroism and formal philosophy in everyday life.

In the film Allen plays Boris, an intellectual aristoerat of thirty-five, a pacifist who when forced to enlist leaves for basic training like a kid going to summer camp, with butterfly eollection and net tueked under his arm. Boris is seeking some sign that a benevolent God exists; he comes to the conelusion that God isn't evil, but might be called an underachiever.

One of the delights of the film is the gap between nineteenth-eentury aristocratie Russian culture and twentieth-century America. The characters speak, of eourse, with unabashedly Ameriean (often Jewish-American) aeents and slang, their culture clashing outrageously with the one we associate with the costumes and sets. In one Pythonesque episode, for instance, Boris and cousin Sonja drive the village idiot to the city, so he can attend a convention. A banner across the Tudor-style hotel reads, "Welcome Idiots."

At the same time, Eastern Europe is a setting as appropriate to Allen's sense of humour (much of which derives from sophisticated Yiddish humour and dialect) as much as the introduction of two Napoleons fits in with his hero's "short man" complex.

The eomic pace here is often as rapid as in the best Marx Bros. films; the casting is excellent, although one has doubts about leading lady and straight-man Diane Keaton, whose woodenness may or may not be part of her function.

Allen's real genius, however, lies in the faet that the character he has created finds itself at one with universal fears and longings - there is a bit of Woody Allen in every man and woman, a statement that could not be made of many leading eomedians. Perhaps it is the creation of sueh a charaeter that puts Allen ahead of actors such as Peter Sellers. Probably the fact that, like Chaplin and Mae West, Allen often controls his own script and direetion, has enabled him to create his charaeter with a maximum amount of personal artistry. His films form a sequence, pitting his person against the heroes and standards of manhood found in one movie genre after another, mueh as our own lives and anxieties contrast with the charismatic people and adventures of the silver screen. One ean only look forward to and speculate about his next pieture, now that he has given us a moek epie.

See it before I give away more of the jokes.

Waterpolo Gaels still undefeated

Queen's Waterpioto Gaels travelled to York University this past weekend to play two more league games in their mareh towards the Eastern Division title.

Queen's first game was against their rivals, the also undefeated U. of T. Blues. This game was the first meeting between these teams this season and was undoubtedly a preview of the Eastern division showdown. The first period saw Queen's jump into the lead, 3-2, as they out-swam and pressured the Toronto team. Toronto's goals were both seored while the Gaels were a man short, due to penalties. In the second quarter, something eame over the Gaels as they watched the Blues score three unanswered goals to take a 5-3 lead. However, things quickly changed as Queen's resumed their fast swimming and hard checking style of play in the second half and dominated the Blues, winning the last two periods by identical 2-1 margins. So the game ended as a 7-7 tie, but Toronto must have felt fortunate to gain this point as the Gaels eame on strong at the end of the game and might have pulled out a vietory. Chris Whately led the Gael seorers with 4 goals Mike Fox added two, and Pete Trebuss seored one.

Coach Simon Beitler was extremely pleased with his team's performanee, with everyone playing exceptionally and putting together a solid team effort. He praised the forward line of Mike Fox, Dave Ardell and Pete Trebuss for their untiring swimming and shooting that kept the U of T defense off-balanee. Bob Brisebois and Orville James were outstanding on defense and Chris Whately played his best two-way game of the year, checking, swimming and setting up scores. It was a moral vietory for the Gaels, who are looking forward to their next meeting with the Blues. Of note is the fact that the Gaels have only two hours of official practice time per week while the out-played Blues are given 10 hours of pool time in which to practice.

Mac's mistakes aid Gaels' cause

Tom Shand

On a cold and windy Saturday afternoon in Hamilton, the McMaster Marauders displayed the form which has prevented them from winning a game this season. The Marauders coughed up the ball nine times to help the Gaels to a 16-3 vietory.

The Marauders have some good football players but their talents are lost on a team which seems determined to lose.

The only loaded gun in the Marauder's arsenal was halfbaek Ross Trip, who gained 145 yards in 23 earries with most of that ground gained in the first half. Mac also had early sueess on two reverse plays but the Gael's defense quickly caught on to this manoeuvre and future attempts failed miserably.

Queen's defence proved to be our best offense as they seored the only touchdown and also set up all three Gael's field goals. The defenee pulled in five intereeptions and allowed only four completions. Darrel Penner was unquestionably the leader of the pack as he picked off three errant passes, recovered a fumble, and scored on a 94 yard punt return in the second quarter. Penner, in a brilliant effort, seampered over 150 yards using the whole field to take full advantage of his team-mate's blocking making this touchdown the most exeiting play of the season.

Mae used two quarterbaeks, Smith and Lyons, but both proved to be totally ineffective, making the MeMaster hopes of vietory jeopardized every time they attempted to pass. The Marauder team is a poorly disciplined unit and this hurt them often, both through needless penalties and disorganization in their substitution for special teams. For example, on Will Kennedy's eonvert attempt the Marauders had only eight men on the field!

Our offense was somewhat impotent but harmless, avoiding costly turnovers

In the second game against Carleton, the Gaels eame out flat and were down 4-3 at the half. This may have been due to a number of factors, but mainly it was a matter of taking the opposition too lightly. However the second half saw Queen's come back to assume the lead and eventually win the game 13-8. Goals were seored by Mike Fox, with 4, Chris Whately, Dave Ardell, Pete Trebuss, and Bruce Hopkins with 2 each, and Craig Render with one. Bruce Everden was outstanding on defense and received a souvenir of 5 stitehes above the eye for his efforts.

The stage is set for the next tournament at U of T in November when the Gaels and Blues will again attempt to determine who is number one in the East. The Blues currently lead the East by two points by virtue of an extra game played, but the Gaels will change that next time the teams meet! The players would like to thank Glenn Goodman, (G.G.) for his patience and efforts as manager, and extend their thanks to Gerry for a good time.

Doug Latham's passing was fairly sharp but both passers and receivers had to fight the biting cold wind and several passes were dropped. The Gaels missed Bob O'Doherty tho left the game in the first quarter after catching three passes for 39 yards. Rookie Blaine Shore caught two passes in replacing O'Dougherty but also dropped an easy pass in the end zone!! Gaels' fullback Jim Duncan also injured himself in Saturday's game and was replaeed by another rookie, Paul Shugart. Shugart, a versatile baek, has not had any game experience at fullback, and appeared hesitant in running into the line. Kerry Powell once again played well as he ran for 81 yards in 15 earries. The offense gained 283 yards total offence with all but 100 yards eoming along the ground.

Latham mixed his plays well and made use of all his reeeivers in eompleting 12 of 19 and surrendering only one interception.

Queen's kicking game was onee again strong as Will Kennedy, although not a powerful punter, has been eonsistent all year. Kennedy accounted for 10 of Queen's points as he hit on 3 of 4 field goal attempts from distances of 18, 29 and 17 yards and converted Penner's touchdown.

Queen's play Bishops in Lennoxville next week. It will be Frank Tindall's last game as eoaeh of the Gaels. The team, although eliminated from gaining a play off position, would dearly love to improve their reeord to 3 and 4 in honour of their illustrious eoaeh.

Notes: Queen's defense has allowed only a total of 2 pts. in their 2 victories thus far. Kennedy forced to eoneede a safety toueh for Mac's other 2 pts....Diek Bakker seored 2 sacks in the Mac backfield while replaeing injured Bob Freeman at defensive end.

Archery final

Part two of the O.W.I.A.A. Fall Archery Championships was held at Queen's this past weekend. The participating universities were Toronto, Western, Guelph, and Queen's. The Championship consists of three rounds, Round 1 having been shot previously at Guelph. Following completion of Rounds 2 and 3, Toronto proved once again they were the O.W.I.A.A. Fall Champions with 9032 points. Western came second with 8602, followed by Guelph with 8445. Queen's finished fourth with 7696 points.

Linda Kazienko of Guelph is the O.W.I.A.A. Individual Fall Archery Champion for a second year, having shot a total of 2338 points over three rounds. Queen's top archer was Gail Jackson with 2035.

Rounds two and three were shot indoors. A round consists of 90 arrows shot by each archer. Five ends were shot at 30 metres, five at 25 metres, and five at 20 metres, for a total maximum score of 900 points. An end consists of six arrows.

Marion Ross, former Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Director at Queen's was Lady Paramount. Thanks go to all the friends of the Queen's archers who served as scorers and statisticians, to Gail for organizing a super banquet, and especially to coach Hey-U who, though he didn't get the championship on his birthday, guided us so patiently through those ends of frustration.

Editor's Note: The sports section extends warm greetings to Suzanne 'sherk' Sherkin. Hi Suz, how are ya? Keep in touch. We miss you.

The Queen's skier

by Howie Goldford

Peanut butter and a bag of raisins, the staples of the self-sufficient backpacker, were all that was left for lunch. The wind blew a rainbow of fallen leaves past as I settled down to take in the hillside view and gum my way through another meal. A rocky outcropping provided the ideal place to sit, but as I bent down I noticed something very peculiar. the rock was scarred. It was slashed from left to right and back again. Ugly gashes into a timeless face of strength.

Unable to decipher the origin of the scars, I strode up the mountain further and discovered more rocks with the same markings. Some of the cracks contained bits of colour; not nature's colour, but a waxy substance. Blues, greens, oranges, reds and yellows. Imbedded by the same freakish acts that sliced the face of the rock.

Beside one of the larger rocks I noticed a plastic circle and, not far away, another circle made of metal with plastic spokes and a hollow center. Nearby, a piece of green plastic, transparent to let in the sun, was impeding the growth of a small patch of grass. And just off in the woods, by the broken bough of an immature pine tree was a bent shaft of metal, almost completely hidden by the autumn's accumulation of leaves. It appeared as if, in a fit of revenge, the tree had twisted the pole in repayment for breaking its precious limb...

On further exploration, under a darkening sky, I came across an eerie sight. Against the steepest face of the mountain five giant metal skeletons with arms joined through a long, drooping rope, linked the base of the incline with its peak. Dangling from the rope, like charms on a bracelet, were two-seater park benches, weathered and folded up as if in permanent storage. The chain of benches was unbroken; my eye could follow them up the hill and down again, tracing their path on a never-ending conveyor belt.

As the clouds continued to build, and the threat of rain intensified, I began to make my way down the hill, beneath the outstretched arms of the towering giants, until I reached the bottom. By then the skeletons had gotten smaller, the last one being so frail as to require the protection of a wooden shed. Not far from this shelter man's presence was very evident, and I knew what I'd seen was his playground ...

This description, and I'm sure you know what I'm speaking of, is just to remind you that summer and fall are quickly scurring away before the arrival of the vital and exuberant spirit of winter. The ski hill is a foreign place for summer visitors, but it's a home, although sometimes a harsh and vengeful one, for the skier. Also, you should be aware that the ski club will be meeting for the first time on Wednesday, October 22, at seven o'clock in Stirling 'D' to discuss the upcoming season and I, for one, am keen to get the ball rolling so it will pick up as much snow and leave behind as many good times as possible. There will be movies and, most important of all, a new executive will be chosen. Ideas will be thrown around as to how we can outmanoevre the notoriously unreliable winter weather that burdens this area. This, above all, necessitates everyone's participation. If you're planning on skiing this year, this meeting is a must....besides who can pass up a good flick?

Europe wins Soccer championship

Michael Jay

In front of a small cheering crowd of Queen's Students. The Annual International Soccer Competition was played on Vic-Hall Field, last Saturday. Students making up teams from Europe, China, the West Indies and the Rest of the World battled for four hours to win the coveted Championship. By late afternoon Europe and the West Indies had made the Finals. In the first half this Game was very much an equal match, the West Indies only conceding one goal to the Europeans. This situation continued into the second half until the final ten minutes of the game when the Europeans took command of the field scoring twice and winning this year's championship with a margin of 3-0 over the West Indies. The goal-scorers for Europe were S. Trevellick, R. Daley and S. Kalogeropoulos.

Earlier game scores were as follows - Europe 0, West Indies 0; Rest of the World 0, Europe 1; West Indies 1, China 0; China 3, Rest of the World 0. The Event was sponsored and organized by the International Club at Queen's.

OU-OW Track

The OUAA-OWIAA track championships, held at Laurentian University on Saturday, found the men's team narrowly missing an upset of reigning champions, U of T, and the women's team placing fifth behind some much larger teams. The Gaels re-learned a perennial truth, that the whole story is rarely, if ever, told by the scoreboard - the events on Saturday contained numerous OUAA records, Queen's records, and personal best performances.

Among the many outstanding achievements was the performance of sprinter Vic Gooding who won the 100 m and 200 m and was also a member of two relay teams. Vic ran a 21.6 in the 200 to set a new OUAA record and his time for the 100 m would also have been a new record had it not been wind assisted. In recognition of this accomplishments Vic was awarded the Hec Phillips trophy as the outstanding individual competitor at the meet.

Tony Verhoeven was another Gael to come up with a super effort throwing an amazing 5½ meters over his previous best mark to take a well-deserved first in the discus. Then he switched to the javelin where he placed second and then as if that was not enough ran the 400 m final and the lead off leg of the 4 x 400 m relay in an excellent time.

The men's captain Marc MacAulay had a fine day winning the 400 m hurdles handily in a time of 55.4 and then narrowly missing another gold in the 110 m hurdles in a photo finish.

The other team capatain Bob McCormack turned on the steam to churn out a winning time in the men's 1500 m while Paul Spence, in an exhausting double (800 m and 1500 m), finished 4th with the same time as that of the 3rd place finisher.

The first event on the track, the 10,000 m, saw Mike deGuida and Murray Hale come 3rd and 4th respectively. Mike ran a fine race (a personal best) and finished very strongly, only 2-10th's of a second behind the 2nd place finisher.

Notes:

A fellow Ottawan Peter Becke took 4th spot in the men's long leap with teammate Wesley Darlington right behind. Not to be undaunted the big boy came back with a 2nd in the triple jump.

It's been a long time coming but John Ongarato finally got himself a gold medal in the shot put.

Karen Rahn flung the shot put to fourth place and Sue Sisson into 6th. Lynn Souter leaped to 6th in the long jump and snared a 5th spot in the 100m but Alison Mitchell was hot on her tail in 6th.

In the kangaroo event high jump, Mike Forsayeth finished 3rd. In the great kangaroo event, pole vaulting, Gary Tetzlaff was 2nd and Cuddles was 4th place.

john booth

Queen's Track and Field star Vic Gooding wins Hec Trophy at Laurentian Championships.

The Piper had to run in the fast heat so didn't make it to the finals, even though her time was a Queen's record and would have placed her in the finals. In the ladies kangaroo, rookie Roslyn Engs, took 5th. In the discus, Sue Sisson and Karen Rahn made a "decent" showing snaffling 5th and 6th. Mark Fields "handily " won the 3000M steeplechase (Queen's record). Then as if that wasn't enough, finished 4th in the 5000M. Queen's has their own iron man. Paul Spence grabbed a 2nd in the 800M and lo and behold, Jeff Giles grabbed 5th.

The most thrilling event of the day was certainly the men's 4 x 400m meter relay - the last track event. The Queen's team of Marc Macaulay, Tony Verhoeven, Vic Gooding and Clyde Sheppard held onto an initially slim lead with such tenacity that not even U of T's strongman Gerry Feeney could catch them. All of the men put in a superhuman effort which was rewarded by their setting a new OUAA record of 3:18:9.

The final tally for the men's team standing showed U of T on top with 183 points just ahead of Queen's with 173 points.

The small 12-point difference between 1st and 2nd place standings could have been made up and Queen's could have taken the meet if they had fielded a full team (a number were missing because of injuries and for other reasons).

All members of the team who did compete yesterday deserve congratulations on a really fine TEAM effort!!

Now that outdoor season has ended the team looks forward to some long training before January. The women's team should certainly be able to improve as they have quite a bit of talent and are hard-wroking. As for the men, it looks as if there's no stopping them now.

With fond memories of Charlie the Cactus, mysterious water fights that no Queen's people started and countless Oil Thighs in restaurants and other public places, the team would like to extend a vote of thanks to their photog, the managers, and especially the coaches, Rolf Lund, Sue Bolton, Mike Baird and Walter Eaddie, who did such a fine job of moulding together a contending team.

Soccer ties/wins

Gary Barnes

For the third consecutive weekend, the soccer Gaels have picked up 3 out of a possible 4 points against the stronger teams in the league. Queen's defeated Toronto by a 3-1 count on Saturday and then played to a 1-1 draw against a strong Waterloo side on Sunday. After 9 games, the Gaels are still undefeated, having won 6 and tied 3.

The conditions for Saturday's match against Toronto were not ideal as the field was quite slippery from the previous night's rain and a strong wind was blowing down the field. These elements had some sort of an effect on the first three goals of the game, all of which were somewhat out of the ordinary. Jim Monaghan again opened the scoring for Queen's on a cross from Mark Bennet. Jim's weak shot caught the Toronto goalie sleeping, as it just barely rolled out of his reach and over the line. To even things out, Toronto came right back and scored on a shot that deflected off a Queen's defender and skipped by a somewhat surprised Blair Howkins, in nets for the Gaels. Queen's second goal came on a long wind-aided throw-in by Mark Bennet. Ron Heidebrecht came rushing in to slightly redirect the ball by the Toronto goalkeeper, and make the score 2-1 at halftime. In the second half, with a strong wind at their backs, Toronto continually booted the ball into the Queen's area, but did not manage to score. The Gaels fell into a defensive shell, seemingly content with a one goal lead. In the latter part of the game, however, the Gaels came alive again and began to make constructive passes to work their way up the field. After several near goals, Jim Monaghan notched his second goal of the game with just 10 minutes remaining. The game was a very physical one and Toronto seemed to have good spirit, but unfortunately it was not enough to defeat the Gaels.

Leading up to Sunday's match, Queen's were in first place with a 3 point lead over Waterloo. The Warriors were fresh from a 7-2 victory over R.M.C. and realized the importance of a victory over Queen's. Almost from the beginning, the Gaels decided to play defensively and Waterloo took the play into Queen's half. Queen's defence, however, which has allowed only 7 goals in 9 games, stood the test and continued to blunt the opposition's attacks. The score remained at 0-0 at the end of the first half. Waterloo started out strongly in the second half, moving the ball very quickly. Queen's attack was almost non-existent, except for the odd rush, as the ball was merely being booted down the field by the Gaels fullbacks who were under a lot of pressure. Waterloo only had a very few good scoring chances, despite controlling the play. With roughly 12 minutes remaining in the game, the Gaels made some good passes out of their own zone, where Horst Rabeneick took over to set up Jim Monaghan on a breakaway pass. Jim controlled the ball well and then put a hard shot between the legs of the Waterloo keeper for a goal. This really lifted the Gaels and deflated Waterloo visibly, but the Warriors came right back. To the shock of the crowd and the Gaels, a seemingly innocent shot slipped by the Queen's goalie, just inside the post. Waterloo had a few more chances in the dying minutes, but were not so lucky again. The Gaels must certainly play better in future games, even though they nearly pulled this one off.

The team would like to thank all spectators who braved the wind and rain to cheer on the soccer team this past weekend. This coming Sunday, the Gaels meet Guelph in their last league game which takes place at the West Campus field at 2:00. A victory will assure the team of a first place finish and they will be aiming for nothing less. So come on out and support the Gaels this Sunday in their bid for an undefeated season.

Intercollegiate Squash Gals squish Orphans

Marg Bartlett and Sheila Patterson

Intercollegiate Squash Gals and the Orphans (assorted alumni and staff wives) met to do battle on the squash courts bright and early Saturday morning. And what a battle it was! The Gals squeaked by the Orphans in the 5 matches played, although the older (but wiser) Orphans showed surprising vim and vigour. Just for the record:

Pam McCurdy over Willa Henry 3-1

Marg Bartlett+ over Sheila Murphy 3-1

Portia Leggett+ over Pat Easteal 3-1

Sheila Patterson+ over Pat Hunter 3-2

Donna Watts over Sue Williamson+ 3-1

+Queen's Squash Gals

It was really a smashing success - and you had to be there to fully appreciate the unlimited talents of both generations of players. Next showing (the Queen's Gals will be hosting other Intercollegiate teams from York, Mac, and Waterloo) is tentatively scheduled for Saturday November 29. Different strokes for different folks!

AMS Pres. should resign

John Gray is not a student; but he still is the President of Queen's student government (AMS). Gray explained that he withdrew from Queen's because the combined loads of academics and AMS were too hard to bear. He stressed that he wanted to be a good AMS President, and so had decided to quit school in order to concentrate on student politics.

The AMS constitution states that membership of the AMS is restricted to students who have paid their non-academic activity fees, and that the President must be a member of the AMS.

When Gray announced he was no longer a student, Outer Council reaffirmed him as AMS President.

For Gray to continue as AMS President now that he is no longer a student clearly is unconstitutional. Outer Council is bending the rules too far in requesting that Gray stay on as President.

The AMS constitution should be upheld, and changed only after rigourous examination, public debate and a reasonable amount of time during which students' views may be heard. In this case, the constitution was violated, and students were given no time in which to react.

Another issue cannot be overlooked. Gray's assertion that the Presidency is too demanding for a student must be considered. It is apparent that the AMS is too large for a student president.

Students should consider whether they want to maintain the current structure of the AMS, and have it run by a full-time salaried non-student; or whether they want a smaller student government, one that is led by a student.

What jerks!

Honestly.
What kind of jerks would spatter oil-based brown paint all over the just dry PHE crest in front of the Phys Ed building?
Besides being an eyesore, the damage done to the crest was malicious and infantile.
It's a good thing that some people, such as the organizers of Project Green, are trying to beautify this campus.

"Revenge $" and obscenities are removed from the PHE crest after unidentified persons defaced the crest this weekend. (See editorial and letters on this page.)

Dear Editors:

Queen's has been undermined by a small number of degenerate kids. Recently the Commerce '78 sidewalk crest was vandalized with large blotches of pink paint. During the early hours of Friday October 17th they showed their perverted talents on the P.H.E sidewalk crest. Any observer will notice the large printing of "revenge" and a few other tasteless words. No one knows who the culprits are but let us hope they are not Queen's students.

Dear Editors:

In answer, or in addition to the letter placed in the Friday Oct. 10 Journal by the President, Commerce Society re: the destruction of crests on campus pavement, I would like to offer a comment.

Apparently the commerce crests had undergone some sort of destructive change through the application of blue and yellow paint. It is obvious, as Robert Butterhill pointed out in his letter, that such actions are those of some idiot(s) trying to amuse their sick sense of humour.

It was shocking therefore, for the people in the School of Physical and Health Education to note that on the day after a picture of their illustrious crest hit the Queen's Journal it was similarly defaced. This time however the culprits decided that they did not want total anonimity. In addition to the purple-brown paint spread all over the crest there was a note on the side which read 'REVENGE'. In order that Queen's not be split into too many camps which would start warring over the crests let us make our peace now.

It is at once obvious that a few numb-skulls in Commerce had taken it upon themselves to avenge the needless destruction of their crest. Why they had to do that by in turn destroying ours, most of us will never understand. There are only 250 people in Phys. Ed. out of the entire 10,000 population on campus (add homecoming and you get a few thousand more) so the odds are very much against the hypothesis that it was Phys. Ed who did the initial destruction-- however if it makes Commerce feel better, and if they will leave our repainted crest alone, we apologize.

Dear Editors:

It seems that an appeal to the intelligence or good sense of certain people on this campus by the President of the Commerce Society is not enough to deter these individuals from defacing year crests. The Physical Eductation students' year crest, newly painted last Thursday, was almost ruined by a full can of paint only hours after it had been completed. It really is beyond my comprehension what kind of "kick" or sense of revenge someone would get out of doing this.

I guess it would be too much to ask this person or persons to reconsider their actions. If the act was one of "revenge", what if possibly the previous vandals were not Phys. Ed. students? Possibly if you were drunk at the time and now realize that your joke wasn't as funny as you thought it might be, perhaps you might have the guts to help the Phys. Ed. students clean it up, or maybe simply apologize? Why is it we all can't see ourselves in the same community trying to accomplish similar goals and therefore try to respect the property and values of fellow students? Let's not permit this to go on, we're only hurting ourselves.

Constable system inquiry: public debate is hoped for

Giles Gherson

Outer Council has proposed an AMS inquiry to assess the structure and role of the Constable system, according to the Internal Affairs Commission report presented to Outer Council last night.

John Gray, AMS president, feels that the time is ripe, in view of several recent complaints about the constables, "to open things out".

The inquiry, therefore, is intended to be, in the words of the report, "loosely organized along the lines of a Royal Commission". In other words, rather than take the form of a "conventional committee investigation"-which can be rather indiginous in outlook - it will allow for "a great deal of public debate". It is expected that many students will welcome an opportunity to air their views on the subject. Their chance will probably come in the form of a series of public debates, according to Paul Steep, Internal Affairs Commissioner. Initially, though, "expert opinion"- in the form of students previously and presently involved in the constable system- will be considered.

In terms of structure, Steep envisages a committee comprised of a chairperson and two or three members. Their task would be to keep records of public meetings and undertake research. He stressed that the intent of this inquiry is not to "rush out to restructure the whole thing", but to fulfill two main purposes. First, it is based on the often forgotten premise that the constable system is a service and as such should provide the service that students want it to. Second, the inquiry is designed to make everyone aware of the role of the constable system.

deb sigler

Berni Koch has been recently reappointed commissioner of the Queen's Student Agencies. He resigned three weeks ago, because he felt that he was not properly informed, and all the major decisions were being made by the executive (Journal, Sept. 30). Koch felt that VP's John Wilson and Ian Nordheimer had "turned people off" the AMS. However, Koch now feels that things have settled around the AMS office, and he has come back, since some things pertaining to his position were changed. He feels that the job should be strictly financial, with no political affiliations, and that the AMS "has been kicked down too many times" and his resignation had just been another blow.

According to Koch, the AMS executive felt him to be the most qualified for the job. Koch himself felt his training in Commerce and past president of the Commerce Society would be beneficial to the job; as a result has decided to stay on as QSA director

Culprit still on the loose

Giles Gherson

The student who badly injured Dave Jarvis at the Artsci smoker two weekends ago has still not been found. This can be attributed to a large extent to a delay of several days before the AMS Internal Affairs Commission took up the chase in Jarvis' behalf. According to Paul Steep, the Internal Affairs Commissioner, "We didn't even know about the incident until the next Tuesday, when Jarvis came into the office and asked us what we'd done about it. Steep is concerned that, although two constables saw Jarvis' injury, it was never reported to him, and concludes that "they obviously weren't doing their jobs."

When asked about this communication breakdown, Mike Zinay, Chief Constable, said that the constables reported the event to the staff sergeants, who in turn didn't report to Zinay, because "they didn't think it was serious". Jarvis required several stitches above his left eye.

Universities subject to W and P controls

OTTAWA (CUP) --- The applicability of the federal wage and price restraint program to universities and colleges depends on the reaction of the provinces, according to the Anti-Inflation Review Board here in Ottawa.

But, if the provinces agree to participate, not only will wage and salary increases be restrained. Tuition and residence fees, as well as other educational costs, will also be allowed to increase only in accordance with the federal guidelines.

"Education is strictly a provincial matter" a spokesperson for the Review Board said on October 15, "but we are asking the provinces to co-operate in the federal program whetherby participating directly in the federal plan, or by setting up their own matching systems."

The spokesperson said the federal Review Board intends to establish a "Public Sector Panel" consisting of appointees from the provincial and federal governments. This federal-provincial body will have the power to monitor and control wages and prices in the public sector.

If a province chooses not to participate in the operation of this enforcement mechanism, it will be asked to establish its own administrative vice to ensure the guidelines are followed.

"Women and the Universities"

OTTAWA (CUP) --- "Women and the Universities" will be the focus of this year's annual meeting of the Association of Universities and Colleges (AUCC), to be held October 27-30 in Ottawa.

The AUCC is the organization which represents 65 Canadian degree granting institutions at the national level. Each member institution usually sends a delegation to the annual policy conference consisting of the president of the university, some senior administrators, and sometimes a student delegate.

Five workshops during the conference will discuss various aspects of the theme: women faculty and women in academic administration; women students; non-academic staff; women's studies programs; and the organization of university research on women.

Hello...is this Teleclinic?

Jane Douglas

No, Teleclinic is not another distress centre for the lonely and depressed. It is a service for people who have no family doctor or dentist and who are suffering from medical problems which do not require immediate attention.

Two Queen's Medical students, Roy Kirkpatrick and Peter Lane, initiated Teleclinic last March. Their main objective was to suggest family doctors or dentists to "non-emergent" cases, that is, to people who should not be slowing down the overcrowded Emergency Services of K.G.H and Hotel Dieu, with their headaches, toothaches or other minor medical problems. Teleclinic has a list on-hand of those doctors in Kingston willing to take new patients.

Since Teleclinic is a student-run operation, no medical advice is given, other than whom to contact

Teleclinic is staffed by volunteer Rehab, Nursing and Meds students with the one exception of Biology student Jamie Corbett. He is the service's self-proclaimed "Joe-Job Artist" and his responsibilities range from advertising to scheduling to setting up office.

Kathy Paul and Beth Taylor, two Nursing Science students ran Teleclinic during the summer under the sponsorship of an Opportunities for Youth Grant. They handled over 250 calls. Then for organizational reasons Teleclinic was out of service till last week.

Although The John F Twiddle Foundation funded Teleclinic last spring with $300. It is now being upheld with $800 from the A.M.S

Teleclinic (542-6420) runs Monday to Friday from 5p.m -10p.m. Any Rehab, Nursing or Meds students wishing to volunteer, are invited to phone Roy Kirkpatrick at 546-5225 or Jamie Corbett at 548-3412

Student alcoholics

OTTAWA (CUP) --- The staff of a student pub at Carleton University have decided to offer low-alcohol content beer and free coffee at closing time as a result of rising concern about student alcoholism.

Pub manager Steve Chessine described the step "a gesture" by the staff to show their concern over the problems which the pubs are contributing to.

Dr. Juanita Casselman, head of Carleton's Health and Counselling Services, agreed the problem is real.

There are increasing numbers of people seeking counselling for alcohol and alcohol related problems, and the increase is "significant", she said.

Now that Ontario drinking laws have lowered the legal age to 18, the age of problem drinkers is decreasing. As well Casselman observed that more women than men seek counselling about alcohol problems

One of the strikers outside the Kingston Post Office

Postal strike

The inside postal workers went on strike this past Tuesday at 12 midnight. As I said in last week's column, Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey has offered the inside workers a 38 per cent increase over 30 months, which works out to about 14 per cent per year. The inside workers had previously asked for a 71 per cent increase over 12 months but have now moved their demands back to 51 percent over 12 months However this is not the cause of the strike. Mackasey has refused to discuss any other part of the postal workers demands until the question of wages has been settled. The union, on the other hand, want to discuss first the problems of the policy of hiring of casual labour, the application of seniority, and a reduced work week. This is the reason for the strike,not the money Mackasey refuses even to discuss the other issues until the wage question is settled. I would say that it is Mackasey that is at fault here, not the unions. He could at least agree to cut down on the hiring of casual labour. The union is worried that the size of their union is potentially at stake because it cannot grow any bigger if management continues to hire so much casual labour

Joe Davidson, the head of the CUPW has gone on record as saying that he doesn't care how long the strike goes on for and Mackasey has said the same. That is completely idiotic. The inside workers have no strike fund. How are they going to live if the strike goes on for two months?

Editorial

The following is the first in a series of annual editorials that may or may not appear with our news new page. Realizing the valuable nature of these comments, the editors hope that students will study these pearls of wisdom for their own enlightenment. This way the world will become a better place to live, and we can all walk home safely from this crummy office.

Kissinger visiting China

Henry Kissinger is visiting China to set up a visit that will be made by Gerald Ford later on this year However it seems that Kissinger's visit is creating more controversy than Ford's visit is expected to. Chinese officials are advising Kissinger not to continue towards detente with the Soviet Union because detente will allow the USSR to expand their frontiers Although Kissinger is listening respectfully, he is openly flaunting the Chinese custom of leaving the Soviet delegation to China out in the cold. At the various cocktail parties that he has attended, Kissinger has invited the Soviet delegation to come. This has indicated to several journalists in China that Kissinger wishes to show the soviets that they have nothing to fear from U.S.-China relations.

Rent review

Ontario Liberal leader Robert Nixon said Monday that rent review boards are a must in Ontario along with the enforcement of the 10 per cent ceiling on rent increases per year. He said that the Liberal party will stand firm on this issue even at the cost of causing an early election. The PCs have a minority government and the NDP has said much the same as the Liberals have so it would appear that Housing Minister John Rhodes' "better alternatives" will have to be shelved for the time being. Mr. Nixon also said that the Liberal Party will be seeking an extension of the oil and gas price freeze and provincial boards to implement federal wage and price controls.

Trudeau's controls

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's wage and price controls have been reacted to very negatively across the country The UAW was the first union to say that they would not follow the guidelines CUPE and a host of other powerful unions have said the same thing. Many people have challenged the constitutionality of the action. This has not stopped Trudeau in his campaign across the country which he undertook so that he could explain the situation to the populace He has been greeted with boos at most of the places he has gone. On the CBC news Tuesday night, one union man asked why people can't continue to ask for the same wage increases that they had before. Trudeau replied that you can't keep asking for increases in a stagnant economy That seems to be self-evident even if the unions won't accept it.

We know it took a lot to get where you are today.
With us, you'll get the opportunity to get where you want tomorrow.

Right now, you're wondering where you can put your talent and your ideas to work. Obviously, you want to work for a company who will really appreciate what you have to offer and give you the room you need to grow.

If you are graduating in engineering, business, commerce, computer science, or other disciplines and feel you can make an outstanding contribution, you want Northern Electric, one of the fastest growing companies in Canada.

In fact, Northern Electric is one of the three largest manufacturers of telecommunications equipment in North America.

We've grown to the point where sales in 1974 reached a record $970 million.

One of the reasons for our spectacular growth is our range of products. And the design and research that goes into their development.

Whether it's telephone exchanges, microwave relay networks or satellite communications systems. One of the results of our growth is that we employ about 25,000 people in 24 plants around the world. Obviously, we want this growth to continue and we want to remain a leader in telecommunications. One way to do this is to hire talented young people and give them a real chance to grow. Of course, our standards are high but then so are the rewards.

"The Gray Affair": a wide rift

Brian Copeland

There has been in the recent history of the AMS, no issue which has polarized opinion and created a denseness within the AMS, as the 'Gray Affair'. The question, aside from its constitutional aspects, is one of whether a non-student should be president of the AMS. The fact that a person in the name of John Gray is President, is a secondary issue. One side of the argument is that there is a 'moral principle' being violated with a non-student as President of the AMS and the recent Journal editorial was based on this premise. The other side of the argument is that the need for a continuous Presidency in these times of crisis over rides the principle, that is, that we must live by the spirit and not the rule of the law. John Wilson best expresses this argument when he says, "what good is an applied principle that destroys the organization that it is intended to protect?"

There is a wide gulf between the two viewpoints, and there is little ground for moving toward a solution which will be equitable to both sides. It is a situation where one side will take all. The AMS Court will decide on the rule versus the spirit of the law because there is nothing in between and this will cause a rift in the AMS that has never before been felt. There is no satisfactory answer and those in positions of authority above us, must understand that reality. No matter how the 'Gray Affair' is resolved, both sides must remember their duty and calling to the AMS, for we are all 'children of God', riding in the same ship, sailing upon the same sea and no matter how we try, that cannot be changed.

Is it more important that we love 'correctly' — or that we can love?

Sarah Yarnell

They were at the door, exclaiming, welcoming, and hugging one another. Inside men and women were holding hands on Victorian chesterfields, or dancing loosely in the far room. Charles, Lorne and Hugh had brought me here, and I recognized most of the other gay people in the livingroom from the hours I spent talking with them this month. Nevertheless, I felt uncertain about being at this party. When Donna teased, "I'm glad you're here, but don't be surprised if someone attacks you," I found Hugh's hug very reassuring.

Most of the people had met through the Queen's University Homophile Association (QUHA), which was founded in the fall of 1973, and which announced itself in a letter to the Queen's Journal, signed by the unisex pseudonym Terry Watson. Until that time, Queen's had been the only major Ontario university without an organized gay group.

About 25 men and women from Queen's and the community turned up at the first meeting of the QUHA, but attendance at later meetings diminished rapidly. QUHA never involved itself in organized activity, apart from operating the Gay Rap Line; but it may have satisfied a social need, since several members hosted private parties throughout the year.

Until this fall, QUHA was politically inactive. Some members blame lack of decisive leadership for this, but most feel the gays in Kingston and at Queen's were not ready to become a political force until recently.

A tiny group of new students were astounded to find Queen's had no active gay group, and had the enthusiasm that was necessary to re-establish the QUHA this fall. Thirty-three men and women, 13 of whom are Queen's profs or students, attended the QUHA's third meeting; of the 33, 25 are men and eight are women. The group has set up committees to handle publicity, finances, telephoning counselling, and education. Weekly meetings have been scheduled.

QUHA intends to organize 'consciousness-raising groups' to educate gays and other members of Queen's and the Kingston community, and to provide information to student groups interested in publishing articles on gay life.

The group wants to aid its own members in "realizing their gay identity", according to Charles, a third year psychology student and spokesman for the group, and to help them "to realize that being gay is not abnormal or subversive -- merely an alternative life-style." Charles explained that QUHA has an "ardent desire to raise the consciousness of those at Queen's and in the Kingston community. For too long there has been a negative aura around the gay community that has produced attitudes on a continuum ranging from indifference to suppression. We hope to erase this aura," he went on, "by educating the community. In this vein, we hope that in the future we'll be able to invite speakers to the campus and to show films that are relevant to the topic. Our ultimate goal is total acceptance."

After two meetings, the group sent six members to the AMS budget meeting in October to ask for $250. Outer Council, with no negative votes but a few abstentions, approved the request after being told that the money would go towards QUHA publicity, gay conferences, and a resource centre.

Included in the resource centre in the Grey House is a small library of pamphlets, books, and gay periodicals, The Body Politic and Esprit, available for use by all interested persons.

A telephone counselling service has also been set up, aimed at helping individuals, especially those who are uncertain of their sexual orientation. QUHA has one of its members at the Grey House phone (547-2836), Tues.-Thurs. 7pm-9pm. Dr. Marilyn Bowman of the Queen's Psychology Department, and Antoinette Wilde of Queen's Counselling Service, will advise the group on how to counsel over the phone.

John Bottomley

Coming out is not easy

Coming out means acknowledging to gays your homosexual orientation. Peter claims that not all homosexuals are gay; those who keep their homosexuality a secret from gay people are not gay themselves. As G. Weinberg wrote in Society and the Healthy Homosexual, "To be gay is to be free of the need for ongoing self-inquisition. Being gay means having freed oneself of misgivings over being homosexual."

"Some people, most people actually, are unsure," Charles told me. "They are afraid to come out, afraid to go to the meetings because they are advertised. They feel that they might be recognized, and don't want this to happen because they are afraid that they might hurt people they love; for example, their parents. The decision to come out is a very personal one. "You can't push it," he stressed. Whereas the QUHA is eager to try to answer the questions of individuals who are unsure of their sexual orientation, apparently the members do not want to shove anyone into becoming gay.

Charles says that he has accepted his gayness, and is happy with it. Joan, a fourth year Arts student, who is still in the process of coming out, considers herself gay, but admits that she is unhappy.

Most of the gays I talked to, have told close friends and their mothers about their gayness; it seems that fathers and employers are the last to find out. Don, a Kingston designer, kept leaving copies of Playgirl and Viva in the living room at home, and so assumes that his mother knows.

Straight friends rarely object; as Charles and others pointed out, they wouldn't be true friends if they did. To tell a group of his straight friends, Charles recalls, "I just started dancing with George at a party, and said 'This is my lover'. No-one ran out the door, lurching."

Loved and harrassed

Charles admitted quietly that being gay isn't easy. "It's really hard when everything has to be an uphill battle, when you have to potentially by on the defensive." The risk of being harassed, of losing a job, are always present.

And there are worries. Charles often wonders, "What will I be at age 50? An old man alone with his cats?" Indeed, many of the gays I met, though not all, want the love and security of a permanent relationship. "It's easy to find someone who'll spend the night with you, and even say 'I love you' if you want them to," said Charles, "but it is hard to find permanent relationship. A lot have said they love me, but it has got to the point where I don't believe them."

He said that very few gay people have found permanent relationships by the time they reach middle age, and suggested that perhaps this is because gay liberation is so new that a pattern for gay lifestyle has not yet been formed; whereas in straight society, there is the "grow up, fall in love, get married, have kids" plan that has existed for centuries.

Ron doesn't want a permanent monogamous relationship; instead he wants to live in a "community". He is working out an "alternative lifestyle involving co-ops, collectives, and child-care", a lifestyle which does not revolve around the nuclear family unit.

Is it possible for a man to be in love with a man, and for a woman to be in love with a woman? Charles, astounded, replied, "Oh yes, very much so!" Jealousy and possessiveness characterize gay relationships, he thinks, perhaps even more than straight relationships, because gay relationships are more passionate.

Don lives with a man whom he says he loves emotionally and physically, but not sexually. "We lie in each others' arms and sleep together but can't get it together sexually. (What he likes is not what I'm attracted to and vice-versa.) You can get sex anywhere; but it is very rare that you find someone you love physically and emotionally, and with whom you can get it together sexually." Doug says that he has taught many of his straight friends to love others not only sexually, but as people; some of them now put their arms around him as a greeting.

Don calls himself bisexual. So does Len, a law student, who says he is now on a "swing back towards women". Joan also claims she is bisexual, as does Jeanne, a first year Arts student. Charles, who has had relationships with women, now considers himself almost exclusively homosexual.

Is there more promiscuity among gays than among straights? Charles agreed that there probably is: "When you go to a gay bar or club, you almost always go home with someone. I suppose that's partly because gays don't have to worry about babies. And yes, there are male prostitutes, especially for otherwise straight, middle-aged, married men who want a trick. I don't like going to bars unless I'm with friends; I don't like going home with strangers. You wake up in the morning sometimes and you wonder what you have done and whether you should get up and leave, or whether you should stay." Charles said that his body was just as private and as sacred as any straight person's is.

Even though they might want to be friends with individuals before having sex with them, many gays end up "cruising" in lonely searches for companionship. "People are always saying to me that it was a terrific night in the park last night," said Don. "Well, occasionally, I have met a few people in the park (Macdonald Park), although usually I have returned home alone. There are middle-aged guys in cars, cruising around looking for a pick-up. It's like going to a steam bath; it's a meat market." Don says that he is lonely. Where would he be without QUHA? "In the park".

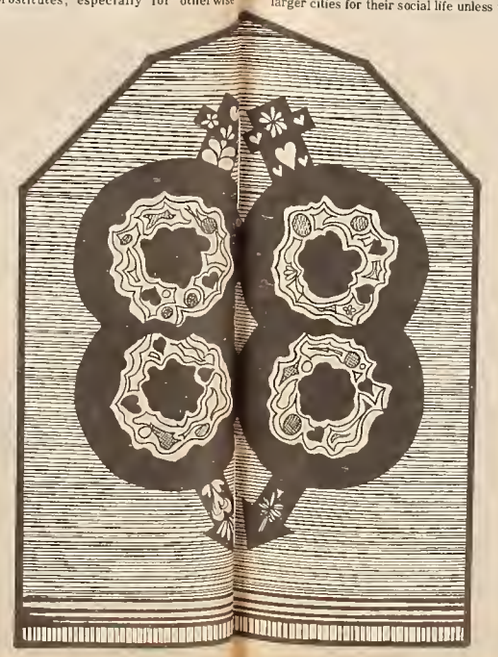
Bob, a drama student, attended Queen's for a few months two year ago. "It is lonely here, certainly; but with this group (QUHA) we can now meet other gays. When I was here before, I met only two gay people.

"The social life here is poor compared to the life in the larger cities. As far as I know, there are no gay social clubs in Kingston right now. "Most gays I talked to flee to Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal on weekends; there they find most of their gay friends. "People will keep going to the larger cities for their social life unless we can start a club here to keep them in Kingston," said Bob. He doubts whether the gay community in this city could start up a club because of the amount of capital needed for rent, sound and lighting; costumes would also be needed for acts (such as female impersonators) to be performed.

"I want to have dances...I'm determined to have dances," insisted Bob. "If we had dances, they would be in Kingston hotels; although I'm not sure if the hotels would be in favor of the idea. In Guelph the gay group has dances in a downtown hotel, and doesn't even have to pay for the room anymore because it's packed and the hotel makes a killing off the bar."

Bob insisted that QUHA wouldn't have dances on campus,because of possibilities of being harassed by other students. "Look at where we would have to hold campus dances - either in Grant Hall or in one of the residences. People in residences are probably trouble-makers. Look at the things students do in residences just to have fun! They might decide that it would be fun to come down to one of our dances...."

Most of the gays I talked to claimed that they have not been bothered by students, but explain that they have not made their gayness public. Charles says that occasionally he has been called a "faggot" by some Commerce and Engineering students. As he left the Union coffee shop one Wednesday afternoon, a group of about six students stared at him, and one even pointed. Charles calls the attitude of Queen's students towards gays "small-townish". Bob doesn't think that it is any worse here than at other universities.



Bob explained that "the girls aren't the problem; It's the males, who feel they have such a front to keep up. They are afraid that they'll be approached and that they won't know how to handle it. Yet it has been said that a person who is afraid of someone else's sexuality has doubts about his own."

Part of the mythology surrounding gayness is that you can tell who gay people are, by their looks, or by their movements or their professions; but actually most of the gays I talked to are indistinguishable in public from straight people. Joan, Donna, Jeanne, Clare and Marie are attractive and feminine Susanne was dressed in T-shirts and jeans, and wore no obvious make-up the two times I met with her. Most of the gay men I interviewed dressed casually - in corduroys, shirt and sweater - and most were tidy. Charles usually wears very stylish outfits, some jewellry, and moves with the grace of a dancer.

Indeed, it is impossible to generalize about the looks or behaviour of gays, just as it is hard to with straight people. A CHAT brochure reads: "Though a small number of homosexual men and women do fit the stereotype picture of them, there is absolutely no fool-proof way of identifying homosexuals unless they tell you that they are what they re. As Ron said, "Effeminate guys and masculine girls really take the shit for the gay movement."

The gays I met definitely were individuals, not stereotypes recently poured from a perverse plastic mold. At the party, I expected to see women dancing only with women, and men dancing only with men. But there they were, in the far room, men with men, women with women, and men and women together.

Most of the people interviewed for this article did not object to having their nomes used. It was the writer's own choice to change the nomes, in case our university is less enlightened than mtght be hoped for.

Gays demand:

"The belief that homosexuals constitute a small group of individuals is one that is widely accepted in our society. This is so because most homosexuals have in the past been forced to remain invisible due to societal pressures to conform to heterosexual lifestyles.

"Dr. Alfred Kinsey, in his studies into human sexuality, found that homosexuality was far more extensive than previously believed. In 1948, Dr. Kinsey discovered that ten per cent of the white male population and six per cent of the white female population in the United States were predominantly homosexual for a considerable period of their adult lives.

"Using his percentages as a standard, the homosexual population in Ontario is somewhere between four and five hundred thousand people. In light of these scientific findings, therefore, the homosexual minority cannot be deemed as small or inconsiderable.

"Although the 1969 amendments to the Criminal Code removed punitive sanctions against homosexual acts between consenting adults in private, certain federal statutes still permit the harassment of an discrimination against homosexuals. This, coupled with the lack of effective protection in the areas of housing, employment, and public accommodation at the provincial level, adds to the social oppression which confronts Ontario's gay minority. Thus societal prejudices and bigotry are often reinforced both thrbugh the existence of archaic legislation and the lack of effective redress of grievances.

"In order to alleviate this oppression, the Coalition for Gay Rights in Ontario demands the following actions be taken by the provincial government:

(1) "Amendment of the Ontario Human Rights Code to include 'sexual orientation' in order to assure the basic civil rights of all homosexual men and women.

(2) "Inclusion of gay community representatives on the Human Rights Commission and amendment of the Human Rights Code to provide meaningful penalties for violators.

(3) "That research be done by the Human Rights Commission in the area of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, and education of the public on the results of this research.

(4) "An unbiased presentation of homosexuality be included in the sex education programmes in Ontario, and that gay organisations be consulted to provide information and speakers for such programmes.

(5) "Guaranteed medical coverage for gay couples under the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

(6) "Equal treatment for gays in projects carried out by the Ontario Housing Corporation.

(7) "Introduction of a government regulation prohibiting discrimination against gays in the hiring the promotional practices of the Ontario Civil Service

(8) "That homosexualtty not be considered a factor in cases of child adoption and child custody."

Sha Na Na

DIRTY DAN CHICO BOWZER

They're certainly the freshest kids, are Sha Na Na, a splish-splash celebration of rock and roll launched from the subways, streetcorners and lounges on to the stage of consistent standing-room-only popularity. Their musically theatrical renderings of tunes too numerous to name, have rocked rapturous millions. In six years ten young multi-talented professionals, have, through Woodstock, riotously successful European tours, television coverage from Antwerp to Eye Witness News and a 250 day a year world-wide touring schedule, become the hottest floating rock and roll show this side of heaven.

It is hard to say whether Sha Na Na are most essentially actors who dance, sing, and play rock and roll, or hitters who, getting bugged driving up and down the same old strip, so to speak, decided they were ten good reasons why rock and roll would never die. As Tony Santini explains, "People are constantly wondering about us; but what we really like our audiences to do, is to enjoy us, and not quite be sure, and not really care." Whereas Sha Na Na began as a "fifty minute dash" now their stage show blends the unpredictability of ten hand-jiving greasers with sets, choreography (that in the past you would have had to go to Broadway to find), and costumes designed by the same creative types that have designed many of Elton John's most outrageous rags.

Also amongst Sha Na Na's newly acquired props will be a rather dramatic 20 foot high inflatable jukebox. This and other rather impressive surprises were created by well-known set designer Gene McAvoy, who is best known for his work on network television which includes The Smothers Brothers Sonny & Chere, Hullaballoo and the upcoming Mary Tyler Moore Special.

Under the dance direction of Jamie Rogers, who has taught the Osmond Brothers, and directed the Broadway version of "Golden Boy" as well as Sonny & Cher and Ben Vereen's recent summer series, the ten members of Sha Na Na have painstakingly learned the routines that look totally effortless once the band is onstage and moving in full gear.

Top forty radio, teenage lust and an irrepressible ambition to perform has brought ten men from Boise and Kansas City, Boston and New York into the most unique and rocking theatrical collaboration working today. A six year old product of musical and artistic democracy in action, the experience of Sha Na Na grants every member of the audience his natural birthright as a participant in that first era of a pop culture, a self-perpetuating phenomenon that has helped form the ideals and emotions of millions of young people.

If Sha Na Na and rock and roll are here to stay, it isn't because of a gimmick or a formula; it is because Sha Na Na and rock and roll are pure entertainment, that somehow engages the highest and the most basic elements of our minds and bodies. And when you can get your mind and body to work as expressively as every Sha does, then you're what both Plato and those freakin' hippies might call "together".

Sha Na Na are appearing at the Kingston Memorial Arena, Monday October 27 at 8:00 P.M A very limited number of advance tickets are going for $4.50, with a limited number of advance tickets going for $5.00 with tickets at the gate going for $6.00. Tickets are available at the John Orr Room, Sam's, Shopper's Record & Tape Mart and the Memorial Arena

Good time at the opry

Madeleine Osorio

Last Tuesday night saw the first presentation in the Drama Department's Chronicle series. Chronicle XXIX was Robertson Davie's Overlaid and was under the supurb direction of David N. Farstone. A touching comedy, the play deals with the financial and final ambitions of a small town Canadian farmer and his daughter. Problems arise when Pop, (Colin Brown), an avid opera fan received his insurance policy premiums from G. B. Bally (George Pothilos), a man of little or no taste. Ethel (Nancy Polk) feels the money should be used to buy a family plot while Pop wants to go to New York City and see his favourites in the Metropolitan Opery House where white gloves are "de rigeur" (French for you can't git in without 'em.)

Brown managed well to capture the movements and mannerisms of a seventy year old man, without turning Pop into a caricature. From start to finish we were faced with a constantly well maintained character.

As Ethel, Nancy Polk presented a righteous, countrified school marm. Her movements and costume accentuated the fine upstanding character she played. She too never dropped character and her righteous indignation at Pop's idea of going to New York to see "all those lewd women" stayed with her all the way through the play.

George Pothitos' portrayal of G. B. Baily was in many ways the high point of the play. Just his physical presence helped to fill the set which was too long for only two people to fill. Pothitos' fast talking and shock provided a pleasant and amusing counterpoint to the other two players. The cast made good use of the props; although the set was a little too much in the same plane, with a great deal of lateral movement across the stage.

In a space of forty minutes these three people were able to bring to their audience a humorous and wholesome picture of a father and daughter revealing each other's dream for the future.

Wholehearted congratulations to David Fanstone as well as his cast and crew, and may this be an example of future shows to come!

Where Eagles Dare?

Nick Gray

The Eagles recent release, One of those Nights, cannot be said to be one of the most innovative recordings yet. Nonetheless, it is a quiet album that would appeal to those who enjoy quiet rock. Many of the cuts are similar in mood and style to the popular song "One of Those Nights," in that, they are relatively slow paced soft tunes

Despite being only five members strong, the band itself combines a number of varying instruments in its songs, providing a wide range of instrumentation. The best cut is "Journey of the Sorcerer," written by Bernie Leadon, who combines an interesting banjo solo with background instrumentation to provide a well balanced musical arrangement. Leadon uses a now popular form started in the early seventies of orchestral backup to enhance the more traditional rock instruments.

Unfortunately this has been attempted in other cuts by other members of the group, with the variation though, of background vocals and guitar solo's, resulting in rather mediocre pieces such as "Too Many Hands." Moreover, the attempt by the group in this album to attain more hard core pieces such as "Visions" has been, to say the least, a dismal failure. The guitar highlights in this cut add nothing vibrant to the song and the backup vocals tend not to mix well, which in the final analysis, leaves a lot to be desired.

On the whole the album is good but not terribly exciting This record was provided courtesy of Sam The Record Man.

Janos Starker

Cellist Supreme

Cynthia David

The master walked onto the stage, head bowed, barely glancing at the audience. His conservative suit and tie belied his prestigious status in the world of music. The man, Janos Starker.

The sound of the cello serenely filled Grant Hall. Eyes closed, excluding the audience, the man and the cello became a single entity, and their music spoke volumes.

Boccherini's Sonata No. 6 in A major, in a style similar to that of Haydon, provided a dignified beginning to the concert. Each of the three movements were finely executed, and appeared deceivingly simple! The composer of this work was also an excellent cellist.

Brahm's Sonata in D major, Op. 78 was originally composed for violin and piano but the cello's full resonant sound adds a new dimension to the work. The musician's bow barely touched the strings in the subtle, light Vivace which contrasted with the strong, dramatic Adagio, its vital sound sustained until the last breath of the final chord.

The third offering of the evening was Bach's Suite No. 2 in D minor for unaccompanied cello. Six brief dances such as the Sarabande, its smooth, melodic lines suggesting independent voices, exemplified Bach's most versitile chamber music.

Bartok's First Rhapsody appropriately completed the Hungarian cellist's program. The two movements evoked images of rough peasants and spring and love in a delightful combination of Hungarian folk themes on which Bartok based much of his work.

But it wasn't the end! In acknowledgement of the audience's eager appreciation Starker again took up his cello and began to play a piece called Figaro, a maze of whirling, seemingly effortless runs, frequent rude attacks on the cello, exaggerated gestures and sentimental airs, displaying his brilliant mastery of the instrument. It was a game and the dignified ladies and gentlemen and everyone else present responded with laughter, sharing the sheer delight of the piece. Bravo!

And the king of cellists, completely unconcerned with the audience's reaction, walked off the stage, head bowed - almost smiling.

If you missed this magnificent recital, or if you want to be re-amazed, Janos Starker will be the guest soloist with the Kingston Symphony on November 2.

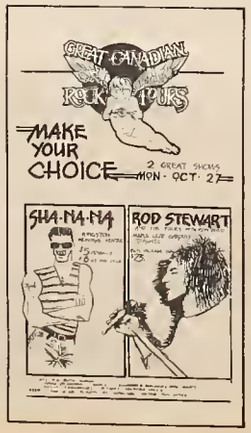
WIC-ly News

Wic has been busy. The Synchro swim meet was successful and inner-tube waterpolo was a lot of fun. Co-ed volleyball and badminton are drawing to a close now. But--ice hockey is heginning (every Wed. night at 7:00) and you can still get in on the paddleball tournament.



The basketball season is at its midpoint. Here are the standings so far: PHE No. 4 20.5 pts., Nursing: 17.0 pts., PHE No. 1: 16 pts., Rehab: 15.5 pts., with Chown, Arts '78 and Arts '77 close behind. It is still anybody's race! Come out and support your teams - check the WIC board for game times. Everyone has the chance to play!

If you're interested in being a convenor for a sport second term get your application in by Nov. 15. The job consists of organizing your sport and reporting on it. You are paid an honorarium for your work. For further information call: Christa Craig 544-4864.

Bews

The Bews golf tournament is finally over. As you may remember the tournament was held in late September. The low 8 golfers qualified for the match play tournament to determine the individual winners. Bruce McFarlane of P.H.E., G. Dyer of Commerce '78, Jim Ongena of Education, and S. Dunk of Commerce '76 all won their quarter-final matches and advanced to the semi-finals. McFarlane then beat Dyer and Ongena beat Dunk to set the stage for the final. Last weekend the finals were played and Bruce McFarlane convincingly won the Bews championship, 4 up with 3 holes left to play. Congratulations to Bruce and all the other quarter finalists for their high caliber of golf.

Last Thursday the Volleyball season got underway with 9 games. Also starting last week was Hockey with 23 out of a possible 24 units participating. Rugby, Flag Football and Soccer were all supposed to finish their regular season by the end of this week and playoffs will start next week.

Rugby

Dave Purdy and Ken Covo

Knee-deep mud and sub-zero temperatures could not deter a standing-room-only crowd of frigid spectators from cheering the Rugby Gaels' two teams to double-headed glory last weekend. The loyal fans were treated to a display of soggy determination as the Queen's second XV slid, pushed, scrambled, and rucked their way to a 7-0 shutout of the Western Mustang II's. Despite the relative dearth of scoring, fan excitement was maintained at a feverish pitch by the wide-open running and tackling of both teams. The outcome of the game was never really in doubt as Queen's took a first-half lead of 4-0 while playing into a strong wind. The try was scored by plucky forward Ralph Lutes on a plunging play from about three yards out. Don Davies rounded out the scoring for the seconds when his penalty kick late in the game soared majestically over the heads of the down-trodden and oppressed Mustang II's. At the conclusion of the tilt, the seconds enjoyed refreshing showers and joined the swelling throng about to witness the firsts' game, now only moments away.

At the outset of the firsts' game, the Western contingent seemed intent on playing a violent style of rugby. This tactic, however, proved fruitless, as Western was rewarded for their efforts with a string of first-half injuries. Queen's clearly dominated the contest, gaining momentum as the game progressed. Scoring was opened when the Gaels' pack drove over the Western goal-line.

Thunderthighs Honsberger was seen to be lying atop the ball. Peter Kopp converted the try, needing only one foot to perform the task. Kopp added three more points before the end of the half on a penalty kick. The second half saw Queen's score nine more points, as their superior conditioning enabled them to maintain a substantial territorial advantage. Dave Bowker scored the only try of the half when he ran very quickly from the twenty yard line into the Western endzone. The reliable Peter Kopp added five points on a convert and a penalty kick. Western, playing with the wind, managed to sneak over a long penalty kick. The final score, by addition, was Queen's 18, Western 3.

This Saturday the Gaels continue their drive towards a championship berth, when the University of Toronto sends in a bus load of cannon fodder. The seconds play at 12:30; the firsts at 2:00. Please walk or take public transit in order to avoid unbelievable congestion at the stadium.

And the war rages on

Dear Editors.
It seems that ever since Homecoming weekend this paper has been the medium for a "war of words". The war has of course been a result of the defacing of several crests by individuals who lack even the most basic respect for the hard work several students put into them. The problem is that this seems to be touching off an inter-faculty feud.

I do not know who vandalized the Commerce crests but, I do know that any student who had been at Queen's long enough to learn of the pride people have in their years and faculties would not even consider the idea, even in a drunken stupor. Whoever attacked the PHE crest was obviously as inconsiderate as those who attacked the Commerce Crests. The point is this; it is individuals, not faculties who are responsible for these actions. I sincerely doubt that any student in Commerce was behind the Phys. Ed. disaster but, if it was them I am sorry. It was not, however; the work of the Commerce Society. We are as infuriated as Miss Atwood of PHE, and we most certainly did not derive any satisfaction from the childish antics of some individuals.

Dear Editors:
It is with great interest that I read Lyn Atwood's comments in the Journal of October 21. By virtue of the fact that I am registered in Commerce, it seems that I satisfy her criterion for classification as a "numbskull". This upsets me midly in that such a description is not exactly consistent with my self-perception.

By implication she seems to be saying that little things amuse little minds. I couldn't agree with her more. But Lyn Atwood, please grow up. Pass judgement on the nature of the vandalism; don't point an accusing finger at the culprits you seem to think are so obvious. You could learn a good lesson from Cathy Soloninka's letter. As she wrote, "No one knows who the culprits are, but let us hope they are not Queen's students".

Specifically to the editors: Your paper loses a great deal of credibility in my eyes when it starts to print letters that have no basis in fact. Give us only letters that are interesting, informative and accurate. Certainly people are entitled to an opinion, but when that opinion lacks any semblance of logical consistency I can only conclude that you have included such an opinion in your paper as a "filler". How do you like those bananas?

Apparently there is no justice at the Queen's Journal. Perhaps you can remedy the situation.

Lyn Atwood is the sports editor for your paper. One would assume that she has some grasp of the term "journalistic integrity". There is no trace of such an understanding in her letter of October 21. Her comments are largely unfounded, and grossly unfair, to say the least.

An apology, therefore, is not enough. Take note: your system stinks. Your editors reserve the right to "edit" submissions by other people. At the same time, one of your editors has taken it upon herself to ignore the standards by which such editing normally takes place - indeed a sad state of affairs.

For you Lyn Atwood, and for the Queen's Journal: a big black eye and also, much shame, disgust and dishonour.

Journal Editors-in-chief, I await your reply.

Ed. Note: Journal reporters and editors are students like any one else, and so are allowed to submit letters as are other students. When letters are topical and of potential interest to students, we print them; we edit only grammer and length, not content. Our job is to provide part of the paper as a forum for the exchange of ideas and opinion; censorship of student views we regard as despicable

Dear Editor:
Pertaining to the letter about the PHE crest in the most recent Journal, I apologize to commerce and in particular to Bob Butterill. The words somehow seemed harsher on Tuesday in print than they had been intended - even though I was "madder than a hatter" when I wrote it. The finger of accusation cannot rightly be pointed at anyone since the "destructos" remain anonymous. Please accept my sincerest apologies.

Rector Brockington

Dear Editors,
While recognizing that for to-day's students the story of this University begins with their arrival, the write-off of the Rectorship on Page 8 of Tuesday's Journal as "held by student-elected prominent Canadians from 1912 to 1970 and consisted mainly of ceremonial appearances with the Principal and Chancellor at Convocations and retirements" must not go unchallenged.

Leonard W Brockington, Rector magnificus, serving an unprecedented seventh consecutive term when he died in 1966, faithful in his attendance at Board of Trustee meetings, wise counsellor, eloquent and effective as a champion of student concerns, was a guide and a landmark in this place. For a generation he immersed himself in the life of Queen's University giving himself unswervingly to her best interests and serving her students with discernment and devotion.

He called us passionately and always eloquently to the study "of things and their forces of men and their ways." As we think of him we call to mind Harold Nicolson's words concerning Edmund Burke's "surpassing ability to add definition and colour to the unformulated feelings of many thousand less articulate human beings."

Among all the honours which came to him in a long and distinguished career he cherished most of all the office of Rector of Queen's University. For our part, we cherished him as a great Tribune and faithful friend.

Yours very sincerely,

A.M. Laverty, Padre
H.R.S. Ryan, Faculty of Law.

Support of Gray

Dear Editors,
I was amused by the concluding statement in the letter from Messrs. Cunningham, Robinson, Nacioiny and MacGregor in the Oct. 21 issue of the Journal concerning the current status of John Gray. They called for the resignation of Gray qualifying their suggestion: "This is simply a matter of principle."

Indeed it is a matter of principle but these gentlemen, and the editor in his comment on the back page, have missed that principle. In view of the recent resignations within the student government at Queen's, Mr. Gray's move is commendable, in that it is a commitment, if you will, to the studednts and not to personal aims. It is a keeping of the promise of commitment implicit in his acceptance of office last February.

The "Loophole" which allows him to remain as president after withdrawing from academics is not as shortsighted as it seems. Consider that the presidents of student governments at the University of Toronto, Western, McMaster, Carleton, Waterloo, and numerous community colleges do not take classes either. Apparently at Queen's, we still consider the office of president as identical to the similar position in high school: merely head of a dance committee. We need to come to terms with the magnitude of responsibility inherent in this position at a University.

The issues of student government are merely be-laboured by such cries of "technical foul". Let the constitutional chips fall where they may; I support John Gray in this decision.

"Romp" rebels

Dear Editors:
The inter-residence council of Queen's University has insisted that I write a letter to the Journal regarding Artsci 78's promotion for the beer bash they put on last Friday. The writing of this letter was one of the conditions of a written statement I was told I must sign if I wanted our beer bash to continue as planned and not to be cancelled.

It has been suggested by members of the IRC that the yellow flyers promoting last Friday's "Rhineland Romp" in Leonard Cafeteria were vulgar. If Queen's students feel this way then Artsci '78 owes them an apology. However, we would like to mention that the poster was in no way intended to be disrespectful to the university or to endanger the chances of future events of this kind occuring on campus. It seems more realistic however, that the advertisement was both entertaining and effective. Leonard Cafeteria was filled for the dance.

In the planning of this event we received nothing but threats from the IRC Andrew Overchuck, chairman of the committee, threatened three times (including the night before and the afternoon of) to cancel the dance completely. The dance had been given final approval two weeks previously and had been in the planning stages since last March.

We understood that the IRC was upset because they felt that the dance resembled the Oom-Pa-Pa dance of last year. Some Queen's students who were at Oom-Pa-Pa last year painted obscene words on the side of Leonard Hall after the dance. Overchuck was stunned when the word Oom-Pa-Pa was inadvertently used to describe the group that was to play at the Beer Bash. Overchuck called an emergency meeting the night before to cancel the dance. Never in my life have I seen such a display of stupidity, over-reaction and childishness as this.

This dance was to be the only function offered for Queen's students on the weekend of the 17th. If Overchuck's misuse of the word Oom-Pa-Pa as some reason to shut down the dance minutes notice then the IRC unleadership is not operating in the of Queen's students.

Has Overchuck forgotten that elected (or rather acclaimed) to the interest of the students in residence? If students met unreasonable resistance from Over and his council in every event then it appears to me that Overchuck not give a damn about the students out of residence.

We were happy that the beer bash was successful. The word Oom-Pa-Pa was high enough to make all the dance-goers totally animal as Overchuck had predicted. When is the IRC going to become aware of what's going on at this university? When are they going to realize that Queen's students are not uncontrollable children.

Overchuck and his boys should stop behaving like a bunch of damn children or else turn their jobs over to people who are not just impressed with their own authority but who are genuinely interested in the students of Queen's.

OOM—PA—PA!

Let us in!

Dear Editor:
On Saturday night several of us waited for an hour and a half at Bitter Grounds to see David Bradstreet. We did not get in. We intended to buy tickets at the door but were told that ticket holders had priority. So we waited and waited on the stairs, watching ticket holders saunter in at 9 o'clock for an 8 o'clock opening. Finally we left in disgust.

Neither the posters nor the ad in the Journal mentioned this crazy policy. We found out from the AMS constable too late.

In future, Bitter Grounds must make it clear that ticket holders have priority and that there is little chance of getting in if you buy tickets at the door. As it is, Bitter Grounds advertising is deceptive and unfair.

Leighton Reid.

Carter, "no longer neutral", resigns as AMS speaker

Giles Gherson

Noting that this is the first time that he has reneged on a responsibility in this way, Dave Carter, AMS speaker, told Outer Council on Thursday night that he had decided to step down from his position.

He apologised to Outer Council for in the middle of his term, and also ers who applied for the job" last gave several reasons for his which he claimed he had been ing for some time."

first place, his schedule is not as as he had anticipated.

ly, he appeared disillusioned Council, lamenting that he that we have made any subntributions."

alyst for his decision was "the events of the past few days," in which he feared he was "becoming caught up." He claimed he "could not pretend to be neutral" in this issue and that this "is not right for a speaker."

Indeed he stands by his ruling on October 9, overturned by a two thirds vote of Outer Council, contending "it's as clear as a bell as far as I'm concerned" that the AMS constitution stipulates that the AMS President must be a student at the University. In any event, with regards to that issue, "I have not liked what I have seen and heard" he said.

Following Carter's announcement, John Gray proposed a motion, enthusiastically adopted, thanking Carter for his "responsible and meritorious fulfillment of duties.

Jent Execs defy controls

EG (CUP)--The Student Union ative at the University of Manitoba nded this week with surprise, anice, and evasion when asked if their osed salary increases of over 20 rcent were contrary to the federal government's recent wage guidelines.

The executive is asking for a $100 raise to $550 per month. The government has asked that all raises be limited to 10 percent, which would curb their raise to $495 per month.

Although student union president Vicky Lehman did not feel the job should be "Highly paid", she said the "low wages" cause economic hardship and, because the executive must often work ten hours a day, she said, they cannot take part-time jobs.

According to Academic Affairs Director Lee Powell, the executive's proposed raises are "an exception" and their wages are low enough to warrant a 22 percent increase.

Warm "Indian Summer" days...

AMS Court to decide if non-student can be Pres.

John Gray attempted to dispell rumours when he told Outer Council on Thursday night that the Faculty of Arts and Science had not allowed him to be a student this year. Gray said that he did not know this until after announcing at the October 9 Outer Council meeting that he had withdrawn from Queen's voluntarily.

Last week, rumours that the AMS President was not being completely honest with Outer Council, were spreading among Queen's student politicians.

Gray emphasized that he will stay on as non-student AMS President until the end of his term, unless over-ruled by the AMS Court.

Med's students have asked the AMS Court to determine whether a non-student can be the AMS President.

Roy Kirkpatrick, President of Aesculapian Society, explained on Thursday that a grieveance was being brought against Outer Council, who reaffirmed Gray as AMS President, October 9.

"Outer Council has decided that the AMS President can be a non-student", said Kirkpatrick, "yet you can also read the AMS Constitution the other way. I don't like not knowing whether we are doing the right thing or not."

The Court has been set for November 3.

Times of turbulence

Terry Collins

Six years ago, Charles Edwards made the unfounded claim that he had been pressured out of his PhD program in chemical engineering because of his political activities. Edwards' case was heard by a Senate Committee during 90 hours of testimony, 27 of which were from Edwards, and sparked the greatest amount of controversy thus far this decade at Queen's.

Edwards was a member of the Free Socialist Movement and had at one time held the position of President of the AMS. His PhD supervisor was Dr. Henry Becker. In 1969, because of inadequate preparation and plagiarism, his work deemed unacceptable to Becker. In October of that year, Dr. Becker was called on by the RCMP who made enquiries about Edwards. The RCMP had been referred to Becker regarding Edwards by Dr. Reg Clark when they were making a routine check on another student who had applied for a government job. Clark later testified at the hearings that it had been the RCMP who initiated the discussion of Edwards. In a letter to Principal John Deutsch tabled in the House of Commons, the Solicitor General asserted that Edwards had been brought to the RCMP's attention by Clark. The Queen's Senate Committee later accepted Clark's Testimony. The RCMP refused to appear at the hearings. ... The RCMP visit was not mentioned directly to Edwards. He heard of it in the form of a rumour.

One day after the visit by the police, Edwards conducted a seminar entitled, "Why Jack Can't Find a Job", totally divorced from his field of study, which had to do with combustion. The seminar attempted to attribute the shortage of job opportunities for engineers in Canada to American domination of the Canadian economy. Becker was understandably concerned with Edwards' interest in his PhD thesis and told him that if he didn't get to work he would fail. Edwards misinterpreted Becker's message and made the blunt accusation that he was having pressure placed on him to make a choice between his studies and his political involvement. He alleged that the Engineering faculty did not want him around because he posed a threat to further research grants being made. He accused Becker of providing inadequate supervision and of political repression.

Scores of clippings from newspapers in Ottawa, Toronto, Kingston and on campus give evidence of the public interest in the case. Two AMS Commissioners from the Graduate Student Society executive who were members of the Free Socialist Movement (FSM) had drafted a letter on AMS stationary and sent off copies to newspapers and campuses across Canada. In the letter they alleged that Edwards was being "pressured" out of his graduate program because of his political activities and that such pressure was "part of a pattern of political repression which is developing on campuses across Canado." This was the method chosen by Edwards and his associates to broadcast his plight and it triggered the establishment of a special Senate Committee to hear the case.

The findings of the Committee, chaired by Mr. B. Adell, Associate Dean of Law, were that Becker was "utterly innocent" of the allegations made by Edwards. The report was presented to the Senate in late February, 1970. During the Senate meeting held to accept the report, Terry O'Hare, a member of the FSM and Edwards' representative to the Senate Committee stood up to protest to Dr. Deutsch that the meeting could not proceed without Edwards in attendance. A stout lad, it took five AMS constables a considerable length of time to evict him from the meeting. While he struggled and yelled such phrases as "they call it repression", FSM members outside the Collins Room meeting place (in Richardson Hall) started shouting "pig". As O'Hare was inched outside the door he was screaming "It can't happen here!...Oh yes it can!...It's happening everybody!" and the FSM members chorused in "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh, The NLF is gonna win!"

A later meeting in March was disrupted by a storming of the Senate by fifty FSM members moments after a snowball pelting episode took place outside. Amid an estimated crowd of 1000, some engineers decided to show their displeasure at the FSM demonstration taking place by bombarding the demonstrators with snowballs. The Senate was inside considering a vindictive motion from the Dean of Graduate studies to have Chuck Edwards expelled from Queen's. The meeting was adjourned by Dr. Deutsch when the FSM moved in. The meeting was reconvened less than a month later in Wallace Hall, which held more than twice the number of spectators. In the meantime, eighty five professors signed a letter deploring the motion for expulsion of Edwards calling it an unduly harsh reaction to a student's pursuance of a grievance

The Senate amended the expulsion motion and used the words "strongly censure" against Edwards. Good and MacDonnell, the latter two having composed the letter to the media. Edwards did not return to Queen's.

It was decided at the most recent meeting of the Senate that AMS constables were no longer required to guard the doors of the Collins Room. The last heard of Chuck Edwards was a few years ago at which time he was driving a cab in Kingston.

Hugh Faulkner explains problems of price controls

Christine Cooper

Secretary of State Hugh Faulkner held a press conference in Kingston Fri. Oct 24, in an effort to explain more clearly the anti-inflationary program implemented by the government on October 14, 1975.

At the outset, Faulkner emphasized the four points of the program. Not only will it control incomes and prices, but it includes a constrained federal monetary policy, a cut in government expenditures, and an attack on the structural shortages in the economy, such as land and housing.

Faulkner went on to say that the programme was not born at the spur of the moment, but was carefully considered. There were two factors involved in making the decision. First, inflation was perceived to be coming from internal causes in the economy rather than external pressures, as was the case in 1974 when the Liberals opposed Robert Stanfield's income and price control programme. Secondly, there was an awareness of the necessity of some kind of intervention.

Faulkner asserted that about 90 percent of the mail reaching his desk, and reaching other Cabinet ministers, was from the public demanding some sort of government control.

There are two major problems that Faulkner and his colleagues forsee. For one thing, there are certain sectors in the economy which traditionally have had much the same wage rate; for example, the inside workers and the letter carriers of the postal union have been traditionally tied together. It will take about five or six months to overcome these difficulties. The other problem is convincing the Canadian people that this is a fair policy, thereby eliciting their support in installing the policy.

The federal government is also effectively putting a freeze on the hiring of public servants. They expect an increase of only 1.5 percent next year as opposed to 3 percent of this year and 7 percent of the previous year. However, Faulkner pointed out that the government was in a difficult situation in cutting back government expenditure because it would mean a cut in public services, for instance, Mr. Faulkner's own budget for cultural grants has been cut.

Finally, Faulkner admitted that controlling prices is much more difficult than controlling wages, however, the government will do everything in its power to enforce the controls, and they are open to suggestions from the public as to how to amend the programme should it prove to be effective in any way.

University's role: push for the truth

Gerry Lewarne

Professor Noam Chomsky from MIT started his comments at the Teaching and Learning Conference held this weekend with the truism that the universities should be constantly investigating and moving towards the truth. He then went on to show that this is virtually impossible but nevertheless should be attempted. He used the Vietnam War as an example.

His main point was that the "liberal intelligensia", who are the leading academics at the universities, are not questioning the direction that U.S. policy is taking. Before 1968 the intelligensia was in favour of the war, but after that period said that the U.S. should get out of it because they could not win whereas they should have been against the war because it was morally wrong. Professor Chomsky points out that this is exactly the same time that the conservative businessmen decided the same thing. It was the popular stand to take.

He went on to say that if the universities were truly seeking the truth then they would not have supported the war in their academic writings and by allowing the government to use their laboratories and professors. Chomsky says that the liberal intelligensia are the secular priests who advocate, but do not question, the state religion. For an example there was very little mention in their academic writings in the post-WWII era of corporate influence on foreign policy. This denies even seeing that Standard Oil controlled the State Department for almost half a century. He said that along with this, the media printed, as fact, the fabrications made up by the State Department about the Vietnam War. This leads to a pure ideological state which is totalitarian because the true facts are never reported.

Looking at the student uprisings in the late 1960's, Chomsky says that they hardly made a ripple in the pure idological state. However, he was surprised at how big an impact they did have for two reasons. Firstly, students are a peripheral and transitory group in society. Secondly, they had no support from the outside world.

Professor Chomsky maintains that the university is supported by the people who own society and therefore can never move towards the truth as it should. However, students should be encouraged to analyze the assumptions of society (ie. move towards the truth) because every small success is important. Of course, the fate of the university if it is too successful in moving towards the truth is death at society's hand. Chomsky's final comment is that society must change first before the universities can change.

UNITED WAY CAMPAIGN

Oct. 1st was the opening day of the 1975 United Way Campaign. The co-operation of everybody is required if the goal of $4000 is to be met. We believe it can be, because the people of Queen's take time to think of others. It would be greatly appreciated if you would send in your donation as soon as you possibly can. Hopefully, the campaign will have been successfully completed by November 21, 1975.

.. If you would like to make your cheque payable to a particular agency, by all means do so. It will be forwarded on your behalf and you will be sent an official receipt for taxes.

.. Please, your help is needed. It is extremely difficult to keep up the pace on this goal, so canvasses are necessary. Word of mouth seems to be an effective way.

Mayor Speal speaks his mind

Nancy Bowes

Maudlin as it may sound, George Speal is an honest, concerned man. Fortunately for the city of Kingston, this man is in a position where he can behave honestly, openly, as an example to the people and show his concern for Kingston.

Mayor Speal's first question was "What can I do for you?" Perhaps this is standard fare. It certainly reflects, however, his attitude to the people who wait to see him Tuesday and Thursday mornings outside his spacious office in City Hall. He really wants to know how he can help.

Some would say it is a ploy to seem concerned. A heated debate may reveal the mayor to be a man capable of intrigue and deception, but our interview revealed only the most straightforward and open of men.

Not so shocking, you say? How many politicians, especially in small to medium sized cities, have you engaged in conversation? Too many of them are so wrapped up in the robes of office that they feel duty-bound to patronize the general public, and confuse the press. Not George Speal.

Journal: What do you think about being named honorary president of the Alma Mater Society?

Speal says it is "a double honor;" it is both a personal pleasure for a man who graduated from Queen's and a great honor to the city. Speal is concerned that the links between the city and the university remain strong. It is important to bring and to keep the two entities close together. He would have us eliminate from our thinking the terms "us" and "them." A consolidation to "us" is much preferable when speaking of Queen's and Kingston.

Speal says this not to make nice copy in the local press, but because the relationship is mutually beneficial. Student participation, commercial, social and cultural, aids Kingston. In turn, the many resources of Kingston are open to, and willing to help Queen's students.

According to Speal, in the not-too-distant past, only complaints were heard when the name of the university was mentioned at city hall. He is pleased to report that with the opening of lines of communication, the complaints have been silenced Nevertheless, he is quick to point out that the relationship cannot be taken for granted. Like a marriage, both partners must constantly strive towards their definition of a perfect marriage..

Journal: Many Queen's students feel that Kingston residents resent the inordinate amount of tax-free land in the city. Hospitals, churches, government buildings and the university create a burden on the Kingston taxpayer. Some guilty consciences were assuaged when the province agreed to pay $50 per student and $50 per hospital bed. Do the payments make the tax burden a myth?

Speal's answer was a straightforward "No." Despite the efforts of Principal Corry, Deutsch and Watts to gain substantial provincial subsidies, the tax burden is still a reality. Speal hastened to note that any resentment on the part of Kingstonians is at tax bill time. "It's not unnatural to vent your anger when you get your tax bill on something that is visible."

Journal: In our talk so far, you have exhibited no antagonism whatsoever towards Queen's. Is our image that good? Is there no room for improvement?

Speal: "All facets of Kingston, all organizations, are penetrated by Queen's. There isn't one community organization that wouldn't feel dire effects if Queen's were to pull out."

Speal argued that Kingstonians do not judge the university badly because of one bad incident in one Frosh Week.

One of the greatest priorities for the mayor is the senior citizens, especially those in institutions. It hurts him to think of their weekends when the regular staff who fill their weekdays go home; Saturday and Sunday are "48 hours of nothingness." Central to the dilemma is the overriding concern "for things, rather than people."

Both citizens of Kingston and students at Queen's need to become less self-centred, for "self-centredness is the path of self-destruction." The solution to the malaise cannot be imposed, but must come from within each individual.

"How can I encourage a third-year economics student (for example) to go to Rideau Crest or Providence Manor on a Sunday afternoon and offer to take some people out for a walk in the leaves?"

Mayor Speal is pleased that the framework for interaction between the city and the university already exists; he insists however, that there is always room for improvement.

Speal's family did well by Kingston. Now Kingston, and that includes Queen's University, is doing well by George Speal

Community forum to meet

Surely the great lament of this decade is the deplorable lack of communication among many groups that should be closely allied.

A step is being taken on November 22 in the fourth floor theatre at St. Lawrence College to overcome this barrier and try to dissolve the cause for lament. A community forum will be held on that day to bring together interested groups and individuals from all facets of life in Kingston.

Anybody interested in knowing more about the community forum is invited to contact Paul Bennett, either through the AMS office, or at home at 549-4577.

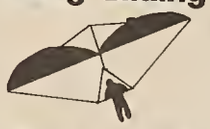
An opinion

Tuition, summer jobs, and being female

Michele Haynes

Outside it was a perfect, perfect day that surrounded one small incident that ignited a realization within me. The incident was the paying of my tuition fees. From the depths of Richardson I could hear the mournful sounds of the demise of my bank balance through six-hundred and seventy-six dollars (and sixty-five cents), as I handed over "the cheque." My bank account now looking as if it were an uponed account, I still smiled as I realized that most of my summer's full-time earnings had just been signed away.



The smile lasted through the trite observation that the brilliant leaves resembled "little lamps of learning." It faded. The price I had just paid for my education was definitely not right. Angered, I present my mutinous thoughts to explain why my tuition fee was too much.

Realization Number Two: In any employment, but specifically in summer-employment (in which I am forced to indulge if I wish to pay my tuition), I am discriminated against doubly. Not only is it enough that I am discriminated against because I am a student, I am discriminated against because I am a female. Being a student allows me the dubious distinction of doing the same amount of work for less pay than anyone who isn't a student--this is a universal problem for students and not unique to me. However, being a female (over which I have no control), guarantees that I will be paid less than my male counterpart because of blatant discrimination exercised at the outset of my summer job search. I am not, in this instance (thank god), paid less than a male for the same amount of work, because I am not even allowed the opportunity to obtain the same work as a male.

For example, I can earn $2.40 an hour waitressing while Joe Queen's is earning at least $5.00 per hour in construction because the construction companies have pre-supposed that females cannot "do the work", remaining thereby obliviously myopic to the number of females employed in this field even in this country. This is merely acting as a case in point to support my contention that as far as the payment of tuition goes, I have already contributed too much.

My earning power is pre-determined from the outset to be much less than that of a male student because of the practice of discrimination. If this sex-discrimination is carried out to its logical conclusion, it only stands to reason that females should pay less tuition because of discriminatory practices that dictate their earning power (or lack of it.) Also as a subsidiary argument for this issue--the university should purge all its members (male and female) of the comforting but antiquated and erroneous assumption that tuition fees are not too high, because most females probably won't make it past their second year. After all, they are so obviously only here to procure a husband. Well! Aren't they?

I can assure you that all the way home I crushed those "little lamps of learning" under my feet.

University Centre: construction and financial difficulties

Karen Becksted

The summer of 1975 brought a general construction strike to Kingston adding to the problems of the already beleaguered University Centre A general construction strike involves all labourers; those men who help around the site and assist tradesmen Such a strike effectively puts a stop to all consturction since other workers will not cross the labourer's picket lines.

The strike itself lasted five weeks; however, according to Anthony Bernard, the university's construction engineer for this project, the contractor feels that he lost at least seven weeks' worth of work. This is due to the fact that the men talk about the strike a week before it happens and thus do not perform up to par. Also, after the strike itself, at least a week is needed to bring operations back to their full potential; to return equipment which was moved to other sites and to again mobilize the men.

In addition to this problem the heavy excavation work was begun in the winter months, so that an additional three weeks of labour were necessary due to the bad weather. Bernard, and Ken Hancock, of Queen's Physical Plant, are in agreement though that neither of these set-backs has significantly altered the completion deadline. The contractor should be finished by the spring of 1976 as was originally estimated, and the centre should be furnished and ready for the student enslaught of the following September

The university's budget has not been affected by these issues since the contractor must absorb any additional costs resulting from such difficulties. Bernard and Hancock both hope for relatively smooth sailing from now on, because no trades are set for negotiations in the near future

In 1969, the need for a new centre was first stated by the A.M.S. University Centre Committee It's purpose would be to foster communication among and between students, faculty, administration and alumni, "to provide essential services and amenities for the convenience of users", and "to provide for the cultural, social, intellectual and recreational life of the university community". Blasting on the site for phase 1 began in December 1974

The present union was built more than 25 years ago to serve the needs of a university community of 2,000 students. Now there are 10,000 possible users, circulation within the building is terrible, the food service operations are cramped, and the space limitations are severe for the pub, the A.M.S. and other organizations.

Students in 1969 pledged $5 each per annum until $500,000 was reached, alumni pledged 1 million dollars and the university was to cover the balance of the capital cost, approximately 2 million dollars. In February 1974, students reaffirmed their pledge by a referendum, and also gave their permission for the $10. Union fee (now collected from all students which goes toward the operating costs of the Union) to be renamed the University Centre fee This would help pay for the operating costs of the new building.

However, once work began in 1974, it was revealed that due to soaring inflation, the total cost of Phase 1 would be greater than 3 million dollars; almost the total budget for both phases. Thus Phase 2 could not be completed in its entirety. As a result, the User's Committee had to decide what to do with the remaining $475,000. It was decided that the first priority would be the required second floor washrooms in the Union, necessary if the new dining facilities were to be licenced. The second priority could be to open up the front hall of the Union, providing for traffic flow through to the basement level and the new building, and to provide general meeting space and a sky-light at the centre of the main floor.

The problem is that this project would cost an estimated 1.1 million dollars; more than that left over from Phase 1. The Users' Committee sees this however as the only possible solution to maintain the concept of a "community centre". They feel that anything less would be unacceptable

This recommendation of the Users' Committee has yet to be accepted by the Board of Trustees. At a time when the University is facing severe financial constraints, it is not known how the Board will react to this additional expenditure. It can only be hoped that they will have a positive outlook and will consider this concept of a University Centre worthy of the expense involved.

There is a likelihood that all of Phase 2 will go ahead for the needed alumni and student offices, however, no date has been proposed. If the Board of Trustees fails to accept the recommendation of the Users' Committee for the proposed partial renovation of the Union, then Phase 2 in its entirety will of course be even more in the distant future.

If the Board of Trustees is reluctant to take on this additional expenditure, part of the blame can be placed upon the provincial government. The government gives grants for academic buildings, and this money is separate so that the expense for the University Centre will not necessitate a cut-back academics.

Gov't fails to keep word

However the 6 million dollar cost of MacKintosh-Corry was funded by the Board of Trustees and the government has not, as of yet, kept its word and paid back the university. As a result the university is short of capital.

The loss of 165 and 163 University has meant the relocation at the Grey House of the Birth Control Centre and the Student Counselling Service. The demolition of these two buildings was opposed on the grounds that their architectural value was essential to their functions. It was feared that it would not be possible to maintain the same friendly, relaxed atmosphere with the move to a more modern office. It was stated by the architect and by the Users' Committee though, that the maintenance of these buildings would necessitate a major redesign of the proposed centre. The structure could also not be reduced in size any further without interfering with the goals of the project.

It was suggested that the buildings be moved to an alternate site, however the cost ($20,000) was a deterrent as well as the fact that no suitable location could be found. According to the users the next best thing would have been to take over a house in the same central area but buildings similar to these with their distinctive architecture (curving windows and brickwork) were scarce.

In the plans for Phase 2, Wallace Hall will be stratified into two levels. The Users' Committee felt that in redesigning the Union to improve circulation, no useful purpose could be found for the hall as it is. The top floor is to be used as a lounge area while the lower floor is to be alumni offices.

This plan has received much opposition from those wishing to preserve Wallace Hall as it is. While it is felt that the Hall is formal and cold as it is now, with proper furnishings it could be turned into a comfortable study-reading area; perhaps with a mezzanine along one wall to reduce the height. Bruce Trotter, Rector and Ian Nordheimer, A.M.S. Vice-President share the view that students will not bother climbing up to the third floor level to use the top floor of Wallace as a lounge, since there is adequate lounge space on other levels. In the interim between Phases 1 and 2, Wallace Hall will be used as lounge space.

Debt charges, maintenance and operating costs (greater than that covered by the student operating fee of $10) are to be met by rental charges to the users of the centre on the basis of floor space occupied. This debt schedule received criticism from the A.M.S. on the grounds that the students will have to cover most of the costs. Since they'll be the groups occupying the greatest portion of the new centre. It was felt that this violated the understanding in 1969 that the university could come up with all of the capital outside of the Alumni and specified student contributions. However, the university is no loonger in a position to finance a 2 million dollar expenditure due to inflation and the government's freeze on capital spending. Thus the debt is to be paid off through the operating budget.

The Union was purchased in 1929; the building originally was an Orphans' Home. In the 1940's it burned down, and the present Union reopened in 1948 (except the International Centre and Graduate Residence which opened in 1965). In 1948 the fee which men paid in return for concerts, speakers, and their activities hosted by the Union was raised from $6 to $10 to help cover the operating costs of the expanded Union.

Debt still outstanding

Women were charged $2, previously they had paid nothing as they had not even been allowed into the building. The $250,000 loan to expand the Union was to be paid back out of the revenues generated by Union. Both the principle and capital were to be returned by 1978, however in April of 1975, $112,000 of that debt was still outstanding.

Out of the $10 Union fee paid by students, the operating costs of the building were to have been covered, and out of the Union revenues the debt was to have been paid off. However, the Union has not yet generated enough money for the debt to have been almost paid off; food services for instance, have been operating at a loss for several years.

The question of a Student Union Debt fee has arisen. Will we charged such a fee once our $10 Union fee becomes switched over to finance the new University Centre? Both Trotter and Nordheimer have stated that such an event is very unlikely. There is a verbal agreement that the University will accept this debt since the students have paid their $10, and it is not their fault if the University has not paid off the debt.

Reading Keats by Candlelight

I am reading Keats by candle-light snug, warm
the storm outside beating
as my mind pulls the urn from the page;
drawing it out from behind the words

I raise the vessel gently
it turns before my eyes sparkling the beauty envoking the joy of those who first felt the taste of the lover's ache

The shadows of my presence begin to flicker in the light and black glides over legs, arms obscuring parts of the urn and the minds beneath it

The storm is building now becoming an anger lashing her wet hair through my window;
my hands reach to preserve the flame and the urn melts into the shadows

The pipes are silent the urn's music gone but for a single moment when a Greek heart and a British heart were balanced precariously where my soul meets my mind and this, I think, is what we call home.

—Norman Maynard

For what its worth,
I think maybe I love you.
Not much is it
when you compare it the Cuban who screamed her passion until the neighbors pounded on the walls, or the stewardess who kept you going for eighteen hours, or the boutique salegirl who bought you bells so you could ring when ready stopped when served
And I guess it's nothing really compared to the man in the washroom who said you were kind of cute, then bought you a drink
Guess it's not much at all.
but I can't scream,
or exhaust you,
or buy you bells and drinks.
All I can give you is me.
Not much I guess.

Michelle

The roots grew deep,
To be broken by wind and time.
Nursed through storms and raging battle
Which once ruled mankind and vanished,
Leaving maturing fruit on scarred branches
To perish
Its seeds spewn by wind and time
Grew strong abundant arms,
To withstand force,
But have memories of history

Jazz at Grant Hall

Grant Hall will resound to big band jazz when the Queen's Jazz Ensemble give two concerts on Tuesday, 28 October. Performance times are 12:30 noon and 8:30 p.m. and admission is free.

The eighteen-piece ensemble is under the aegis of the Music Department and is composed mainly of students in the Bachelor of Music programme. This year, the ensemble is under the direction of David C M Smith, and is in its third year of existence. The Jazz Ensemble has played to enthusiastic audiences in a packed Grant Hall at each performance so far.

David Smith said "we are striving to envolve a sense of style and to incorporate improvisation within the structure of the jazz ensemble, which in itself imposes considerable self-discipline for the players".

A sampling of Tuesday's programme includes a sophisticated new arrangement of standard pop tunes as well as some from current top of the charts. The music of the late Duke Ellington will be featured in a special "Tribute to the Duke", as well as current hits such as "Yesterday's Music' and "Traces".

Pretty tacky tacos

Dave Colburn

I know two things about Mexican food; it comes from Mexico, and the best Mexican restaurant in the world, Pancho's, is located in Dallas. I thought I'd rise to my level of incompetence and try the Square Rib Retaurant and Pizzeria. The Square Ribe located five block north of Princess on Division, did not come close to challenging my incompetence

The restaurant offers an economical range of Mexican food. All the typical items are on the menu; tacos, enchiladas, burritos, and Mexican rice (a tired form of Spanish rice). These dishes are available separately or in various combinations. There is a wide selection of pizza available also.

I ordered a number two, consisting of a taco, a burrito, and an enchilada. The cost, $2.15, seemed reasonable and fell within the range of my 'expense account'. My first doubts about the wisdom of eating there occurred when my meal was plopped down in front of me on a paper plate, next, my milk appeared, still in the carton; several minutes later a styrofoam cup appeared, this I correctedly assumed was not a finger bowl. Even at the price range offered at the Square Rib there is no excuse for their table settings: Seto's is a smaller place and it manages to have resepctable dishes.

The meal, itself, was not any better. The food was pre-prepared and undercooked; several times I thought I was chewing on the paper plate. One feature of Mexican food that we are all aware of is its spicyness, my meal at the Square Rib was spicy, but not noticebly more than an average pizza, so much for Mexican authenticity.

The restaurant was not busy, I was the only customer, nor had they just gone through a busy-spell, as I arrived prior to the supper rush hour; there was plenty of time to prepare my meal properly. This also was the first time I appeared in a restaurant and made my intentions of reviewing the place quite clear. If a food-reviewer gets the meal that I did, I shudder to think of the meal someone else would get, especially during the busy dinner hours.

location of new Domino Theatre

D.T. and my father

Clint Quinn

The Domino Theatre is back again with a new, revitalized look. The Domino group, formed in 1953, has since then been an integral part of the Kingston community, performing on radio, and at many auditoria and theatres throughout the area, as well as their old location on Princess Street. Since September 18th, it has been located in a modernized and converted stable at the foot of Morton Street, close to the lakeshore. By helping out in the construction and decorating, the Theatre members have imprinted into the building some of their own character, making the New Domino Theatre a very pleasant place to view a performance.

The first performance at the New Domino Theatre, entitled Music Hall, was successful, drawing twelve consecutive full houses. The hard-working group seems to attract success in general, as the Domino Theatre won the Eastern Ontario Drama League award for Best Performance at the EODL Festival in Peterborough earlier this year. The group is a collection of entirely local talent, and attract members from all walks of life, from students to doctors and lawyers.

The New Domino Theatre's second production, Lloyd George Knew My Father, opens on Thursday, October 30 at 8:30 p.m., and runs every Thursday, Friday and Saturday night at the same time until November 15. Tickets cost $2.75, and can be purchased either at the door or by phoning Domino at 548-4914 Tuesdays through Saturdays between 3 and 6 p.m.

The play, written by William Douglas Hume, is a comical look at the effect of progress, in the form of an expressway, on the family of General Sir William Boothroyd, a veteran of the First World War, and a stalwart of the British Empire (portrayed by Mr. Ron MacPherson). When Lady Boothroyd, (Beverly Stewwart), discovers that an expressway is to be built through the family estate, Boothroyd Hill, she is outraged. When she finds out that their son Hubert Boothroyd, (Deryck Hazel), Member of Parliament, will not do a thing to stop it, she vows to commit suicide at the very minute that the first sod is turned. The resulting events form a comedy in the hilariously British tradition of Hume.

The director, Ms. Valerie Hirschfield, is enthused with the progress of the production, in rehearsal for six weeks. She has managed to iron out the few everpresent difficulties involved in performing at a new location, and expects Lloyd George Knew My Father to be every bit as successful as any previous Domino production.

Playboy well done

Donald Rayko

John Millington Synge's The Playboy of the Western World is perhaps the best known play to emerge from the "Celtic Renaissance" of the turn of the century.

Footsore young Christie Mahon arrives at a public house in remote Mayo, where it is drawn from him that he is in flight after murdering his father. Shock quickly evaporates as the entire settlement is enchanted by the novelty of a parricide---especially the publican's peppery daughter, Pegeen Mike, and the persistent Widow Quin. The admiration of all transorms the dreamy Christie into a self-assertive local hero, and the new Christie wins all the village's sporting prizes: in the eyes of all he is a veritable Playboy of the Western World.

Until his pursuing father turns up, heavily handaged but very much alive and bent on vengeance. The subsequent flip-flops of circumstance, attitude and fortune underline sharply the ironic regard in which Synge's Irish held their heroes.

Director Roger Dunn, his staff and players have mounted a signal production of Synge's play at the St. Lawrence College Theatre, Kingston.

David Smith's set manages to be airy and attractive while, oddly enough, at the same time conveying the rough and untidy oppressive insularity that the play calls for. Stacey Haslam's costumes have been executed without a jarring note.

All the players' performances were good. Accent is vitally important to Synge's plays and, with the possible exception of one or two minor characters, the accents were remarkably credible.

Trevor Davies's Christie Mahon and Jill Chamberlain's Widow Quin were outstanding; both managed to construct full-bodied characters. Fine jobs were-also done by Jan Brady as Pegeen Mike, Barry Chamberlain as her publican father, and Gerry Millar as Christie's dad.

In sum: a very good play was given a very good, and enjoyable, performance.

One of the wellsprings of the Irish National Theatre was a sense of indignation at and protest against the disregard of the indigenous chthonic traditions and the wholesale importation of foreign culture. I, personally, cannot but feel it ironic that director, Roger Dunn, has chosen to mount this particular play when we in English Canada seem to be just awakening to the extent and insidious speciosity of our own imported branch-plant culture.

Playboy is a technically fine play and, for Ireland, a historically important play; and important for us, it can serve as an example and an exhortation to recognize, develop and heed our own peculiar national, mythic and cultural situation. But ultimately it must be recognized that it is about them, not us. Ultimately, il faut cultiver notre jardin.

Hallowe'en harvest fest

Bitter Grounds will be open this weekend on Friday night rather than the usual Saturday night. Friday night being Hallowe'en, Bitter Grounds will present a Harvest-time atmosphere and invites people to wear a costume.

Willie P. Bennet is the featured performer. Willie, who plays guitar and mouth-harp, is a singer-songwriter from the London area. His reputation as a songwriter is growing, and he has had songs recorded by David Wiffen (White Line), Colleen Peterson (Music in Your Eyes) and Doug McArthur (Country Squall).

Tickets will be cheaper to those wearing a costume Admission with a costume will be $1.75 and without will be the regular $2.25. Memberships, which are 75 cents, are still required. Most weeks, there are numerous tickets available at the door. If, however, you wish to buy tickets in advance (for $2.25) and then wear a costume you will receive a 50 cent rebate at the door.

Dunning Flicks

A modern morality play

Tom MacGregor

In the last 20 years of movies we have been often distress with the them of man's loneliness in the world. Distressing as that may be it soon takes back-seat to the terror of never being free of a listening ear. This is explored with pure craftmanship in Francis Ford Copolla's The Conversation to be seen at 'Dunning Thursday night.

Copolla rose to fame with one movie, The Godfather, which of course is biggest money getter in cinema history. Its impact layed in its portrayal of the Mafia and how it could morally justify itself to itself. In The Conversation Copolla take the morality question into the world of wire-tapping, centering on one man, Harry Cowl (Gene Hackman) with one precept: "I'm not afraid of death but I am afraid of murder."

This structurely brilliant film begins with an aerial shot of a crowded city square. The camera descends as the credits roll until we are aware of a young couple walking about. We can't hear them but they are being heard--taped by microphone-carrying men in the crowd. It is Harry's job to eliminate the excess noise and make an audiable recording for his employer. This mysterious beginning becomes slowly clearer as the tapes get better and better. As the tapes become clearer so does Harry's conscience.

Gene Hackman is naturally the perfect compliment to such a director He too molds his performance with craftsmanship giving us a man who has been so long in the business he finds it mundane. Yet to Harry the wire-tapping business has been his outlet of expression as well as the cause of his only regret. Now approaching retirement, Harry finds that his life must conform to his morality and this conversation he is working on becomes the true test.

This is the kind of film one can sit back and enjoy just for the technical skill with which it is put together. Certainly the last image will stay with you as long as you remember the film. On top of this though it tells a fascinating story and poses a very contemporary social question. Certainly this will be a stimulating evening's entertainment.

Football in Playoffs!

Tom Shand

The Queen's Golden Gaels finished their 1975 regular season in magnificent fashion as they manhandled the Bishop's Gaitors by a 37-6 count in Lennoxville on Saturday. However the Gaels playoff hopes rested in the hands of halfback Wade Clare and his Concordia team, who were battling McGill for a playoff birth in Montreal. Ironically it was this same Concordia team, who originally jeopardized Queen's playoff chances by upsetting the Gaels in their season opener, that squeaked out a 26-25 victory over the Redmen to allow the Gaels to advance into post season play.

Queen's and McGill finished with identical 3 and 4 records but the Gaels received the OUAA nod of approval by virtue of their victory over Carleton and the coinciding Carleton defeat of McGill. The games against the Ravens emerged as the determining factor because Queen's and McGill did not meet during the regular season and OUAA tie-breaking procedure reverts back to the result of head to head competition between the tied teams and the team immediately below them in the standings (Carleton).

The Gaels will meet the undefeated Ottawa Gee-Gees, ranked number one in the country, next Saturday afternoon at Lansdowne Park in Ottawa. Gaels performance in Lennoxville certainly indicates they have the potential to be giant killers but more than five smooth stones will be needed to slay the Gigantic Gee-Gees. Concordia will need to stage an upset similar proportions to eliminate the Blues next Saturday at Varsity Stadium.

Gaels offence, was fired up on Saturday. The offensive line consistently drove the Bishop's linemen back allowing the golden backs to drive for over three hundred yards on their opponent's home turf. Doug Lathan was also given time to pick up 150 yards via an aerial attack. "Head and shoulders" Powell again looked great in picking his was for 98 yards on 8 carries, including an 18 yd. touchdown run. A revitalized Jim Duncan totalled 116 in 10 trips including a 75 yard third quarter romp that ser up Manastersky's first T.D. of the year. Duncan also had a T.D. run called back when Bob O'Doherty was caught for clipping. O'Doherty compensated for at mistake by leading the Gaels' receiving corps with 49 yards on three key receptions including a 15 yard T.D. pass which gave the Gael's an early 10-0 lead in the first quarter. Gaels' other touchdown came after a 97 yard down which was topped by a one yard plunge by Jerry Kaczmarek who added 49 yards on 11 carries. Coach Tindall in his final league game went with the youth look for much of the final quater. Manastersky and Woermke moved into the backfield behing Q.B. Shugart who connected with rookie Blaine Shore for a 50 yard pass to Bishop's five on the final play of the afternoon. Shore also connected on a 20 yard field goal to match Will Kennedy's 33 yarder which opened the scoring for the Gaels. Kennedy kicked 4 converts and scored a single on a missed F.G. attempt while the Gaitors conceded a safety touch to complete the Gael's scoring.

Gaitors scored on a 50 yard safety touch and a tremendous 46 yard field goal off the toe of Morgan Quinn. Bishop's used three quarterbacks, as regular Jim Etcheverry played hurt until Darrell Craig compounded his injuries with a crashing tackle in the third quarter. The defence once again set up the offence as they intercepted three passes and forced a fumble in the first quarter alone. Gaels came out of the first fifteen minutes with a 20-0 lead and never looked back The hard-hitting "D" caused three more turnovers in the final half including 2 interceptions. Interceptions were made by Tovee, Rudan, Bakker, Hagerty, and Small in that order. Vanderwater and Kitchen who both have had an excellent year recovered the Gaitors loose balls.

Ron Hiedebrecht moves in to play ball during Guelph game this past weekend. Queen's emerged undefeated in league play.

Soccer undefeated

Gary Barnes

The Queen's Golden Gaels soccer team wrapped up their regular season play this past Sunday with a 4-2 home victory over Guelph University. The Gaels finished in first place with 17 out of a possible 20 points, by winning 7 games and tying 3. With their first place finish, Queen's will now have the home field advantage for the sudden-death playoff game against the second place team next weekend Their opponents will likely be Waterloo, although this will not be known for certain until the other weekend results are received. The Gaels tied Waterloo 1-1 two Sundays ago in a very hard-fought match and the playoff game should be equally close, if indeed they are the opposition The Gaels seemed to be a little too over-confident going into Sunday's game against Guelph as they had witnessed a relatively weak RMC team defeat Guelph 3-0 the day before. Queen's seemed to have more difficulty in controlling the pace of the game than they have had in most earlier matches. This would seem to be jointly caused by the very poor condition of the field and the reshuffling of players into new positions due to injuries. The absence of Don Barager due to injuries has been felt in the midfield area. Neither team moved the ball very well at the start of the game, but Queen's still managed to score the first goal on a head ball by Mark Bennett coming on a cross from Horst Rabeneick Guelph replied shortly after with a goal that should never have materialized. The ball was kicked into the Queen's goal area and should have been cleared by either keeper Dave McIntyre or fullback Graham Dunken, but unfortunately a Guelph player gathered the ball and scored. Queen's returned with some good pressure in the opposition's area but failed to click on several good chances. Horst Rabeneick finally scored on a 20 yard deflected shot to put the Gaels up 2-1 at the end of the half

The Gaels fullbacks Brian Sawyers and Terry Lister continued to shut off any attacks from the wings, but unfortunately the middle was not so strong Guelph's centre forward broke through the middle area and scored on a good breakaway shot to even the count The Gaels continued to play well only in spurts and went ahead on a bit of a lucky goal. The Guelph goalie, attempting to clear the ball, bounced it off Mark Bennett and into the net. Mark completed his hat trick late in the game by stealing the ball from the Guelph goalie and beating him with an angled shot.

The Gaels will now have to prepare for next Saturday's sudden-death playoff game Their unbeaten record will hopefully be continued for one more game to ensure them of a spot in the National playoffs to be held out west. The game is slated for 2:00, but the actual site has yet to be confirmed since the West Campus field is in such poor shape Details will be published on Thursday Fan support would be greatly appreciated by everyone associated with the team for this upcoming playoff game

OWIAA Field Hockey — Part I

Atwood

On Thursday afternoon a bus from Montreal made a detour through Kingston and picked up 30 energetic young Queen's students. It's destination...Toronto. Their mission...to do battle on the Field Hockey pitches of Scarborough college. Friday morning all met on the pitch. The Seniors playing York. The Intermediates facing the tough Laurentian Voyageurs. The Seniors were soundly defeated 4-0. The Intermediates came up with a 2-1 victory.

The next day the Seniors met both McGill (their travelling companions) and University of Toronto (the defending champions). Although both matches had their ups and downs our Gals just couldn't put the ball in the net. The score against McGill was 3-0; against U. of T. 4-0, Queen's losing both.

Saturday the Intermediates started the day off by putting it to Trent 13-0. Kirsti Bonniwell scored four goals (which, with the two she scored against Laurentian, put her weekend total at 6), Lyn Atwood for four. Margie Bartlett 2, Deb Stretton 2, and Bev Koski 1. The next two games were hard fought and Queen's controlled both games but could not put the ball in the net. Against York, after a scoreless overtime period the game was finally decided by a series of Penalty Flicks at the goalie. Each team had to pick five players to shoot, from a stationary position, five shots at the goalie. Queen's lost 1-0. The next game against University of Toronto was hard fought and Queen's domnated but could not procure even one goal. After an overtime period the game was finally decided on a series of penalty flicks. Queen's lost 2-1.

Needless to say, it was a disappointing weekend for both teams Next weekend is Part II of the OWIAA Field Hockey Finals. Queen's will again travel to Toronto to play the tournament at York University

Rugby Victorious

Jim Ferguson

In three games this weekend, the Queen's Rugby Club demonstrated its strength and will to win. On Saturday both the firsts and seconds defeated their U of T opponents. In the first quarter of the firsts game it appeared as if it was going to be a tight battle. Both teams, Queen's and U of T, were running it well. The first score came when Bill Payne picked up a ball after a line-out and took it over for a try. Peter Kopp converted the try to put Queen's ahead 6-0. From that point the play turned in Queen's favour. Rick Thomas, the scrum-half alertly picked up a ball and dove over for the second try for Queen's. Long runs by Jeff Evans and Roger Bartley accounted for two more Queen's trys. The final score of the game turned out to be a shut-out for Queen's at 23-0.

Even though the score does not indicate the fact, Toronto was tough opposition. By the end of the game two Toronto players were off with injuries and Queen's had lost the services of its captain Dave Bowker, who received a nasty blow to the head. There have been reports that Dave will be back before the end of the season.

Nigel Costello of Queen's Rugby team scores a try in one of their games this past weekend.

The seconds also had a very successful game against U of T. The final outcome was a 25 to 0 win for Queen's. The whole team was working well throughout the game as is shown by the fact that both forwards and backs were responsible for their share of the tries. Kevin Parker and Chris Bovaird, two forwards, both made gutsy runs through the opposing forwards to score, Jim Greg and Fergus Wilmer of the backs scored a try each. The final try was accounted for by Steve Wilson who made a long run from his fullback position. Don Davis was responsible for the points gained through kicking.

On Sunday, the seconds proved they are the best in the league. They played Trent, who, like Queen's, was undefeated before the weekend. In excellent weather, the game turned out to be fast and exciting. Queen's scored first on a penalty kick but this was quickly answered by a Trent try. With Trent ahead 4 to 3, Queen's had a difficult time working together and creating an effective attack. With exuberant urging from Coach Gavin Reid, on the sidelines, Queen's finally got things rolling and scored their first try. Peter Quinlin brilliantly drop-kicked for three points. Bill Buchanan, in the second half took one over in the second half with the help of Ken Covo. Ken was responsible for setting up both trys showing adept running ability. Credit should also go to Doug Campbell and the rest of the forwards. The final score was 16-4 for the Queen's seconds and leaves them the undisputed leaders in their league.

Queen's sailors first again

Steve Gunn

Queen's students captured the 1975 Intercollegiate Canadian Sailing Championship held last week-end at RMC for the second year in a row.

Saturday saw winds in the 20-25 MPH range while Sunday produced only light and fluky conditions. In any case Queen's dominated both days, easily defeating teams from RMC, Waterloo, Carleton, CMR and U to T. RMC provided a fleet of 420's for the regatta. Ten races were held in total with Queen's collecting eight firsts and two seconds. The win entitles Queen's sailors to advance to the North American inter-collegiate championships to be held at the New York Maritime Institute next June on Long Island Sound. Queen's sailors have also won all previous regattas this year for a perfect score for the season.

Queen's is blessed this year with many fine sailors who have proved themselves outside the University ranks. First year student Terry McLaughlin won the Canadian Laser Championship this summer and came fourth in the World Youth Sailing Championship at the age of fifteen. Jeff Boyd, a third year student, came second to Terry in the Canadian Laser Championship and placed 13th in the World Laser Championships a year ago. Doug Harvey, another third year student, placed second in the Laser North American Championships last year, and fourth in the Prince of Wales sailing week in England last summer.

peter case

With this great depth Queen's had enough good sailors to enter two contingents of four people each in this past weekend's regatta. The other universities could only provide one four man squad each. This was okayed by the race committee before the regatta; however, after one of the Queen's teams consisting of Jeff Boyd and Steve Gunn won the first race, the decision of the race committe was reversed. The team of Boyd, Gunn, Chris Way, and Patty Rolstone were told that they could not race as a separate team. Queen's is fortunate in that it is located on one of the best dinghy racing areas in North America. The 1976 sailing Olympics are to be held in Kingston and Queen's will play an integral part in hosting them.

Stop farting around and look around

Dear Editors:
The Teaching and Learning Conference held this past weekend has raised a consciousness among students as to the purpose of being at this humble institution labelled as a university, and indeed, the purpose of the university itself Although the Conference is aimed at evaluating these problems, I think that consideration must also be given to the methods used in canvassing for and admitting students.

There must be some standard used in choosing students other than the qualification of marks. Granted, university enrollment is already low enough without additional screening, but in looking around, it is already obvious that there are many students who will not go further than the first year because they were not able to differentiate between secondary and post-secondary education. If this is not looked upon as a waste of time, energy, and money, can we not argue that there are those who are not able to attend due to reasons other than lack of marks and it is not fair to them?

If the purpose of the university is to educate the people and give them the chance to intermingle with more enlightened minds in hopes that some of it may rub off, then why are there students here that can find no better occupation than sitting in the pub night after night with high school cronies, returning home inebriated each night with nothing other to report than "the music was lousy?" Who am I to judge? I was in the pub all the time last year, sadly neglecting my work because I was under the false impression that tomorrow would be a better day than today to do it, but by The Grace of God, and only that, I squeaked through and was able to realize what a mindless ass I had been. Now I am prepared to justify my presence here. My question is - does it have to take a whole year of farting around to appreciate the privilege of being here?

More credit for Women's Law

Dear Editors:
I was a little surprised at the article in the October 16 version of the Journal regarding the "Ontario Women and the Law" conference. Perhaps I'm being picky but two points hothered me.

First, I don't think the cute lead in reference to the cartoon strip was particularly constructive. Second, I think that the Women's Law Caucus deserved more credit for the work they put into organizing the conference than a "Persons wishing to attend the conference can call...". The impression I got was that the Women's Law Caucus were some sort of answering service for the creators and organizers of the whole project; the AMS and the Secretary of State. While the function of these two organizations was indispensible, all they did was provide the money good idea?

Outside view on Gray affair

Dear Editors:
I have read with interest the Queen's Journal coverage of your student government at Queen's. It might be helpful to explain to you and your readers how the students' union at Ryerson operates as a student organization representing 9,000 students. As a provincially incorporated organization without share capital the students' union is governed by a twelve member board of directors and a fulltime paid president. I am assisted in operating this one half million dollar corporation by ten full-time staff members plus unpaid members of the Board of Directors executive. In order to be elected, the President must be a full-time student at the time of the election and "shall endeavour to take at least one course per semester".

As representing the large student body, I must meet regularly and confidentially with the numerous levels of the administration; as well as, maintain close liaison with students across the campus. These meetings plus the work of general office administration take up over 80 hours a week; because of this, I have made a decision similar to your President's. I empathize with and support your President John Gray, in his endeavours to become better acquainted with his constituents and to administer the AMS. I feel compelled with all respect to say it is a courageous decision, one for which I feel Mr. Gray is being unjustly criticized.

Roger Gillespie, President Students' Union,
Ryerson Polytechnical Institute.

Another view: Gray should stay

Dear Editor:
Why could John Gray not handle both the responsibilities of the AMS President and the academic responsibilities of a student? If he resigns, and a new executive is voted in a month, will the new President be taking over a job that is impossible for a student to handle?

At the October 9 Outer Council Meeting, a committee was struck to study the structure of the AMS Executive with special attention focused on the status and responsibilities of the AMS President, and to make recommendations for changes to Outer Council in time to be implemented for the next AMS election.

A key question is: Could the job of AMS President be made lighter by shifting some of the burden of his office onto the shoulders of other AMS members, and so make it possible for the President to also take university courses, or should the AMS President become permanently full-time, and possibly even salaried? The committee will have to consider this question carefully, and come up with a satisfactory solution. Until then, I maintain that it is in the best interests of the students of Queen's and the AMS that John Gray be allowed to continue in his term of office as AMS President.
Chris Nind

Painting on the pavement

Dear Editors:
Spashing paint on sidewalks around Queen's is thoroughly asinine behavior.

This goes for those who paint those crests which increasingly deface the campus.

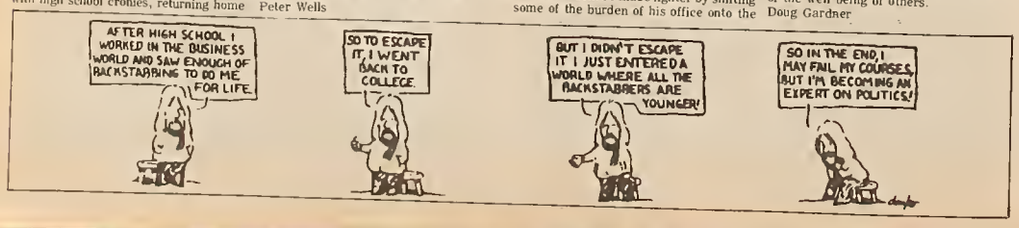
How can this pollution be stopped?

Not by putting more paint on the walks.

Probably not by talking reason or beauty to the painters.

They say they do it for "pride" in their faculty and year of graduation--if ever.

Some healthy and non-desecrating activity to express pride must be found before these lunatics use up all the sidewalks and start on the buildings and trees.



There, I've said too much.

Roderick Robertson

Less painting on the pavement

Dear Editors:
What is it that makes people so conceited as to think that everyone else wants to read for a year or more the morose dribblings of their infantile, probably intoxicated, minds. Slogans such as "78 EATS HERE," "THE BOYS OF GAEL GROUP 76 SCORED HERE", "78 SUCKS, 79++++", many of which have appeared on the street or sidewalk in front of Victoria Hall, do a great disservice to the majority of Queen's students who must endure such trash strewn across this beautiful campus for all the world to see. Have these students no feeling of respect for the campus as a whole?

We seem to be living in an age where an increasing number of people are showing blatant disrespect for the personal rights and the property of others. For example, (1) library books are spirited from library shelves to be kept for the duration of a particular course, with no thought of the other many students of the class which have thus been deprived of the benefit of using these books; (2) persons living outside of a university residence seem to feel no remorse for vandalism of residence property, even though the cost of such destruction is ultimately borne by the residents of these institutions! We are living in an age of "I", where some individuals think only of themselves, and not of the well being of others.

Vice-Principal shuffle: Kennedy, Harrower retire

Vice-Principal H. Morris Love

The Board of Trustees at its meeting on October 24 and 25 approved the reorganization of the present responsibilities of three Vice-Principals (Academic, Administration and Finance) between two Vice-Principals (Finance and Services).

Professor G.A Harrower, Vice-Principal (Academic) and Professor R.J Kennedy, Vice-Principal (Administration) will conclude their current terms on April 30, 1976, after six years of service, and will go on well-earned leaves before returning to academic duties The conclusion of their terms, therefore, will provide the occasion for a reorganization of these positions

Professor David Bonham, Vice-Principal (Finance), will continue to be responsible for the general financial administration of the University, including the office of the University Secretary, and will assume additional responsibilities for personnel and staff liaison, purchasing and food services,university information systems and capital development and financing.

On May 1, 1976, Professor H. Morris Love will assume for a five-year term the office of Vice-Principal (Services). He will be responsible for the library, the computing centre, student services, the registrar's office, university services such as printing, space allocation, parking, etc., the residences, housing and property management, cultural services such as the art centre, the performing arts office, CFRC, etc., Queen's TV, the Donald Gordon Centre, physical plant and campus planning In preparation for this reorganization, Professor Love relinquished his present responsibilities as Associate Dean in the Faculty of Arts and Science on Oct. 25 and in the interim period will be on special assignment reporting directly to the Principal. During this period Professor Love will plan the redefinition of responsibilities, the consolidation of activities and the elimination of apparent anomalies as called for by the Committee on Financial Constraint in order that changes aimed at reducing costs and improving efficiency may be brought into effect at the time he assumes office

Dr Love has been Associate Dean in the Faculty of Arts and Science since 1970

General meeting called to move on Gray issue

A General Meeting of the Alma Mater Society has been called for Saturday, November 8th at 2 pm. The meeting will be held in Wallace Hall.

The General Meeting of the student body, will consider the motion: "That the Alma Mater Society strongly recommend to the AMS Board of Directors that they exercise their legal ability to make John Gray a member of the AMS retroactive to September 1, 1975" The meeting is thought to be the first general meeting outside of the Annual General Meeting, in years

Gray announced his decision to withdraw from the university at the AMS Outer Council meeting three weeks ago. He wished to maintain the presidency and to assume that office's responsibilities on a full time basis Subsequent to his decision to drop his academic course load it was made known to him that he was no longer eligible to register in the Faculty of Arts and Science as a student.

The Aesculapian Society have taken the question of the constitutionality of Gray's Presidency to the AMS Court. The court begins its hearings on Monday. If the court decides that Gray is not eligible to hold the position, Outer Council may act on this information.

The purpose of the General Meeting is to "allow the entire AMS the opportunity to direct the AMS Board of Directors to make John Gray a member of the Society" according to Terry Collins, one of the principal organizers of the General Meeting Collins pointed out that "the retroactivity of Gray's membership would satisfy those individuals concerned with the constitutionality of Gray's presidency and avoid the interruption of the progress made thus far this year by the present AMS Executive."

United Way needs your co-operation

Nancy Watson

Inflation is making it difficult for everyone, and neither the United Way nor the twenty-five agencies it supports financially are immune to these inflationary pressures. The United Way can't strike to get a pay increase either, all it can do is ask.

If the United Way were to dissolve, it would mean that those in our society who need, and profit from the services of this organization would be abandoned Another alternative would be to turn to the government, where volunteers would be replaced by civil servants and money would be raised through increased taxation.

This month, the students of Queen's are campaigning to raise $4,000, a small sum when we consider the $66,000 Queen's faculty have put up for their objective.

Think, if every student donated forty cents, our objective could be easily attained. The United Way needs your help and cooperation. So far, "thanks to you, it' been working "

Let's keep it that way.

The Dene Nation

Will not melt away

Andree Chartier

James Wah-Shee, President of the Indian Brotherhood of the NWT, may be coming to Queen's sometime in January or February as an AMS funded speaker. The following is an excerpt from his speech to the National Conference of Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union in Toronto on September 15, 1975:

In 1899, and again in 1921, when Treaties 8 and 11 were signed, the Dene of the Northwest Territories were recognized as nations by the Canadian government and the Queen. The Dene were not aware of the secret purpose of the government at that time -- to rob the Dene of their land resources -- and were happy to sign what they saw to be peace treaties. The treaties guaranteed the rights of the Dene in return for peaceful passage on their land. At the same time the Government of Canada undertook a constitutional obligation to protect the interests of the Dene.

As awareness of the value of Dene lands grew, the government conveniently overlooked its side of the bargain and the Dene found themselves voiceless in the face of increasing invasion of their rights and theft of their land and resources. In the late 60's, it became necessary to organize to protect those rights and the land the Dene depended on. The Indian Brotherhood of the N.W.T. and the Metis Association of the N.W.T. were formed in the early 70's and the struggle intensified as the federal government consolidated its colonial grasp by imposing foreign institutions on the Dene -- the Territorial government, compulsory schooling and so forth.

The Dene became aware of the government version of the Treaties which claimed the Dene had sold their life-blood, the land, for $5 per person per year, and they were shocked. It was clear that the government not only was not keeping its side of the bargain, but was actively engaged in undermining Dene rights and Dene society. The Chiefs were forced to go to court to establish their right to file a caveat on their traditional lands, and the Supreme Court upheld that right in a famous decision in 1973.

The government continued to ignore the legitimate position of the Dene and fought the decision on technical grounds. In addition they implied that all that remained was for the Dene to take reserves for the bargain to be finalized.

At Fort Good Hope in June 1974 the Dene met and stated their position that they had never relinquished their right to the land and that they wished their rights as original owners and inhabitants of the land to be formally recognized before any further development was allowed to proceed. This was and is a legitimate and heartfelt position.

The federal government has rejected it - rejected our reality - and persisted in ignoring the most vital fact of all - that the Dene as a people are inseparable from their land, and their survival is therefore the chief motive behind their present position. The government has persisted in treating land as a commodity to be bought and sold and has implied that a land settlement is merely a commodity exchange.

This confusion could not be allowed to continue, and in July of this year at our second Dene Assembly, representatives of all 25 Dene communities, 300 people in all, decided to publish the Dene Declaration of Rights. This Declaration was intended to restate a reality which was recognized at the time of the Treaties, though conveniently overlooked since, that the Dene are 'a people', a nation with a distinct world view, with an identify tied to their relationship with the land. The land settlement issue is not a matter of a commodity exchange, but a question of national survival for the Dene. We cannot be bought off. We will not melt away.

Consciousness-raising not just another big word

The best way for me to answer this question is to use personal experience. I went to my first woman's meeting out of boredom, not expecting anything very exciting. What I found though,was totally unexpected. To put it simply, I had my mind blown. There were about 25 or 30 women at the meeting. The topic under discussion that particular evening had to do with childhood. As each woman spoke in turn, memories long buried in my own mind began to flow. For example I suddenly remembered a time, when I was about 9 years old, when my father was showing me off to a friend of his. When I'd finished my dance routine the friend turned to my father and said, "You've got a gold mine there." Although I felt somewhat puzzled as to why I should be dancing for this unimportant person, I also felt vaguely pleased. I guess it was a booster shot for my ego. But looking back on it I could see what had really happened. I was being used and seen as an object - and I had accepted it all without a word.

Upon realizing that my childhood experiences my guilts and fears were the same as those of all the other women the light dawned. I was not a screwed-up neurotic who needed a psychiatrist, but a person who, because of my sex, had been pressured into reacting passively to everything that happened to me. Above all, I discovered that I was not alone. I at last had found a group of people with whom I could identify.

But this was only the first step in a long progression. The more I talked to my sisters, the more convinced I became that our sisterhood was a "caste", a group of second-class citizens. And the more talking we did, the more convinced we became that the common solution to our problems must be a political one. The basis of our solution, we decided must be consciousness-raising, because before we could change the attitudes of our society we would have to change our own heads. The Blacks called it "tellin' it like it is". The Chinese said, "speak pains to recall pain."

Consciousness-raising may sound something like group therapy, but it's really quite different. Until recently the aim of therapy has been to get the individual to face up to what are called "personal problems", so that she or he could function as a constructive member of society. The aim of C-R is to get the individual to realize that her problems are not strictly personal, that there are alternatives and that these alternatives can be accomplished through collective action. Most important of all, in C-R women learn to support one another and the results are extraordinary.

The above article was taken from one of the Women's magazines. The AMS Women's Office is offering C-R groups every Wednesday night in the office, beginning at 7:00 p.m.

Non-smokers

Give me life & give me air

These days you needn't be a smoker to get a lungful of tar and nicotine. Just attend your lectures and seminars. If you are a non-smoker, you're probably suffocating silently in a windowless, poorly-ventilated classroom somewhere in Mac-Corry, wondering why your rights don't count - why healthy lungs are such a faux-pas in our university society.

O.K., I'm aware that those who happen to know me are likely screaming hypocrite by now. I confess - I am guilty of smoking my lungs out for the past five months. Viscounts hooked me and I thought it was just great.... It took a bout of pneumonia to snap me back to reality. Lung disorders are a miserable experience - to be denied a simple full breath of air is a scary feeling. Lung cancer and emphysema, in particular, are two strangling diseases caused when respiratory organs become laden with a black, gummy, gaseous mixture from tobacco smoke. I'll never smoke again; it wasn't hard to quit.

Anyway, back to the issue of Non-Smoker's Rights. They don't seem to exist on this campus. You have to sit while the person beside you blows smoke in your face, it's boiling hot, and your stinging eyes remain at half mast - how can you possibly get anything out of your lecture when you spend so much time trying not to cough. Melodramatic? Maybe, but it's true! I apologize to all those who suffered from my former selfish habit - I'll never violate your rights again.

To conclude, all I want to point out is the unjustice in the leniency at this school. Smoking should be prohibited in classes as it is in high schools and in many universities. Why should the detrimental habits of some override the right-to-comfort of others. Fresh air and clean lungs shouldn't be by luck they should be by right. Don't you agree?

Help is needed

We are appealing to interested people who are willing to work with teen-agers for one to two years, and whatever time is available after that.

NEEDED!

Group home parents to work with adolescent boys.

NEEDED!

Foster home parents to work with teen-age boys and girls.

NEEDED!

Accommodation for teen-agers, over sixteen years of age, who require a fairly independent living style. We would be particularly interested in university students for this, and the agency would provide supervision. A board rate is paid to cover expenses.

Please contact the Children's Aid Society at 542-7351 for further information.

The need is urgent!

Querying existence of the university

Cindi Hall

I recently participated in the Biennial Conference on Teaching and Learning, held by the Faculty of Arts and Science on Friday and Saturday, October 24 and 25. What struck me most was not the questionning of specific curriculum of teaching practices (specific in the sense of being particular to one department or course rather than another), but rather the basic questionning of the purpose for existence of a university--a gathering of aspiring intellectuals--and the concommitant questioning of the role of a university, both the institution and the individuals which comprise the community. On almost a daily basis one can examine curriculum of any given course or can offer suggestions for modifications of a certain teaching practice, and yet all to infrequently, in fact almost never, do we take hold of the opportunity to question our basic existence.

I think that every student, at some point in his or her academic career and maybe daily, questions the value of his or her participation in the university community. Some ask the questions, and are satisfied with the answers, and stay. Some fail to resolve this question, and stay within the community through inertia. Others never ask the question and don't need to ask it, for a variety of reasons including confidence in one's goals and actions. Others, maybe not enough, ask the questions and leave the community as a result of the answers.

But how many ask not how they as individuals can fit into the academic institution, the university, but rather how they can make the academic institution, the university, achieve its true purpose? How many actually question what the true purpose of that institution is?

The recent governmental funding cutbacks have prompted many people to state that we must defend the university, that we must convince the society and the government of this society of the need for the university, and the return value of the dollars invested in the university. The discussion engaged in the course of this conference has convinced me that this course of action is correct. But before we attempt to defend the university it is necessary that we determine what it is. If we fail to understand what the role of the university in society is, how can the society be expected to comprehend?

Dr. Noam Chomsky, in his keynote address on Friday night of the conference weekend, pointed to the fact that the university has failed on numerous occasions in its self-proclaimed role as a collection of social critics. The academic intelligentsia, he stated, "sold out" to the government when they condoned use of their technical facilities for war research during the period of the Vietnam war, for example; more importantly, the academic intelligentsia failed in its obligation to society when it refused to speak out actively against the immorality of that war. Yet a very basic point was raised in the discussion period following the speech: how can an institution which depends financially upon the government of the state be free enough of external influences to maintain a role as a critic of that government, and by implication, the society? Is it realistic to demand that the university attempt to fulfill a role as social critic, or should the individuals within the academic community concern themselves only with the conveyance of knowledge without any consideration of moral implications?

The purpose of the conference was not to arrive at specific conclusions, although some may have arisen. Any specific recommendations which are formulated by participants regarding present teaching and learning practices at Queen's may be channelled through Faculty Board of the Faculty of Arts and Science.

More "Gray" matter

Brian Copeland

The 'Gray Affair', as we called it last week, has a number of issues that should be cleared up in the face of Wednesday's edition of the Golden Words.

Should Gray be required to resign, which the Court could force if it decides that he is an unconstitutional President, the Commissioners would not have to resign. They are appointed until they resign of their own volition, or are removed by the order of Outer Council. If Gray was removed, the Commissioners would provide a vital link between the old and the new Administration. Surely, the new Executive would call on the Commissioners to stay, in the face of the Executive situation.

The example of a full-time President is one which has been misinterpreted by many. At Universities where the President takes a leave-of-absence, he remains in essence a student. Gray has withdrawn, in the full meaning of the word, from academics at Queen's. The full-time President is like the faculty member who takes a sabbatical; while he is not engaged in scholarship at the university, he remains a scholar. John Gray is like the faculty member who leaves staff for another career. The faculty member is no longer on staff, Gray is no longer a student, in any sense.

To say that the AMS forced Gray to be unable to cope with academics is at its essence, false. John controls his own time, and his own priorities, and only John Gray can be held responsible for academic failure and not the AMS.

And, finally, it has always been the philosophy of the AMS that its chief elected representative should be a student. It was only two years ago that this philosophy (and not a constitutional requirement) was re-affirmed by the AMS. The alternative is that we should allow anyone to be AMS President, whether he be a student or not. But, we, the students have decided rightly, I believe, that the AMS President should be a student for philosophical reasons. Gray is not a student, therefore he should not be our President.

Frustrated male decides to sleep out Suzie Q Week.

Out-dated Suzie-Q defeats own purpose

Betsy Greenlees

"Queen's women get their yearly chance to capture a guaranteed annual wage next week. It's Suzie Q Week. Ladies, this is your big chance to chase the men, as you have been all fall in your subtle way, without fear of detection and subsequent ostracism from your fellow head-hunters". Queen's Journal, November 15, 1957.

Hopefully there are very few, if any, women who regard Suzie Q Week as "the chance to capture a guaranteed annual wage." Many women look upon the week as their chance "to thank the boys who have been such gallant escorts all fall and to meet new boys." (Queen's Journal, November 16, 1962). But times have changed, and Susie Q Week is outdated, we shouldn't need someone to say "OK, girls, this is your week. This is your big chance." We should be able to ask men out if and when we want to. It is our right as women and as people to make this choice.

Suzie Q Week has always been run along the same lines; the women ask the men out, the women pay, the women open doors for men. This is a reversal of the typical male role. The male, according to society, must be aggressive, chivalrous and gallant. The stereotypical male is also strong, ambitious, sensible, intelligent, independent and unemotional. On the other hand, the stereotypical female is emotional, dependent, fickle, weak, submissive, insecure and scatter-brained. The male stereotype is positive, but the female stereotype conveys a negative image of women. Not all of these stereotyped characteristics are typical of males and females today, especially females. (Have you never seen an intelligent female? Have you never seen a dependent male?) But the female stereotype has existed for years and still does, and part of the purpose of the women's movement is to erase the negative female image and replace it with a positive, realistic image of a person, regardless of his or her sex. Equality is the essence of the women's movement, why shouldn't a woman feel free to ask a man out, pay for it, and open doors for him? The fact is, though, that many women feel uncomfortable about asking men out, for any of the following reasons. She may fear rejection, which is something men risk when they ask women out. Rejection is often taken personally, which should not be the case. She may feel awkward, because she hasn't played the male role before, and is therefore unfamiliar with what the male role entails. She may feel that the man (or her friends) will think nobody will ask her out, so she must resort to asking him out. She may feel that if she takes the initiative she will be looked upon as a man chaser, because aggression is restricted to males (that old stereotype again). These are several reasons why women feel uncomfortable about the role reversal, and why asking a man out is "easier said than done."

When women feel comfortable enough to ask men out, it will reduce the pressure on all concerned. The man won't think that she is chasing him--contrary to popular belief, every woman does not hope to graduate with her M R S. No one will feel the need to play games which are often pre-determined by the stereotypical mold.

There is no reason why men should pay for everything all the time. They do not have an endless supply of money any more than we women do. Asking a man out and accepting the financial responsibility would be a very pleasant change for most men, as well as being a step towards equality.

And when it comes to opening doors and helping with coats, etc., isn't it common courtesy to do this for anyone? Regardless of their sex?

Suzie Q Week is the perfect opportunity for women to break out of the stereotyped mold. Many women probably do not want to break out because they like the way things are now - they're flattered by being asked out, do not feel they should have to pay and think a man is obligated to open doors for them. But many women don't like the way things are, and Suzie Q Week gives them a chance to try these behaviour patterns which are unfamiliar to them. Paying for dates and asking men out is not the answer, but it can be a start to accepting behaviour traditionally thought of as exclusively male.

On the other hand, setting aside a special week when it is "permissible" for women to ask men out seems to indicate that at any other time of the year outside that one week in November, it is not permissible for women to take the initiative and ask men out.

Suzie Q Week itself is defeating its own purpose and also the aims of the women's movement. Women can ask men out when and if they want to, not just in that one week.

Why wait 'til November? DO IT NOW!!

B C Freezes Food, Fuel Prices

B C was the first province to respond to the federal anti-inflation programme when Premier David Barrett put a freeze on hundreds of basic commodities and essential services last Friday. Those commodities and services include food, fuel and pharmaceuticals, as well as ferry fares, some trucking rates and the B.C rail passenger fares and freights.

Barrett said he did so that the federal programme will be more equitable. The freeze will remain in effect until Jan. 1, 1976, and Barrett hopes that by then the federal programme will have been revamped

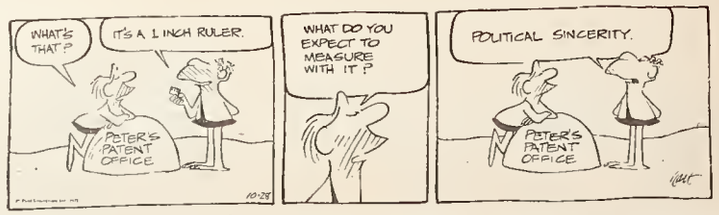
Oil Price Freeze Off

The Ontario Government announced last Friday that the oil pricefreezewould not be continued past the previously set deadline of Nov. 15; but the oil companies would be subject to the federal price freeze and would not be able to raise their prices more than 5.4 cents a gallon. Energy Resources Minister Dennis Timbrell said that if most of the retailers raise their prices more than that, then the freeze will be put back on. That's the way - waste your time on the little man, not the big guy.



Stephen Lewis, NDP leader for Ontario, flatly opposes the removal of the freeze; and Robert Nixon, the Liberal Leader, is not too excited about the removal of the freeze either. This issue, as well as the issues of rent review boards and the proposed 25 per cent Hydro increase in rates, threaten the stability of the Davis minority government. The Ontario PC's have been backed into a corner on these issues and they cannot get out of them without losing face politically. Perhaps Davis wants another election very soon.

Terrorist Plot at the Olympics

The Globe and Mail said Monday that the RCMP are presently investigating a conspiracy by about 14 Arab Canadians to support an act of terrorism at the Montreal Olympics. The Globe said that the RCMP know who all 14 people are, and are closely monitoring their movements.

The RCMP had denied knowing anything about it which makes it all the more likely that they do know a great deal about it

One of the suspected conspirators worked for COJO, the Olympics Games organizing committee, up until recently. Another suspect is a bomb disposal expert. The Globe's sources said that the surveillance has not intimidated the plotters in any way. Evidently the conspirators feel that the RCMP are too small a force for such a large country and that the border security is very poor.

More about Chuck

Dear Editors,

With regards to the article on the plight of Charles Edwards, we strongly suspect that Terry Collins presented a very one-sided biased report. Throughout the entire article Collins stressed the administration's side only. We do not know all the facts concerning this issue and would, therefore, be interested in hearing from anyone who could present a more complete and accurate report.

Bill Scott
Fred Neale
Roger Tabah

Dear Editors:

Reading Terry Collins account of the Chuck Edwards controversy evolved a nostalgic sense of deja-vu, not for my time at Queen's during the Edwards affair, but rather for those old Commie-killer comics of the fifties. The moral tone is identical - the villain ridiculed, defeated, and banished (in this case to "driving a cab in Kingston"). This approach degrades the parties involved and in my opinion constitutes irresponsible journalism. Had the issues been as one-sided and clear-cut as Collins presents; then there would have been no inquiry, and eighty-five professors would not have opposed Edward's expulsion.

If this censure seems severe, it is presented in the hope that this soft of 20-20 hindsight history revision will not be repeated.

And no, Mr. Collins, I did not belong to the FSM, or know Edwards, I thought Becker was grievously wronged, and I do not drive a hack.

Bitter Grounds

Dear Editors:

I would like to correct some false information in the ad for Suzie-Q Week on page 7 of Tuesday's Journal. Bitter Grounds will be open both Friday and Saturday nights of Suzie-Q Week (November 7th and 8th). We are featuring the Dixie Flyers - a four piece all-acoustic bluegrass band. The band members play guitar, banjo, mandolin, and stand-up bass. Admission is $2.25 (not $2.75). Tickets are on sale Thursday and Friday in the John Orr Room (for those who wish to assure themselves a seat) or at the door.

Whoever drew up the Suzie-Q ad did not contact anyone from Bitter Grounds in their search for information. Could anyone organizing similar summaries of campus events in the future please contact us to ensure their information is correct.

Beer ticket policy

Dear Editors:

On Saturday October 25, I attended the dance, "Jock Hop 2". I enjoyed myself on the whole, however, there was one thing which disappointed me. When I approached the bar at approximately 12:40, I was told that the bar was closed and that my beer ticket was useless.

There apparently was an announcement made by the band that the bar would close at 12:30, unfortunately however, I didn't hear this.

When a person buys a beer ticket, they expect to be able to redeem it later that evening, so I believe that if you are going to close the bar at some arbitrary hour it should be very well publicized, perhaps by putting up signs at the ticket sales counters and the bars. Also, I see no reason why it can not be a policy to refund the money of people who have not cashed in bar tickets after the bar has closed.

Do not edit!

Dear Editors:

I am writing this letter to protest, in the strongest possible terms, the editing of the article concerning the Queen's Debating Union which was submitted to the Journal Saturday last. The article, which originally titles "An Unusual Union", was witty and well written. "The Great Debate" as the article was named by the time it hit the pages of the Journal was illiterate drivel. Not only were key sentences missed out, spoiling the flow, but such items as the record of the debating union and the fact that meetings were held approximately fortnightly were entirely omitted!

The Journal is supposed to offer channels of communication within the Queen's community, and in doing so often asks for written contributions from students. But, when the Journal staff is as careless in editing as it was in editing "An Unusual Union", it has no right to hope either to communicate anything, of have students who have once seen their hours of work destroyed ever to submit any of their work again.

Permit me to add in closing that I did not have a hand in writing the original article, and so cannot be accused of personal bitterness. However I did read the article before it was submitted, and when I finally recognized it on the pages of the Journal, I couldn't help but be amazed at how thoughtless the editors of the Journal were in treating the submission of Jennifer Conkie and Graham Sellers with so little care

George Gregory
Pres., Queen's Debating Union

Health hazard

Dear Editors:

As a frequent user of the Queen's Women's change and shower rooms, I feel there is a potential health hazard to Queen's females. The Women's change room, hair drying area and shower floors and the shower curtains are not only a visual disgrace but a potential home for thriving cultures of bacteria that could result in Athletes foot, Planters warts and other infectious diseases.

For a university of such high standard should we not remedy this problem immediately? I would like to see a response as to what action will be taken on this matter by the Women's Change Room Supervisor and Janitorial Services in the next issue of the Journal.

Your Children

Eka Kristanto

Eka was born September 3, 1968, in Wiladeg, Indonesia, and attends 1st grade of primary school. He has one brother and one sister, aged 4 and 1 respectively. Both Eka's parents are farmers and make a scant $6.25 per month. Since basic requirements are $7.23, they are dependent on some assistance. The family manages to have 2 meals a day, consisting of rice mixed with dried cassava and vegetables. At present his curriculum at school includes arithmetic, writing, reading, Indonesian language, sports, singing, and religion.

The family depends on Plan to support and promote a better living condition, and to enable them to send the children to school.

May 1975
Dear foster parents,
We are all thonkful to you for your kindness to adopt me as a foster child, and for your generosity to send financial assistances that will always mean a lot to us

I am still in grade one of Elementary School, and I am already filled with ambition of becoming a doctor in the future. I like to play soccer with my friends.

There are only two uf us here in our family, my little brother Dwi Sutanto and my little sister Purwatiningsih, both of them are not yet sent to school.

Father and mother are both farmers, and presently, they are kept busy working in the field. Mother has a side job of selling vegetables.

I am afraid this is all for this time, and closing this letter, we all send our best wishes to you all there.

It is my neighbour, Mr. Suandi, who writes for me.

Your loving forster child,
Eka Kristanto

June 1975
Dear Foster Parents at the Alma Mater Society,
My family and I are all keeping very well now. I hope you are all the same.

It is the hoeing time where I llve. The farmers are hoeing the gardens on fields where the cassava and others grow. Before I leave for school I help my parents with their work in the Field.

Well, I will close for now. My Mother would like to give you her best regards, dear Foster Parents at the Alma Mater Society. Tarno, my neighbour, writes this letter for me.

Your loving son,
Eko Kristanto

July 1975
Dear foster parents at The Alma Mater Society,
Herewith, I want to tell you that all is well with my family here. I hope you are well too.

Besides, I also want to tell you that it's time of harvesting cassavas here in our village. It's the main food here in our village. Besides for our main food, we also can make it into fermented cassavas, crisply. "Podeng" (a kind of cake), etc.

I think what I want to tell about is all for now. My family and I send our best regards to you. This letter is written by one of our neighbours, Suharjo.

Love,
Eko Kristanto

August 1975
Dearest foster parents,
All is well with me and my family. I hope you and your family are fine too.

Since we are going to celebrate our Independence Day on August 17, 1975, so to celebrate it may kinds of attractions are being held. Such as sports competitions, volley-ball, badminton, soccer, etc. We also will have a cultural evening with some local plays, farcing, dancing, etc.

Dearest parents, I think this is all for now. Allow me to extend my family's best regard for all of you. This letter is written by our letter writer, Sukandi.

Faithfully yours,
Eko Kristanto.

Magaly Acre

Born in 1969 on July 30th, Magaly is from a family of three. She lives with her mother and sister, and uncle who is twelve. Her father abandoned the family shortly after Magaly's birth. The financial condition of the family is at present very poor, so poor in fact, that she is unable to attend school. At the present time, assistance is being directed towards improving the family's nutritional requirements.

The family lives in one room of multiple use which has poor ventilatinn and light. The room has an earthen floor, the walls are made of dry mud bricks and the room has no ceiling. The house has neither water supplies nor bathroom facilities. They have little furniture such as one complete bed.

Deor Foster Parents
I hope this present letter finds you well and in the presence of your family.

On May 27, we celebrate The Mother's Day, and for this reason I want to congratulate you wishing you happiness because you are my second mothers. On that date my mother always crys because her mother died in the same date, she spent the day sad.

In this opportunity I want to tell you that my mother is sick, she has bronchitis, she thought that she had T.B. and she separated her cup and dish, and she already slept alone. But thanks to God, she has not T.B. and she is quiet now, because the Plan's doctor told her that she must be tranquil. My uncle Eulogio cried watching her because her aspect was bad, my mother does not do the things that she used to do, she does not weave, she cannot wash clothes, she cannot read. She sells refreshments and some days she earn money and others not.

I have nothing else to tell you for this time. Receive greetings from my uncle Eulogio, my mother and all my family. I send you kisses and hugs.
Your foster child who loves you a lot,
Magaly Arce.

DEAR MOM
When pronouncing your name
it's a real happiness.
I am part of your body
you feed me
you send me light
your the only one in my life.

June 1975
Dear Foster Parents:

Through this letter I hope; you find yourself well in company of your family.

We spent good the Easter. My mother is getting better.

Here in Bolivia were religious acts like a procession and others. On the easter days, many people take a trip to Copacabana, it is a place where is the Copacabana's Virgin, She is miraculous. The people of this place called Her "Indian Virgin". Copacabana is near the bourding of Peru, there, we can see our Titicaca lake.

That is all for now. My family and I send you many kisses and hugs.

Your foster child,
Magaly

Dear Foster Parents:

This month we celebrate 150 year of Independence.

Love
Magaly.

Unknown to many members of the Alma Mater Society, we are foster parents of four children Eka Dristanto (from Vogyakarta), Carmen Escalante (from Ecuador), Anouald Edouard (from Haiti) and Magely Arce (from Bolivia). The children were officially adopted in May of 1975 as a direct result of efforts on behalf of individuals in Outer Council. The decision is a long term committment to last approximately ten years and was ratified at the General Meeting of the AMS held in March of 1975.

The original project was looked into by Marvin Bloos, recent graduate of Queen's University and a member of the Tricolor Society. Acting upon the request of Outer Council, Mr. Alan Heuhn, (past External Affairs Commissioner), was directed to take up the responsibility of registration and correspondence with the Foster Parents Plan of Canada. At present our contribution is $816.00 a year which helps supply the Foster children with a monthly cash grant, medical and dental care, education, distribution of household goods and diet supplements, as well as guidance and counselling from social workers.

PLAN works in several countries: Bali, Indonesia, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Greece, Haiti, Peru, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Vietnam and Vogyakarta, Indonesia. One of the most important aspects of PLAN is to develop a self-help program to improve both living conditions of individuals as well as communities.

In a statement prepared by Price and Waterhouse, PLAN's expenditure used from income received breakdown in the following way:

AID TO CHILDREN AND THEIR FAMILIES

Material aid and services
Monthly cash grants
Food and clothing, household goods, school supplies, etc.
Medical and dental care
Counselling and guidance by trained +PLAN social workers
Educational programs; literacy, hygiene, nutrition, family planning, vocational training, etc.
Community Development Projects	74.5
Field Officers Overseas	6.9
Subtotal	81.4 percent

ADMINISTRATION COSTS (CANADA, U.S.A., AUSTRALIA)

To process 'adoption'
To maintain communication with Foster Parents
To handle financial matters	13.1 percent
Public information and public education	5.5 percent
Sub total	18.6 percent

In any recent study and evaluation of 20th Century foreign policy, there are many external events that influence particular international situations. The question of foreign aid while looking at the transfer of money, goods, and services from one nation to another has become a controversial issue that draws mixed political opinions. Interestingly enough, the sceptics view foreign aid as a non-functional or negative policy that has binding and politically vested interests. Unfortunately many worthwhile organizations come under attack for holding less than humanitarian political beliefs or even for being accused by critics of spending excessive contributions on high administrative costs.

In a certain number of organizations I personally question the motives and objectives of these various groups and wonder about justification for their actions. In attempting to evaluate the merits of international organizations a complicated technique must be established with set-down criterion in order to gain a precise evaluation of purposes and goals.

This procedure I am strongly convinced is not necessary with regards to the Foster Parents Plan. In dealing with this organization on three separate occasions I have found this group to be openly aware of the needs that deprived children lack throughout the world. Although I do not speak from first hand experience, my opinion is based on this group's detailed account of funding and personable description that is contained in the sponsored child's portfolio. The plan of offering hope through developed programs for these young people is certainly a constructive and positive force that deserves praise. The areas include upgrading of living conditions through educational training and medical attention It is a combination of this unique plan and generous donors that allows Third World children a chance to lead a more balanced and fulfilling life.

It is programs such as Foster Parents Plan of Canada that provide conscientious Canadians a chance to express their thanks for having so much by sharing it with those who have so little. The monetary rewards for these children are great by supplying them with basic needs, and the gratitude in their simplistic letters seems to make it a more positive experience.

Dear Foster Father;
I am so glad taking this pen and paper and through these few lines send my love and greetings to you and your dear family, wishing at the same time it finds you all well.

I am so grateful for all you are doing for my child Foster Father, I would like to know how is your country and the place you live, where I live is nice there are a big hospital in the suburb named "Guayaquil" there are policeman for the suburb too and my daughter goes to the park to play with another girls, she likes to ride bicycle.

With no more to tell you I say good bye to you, with an strong hug, I say good bye.

Carmen Escalante

July 17, 1975
Dear and Esteemed Foster Father

Carmen Escalante

Carmen was born in Guayaquil, Ecuador, on October 19, 1967. Her father Marcos sells sea food while her mother makes paper bags. She has 2 brothers and 3 sisters ranging in age from 2 to 10. Total income per month is 48.00 for the family of eight, and consequently nutrition is poor both in quality and quantity. They live in a neighborhood which lacks both running water and a sewage system, with the result that they are dependent upon water delivered by trucks. At present, Carmen attends the Fay Alegria Private School. Carmen has a tan complexion, dark brown hair, dark brown eyes. She is obedient, affectionate and gets along well with her family. Her attitude toward school is good, in the future she would like to be a nurse or doctor.

I greet you hoping that you and Your family are in good health. We are just fine here, except my little brother, has been sick, but my Mom took him to the doctor.

I am doing well in school, my Mom oblige me to study in order to be someone useful in life. I like to play with my classmates. I shall close it, hoping that you and your family are in good health.. With a big Hug, your foster child.

Dear Foster Parents;
I greet you wishing that you are all in good health along with your families.

Over here we are in good health, receive regards from my father and mother, also my sibs. I'm fine.

I went to the inauguration of the Portete Bridge it was nice, the president was there and there was a show with artists. I continue ahead at school.

With nothing else I close with a big hug, Your foster child,

Carmen Escalante.

Dear Foster Father,
It is a pleasure for me to take the pen and paper to write these few lines to greet you with all my love, together with your family and hoping this letter will find you in good health, my family wishes you the same

Here we are just fine. My husband works as a carpenter and we have six children - the eldest one is Juan the Maritza, Marcos, Nelly: Lourdes and Carmen Escalante Orellana We live in the slum area, at the 36 St.

I hope you like this letter With nothing else to say, I am

Your foster child's mother
Clara Orellana

Anouald Edouard

Anouald was born on April 7, 1969, the fourth child of Arnold and Augusta. Arnold is a bricklayer who earns about $5.00 a month while Anonald's mother is a vendor. Their combined income is $20.00 per month, but this must support a family of eight. The family lives in Cite Jean Claude, a very poor district of Port-au-Prince in Haiti. At present, Anouald attends a make-shift school not far from his home. The family's health is poor and all family members suffer from malnutrition and intestinal parisites. Anouald is small and thin for his age. He hardly eats for in the morning he takes two rolls and one sweetened cup of water. In the evening he takes some ground corn with red beans.

Dear Foster Parents:
I was very happy and excited when I heard by my social worker that I had been chosen to be your foster child. My parents thank you very much. How are you? I hope my letter will meet you in good health. God bless you all. I go to school. Sometimes I don't go because your know why? Because my mother does not have anything to give me. I hope that you will help me go to school.

Letter written by a friend.

June 3, 1975
Dear Foster Parents,
I am wirting to you to thank you. My parents were very happy when we heard that I had been chosen to be your foster child. I am praying for you all. In my next letter I will tell you more about me.

Please receive my best regards.

Your foster child, Anouald

Dear Foster Parents:
This is the second time I am writing to you. How are you? At home nothing goes right because of too many problems. In my neighbourhood I can tell you that the families are beginning to make a real progress thanks to PLAN which gives us a way, the right way to do things and advises us on how to do them

I say hello from deep heart.

Truly yours
Anouald Edouard

Sha-na-na!

Dateline: Kingston Memorial Center, 4:30 pm. Monday, Oct. 27 - We've finished building the stage. The Ra, well into his first nervous breakdown, orders himself to sit down. I've had all the COOL I can handle from Sha-na-na's roadies. Their stage manager is perplexed about the uneven edge at the front of the stage. "It's either that", I say, "or dancers falling through the holes". "Oh well," he says, "you'll know better next time".

Ed, head of the roadies, is a brainless chunk of muscle who keeps glaring at me (I've been running around the stage like a headless chicken, shouting orders and generally creating mayhem) and I know what he'd like to do.

Great vibes backstage, rock fans.

8:00 pm. - A half hour to show time. Fred, Dave, I and the rest of the backstage crew are walking through the crowd in our Great Canadian Rock Tours T-shirts, a la, "I'm with the show man". The stage is in readiness, a huge juke box effect caused by the arch-shaped multi-coloured ten thousand dollar balloon backdrop. Twin light towers stand on either side of the stage looking down. On my stage.

Hundreds of high-schoolers mill about gaping in awe at the stage and being Kingston high-schoolers at their worst, (there is nothing that disturbs me as much as a 13 year old with a cigarette hanging out of her mouth) all wondering who this ass in the white hat is who keeps milling about like he owns the show. Easy enough It's me gaping in awe at the stage, cigarette hanging out of my mouth.

8:15 pm. - Shooter hasn't arrived. Deep south bubble gum music filtering down through the P.A. Dave (my boss and head of Great Canadian Rock Tours) comes around to my security position behind the frost fence protecting the stage and tells me "two minutes to show time". For the next quarter-hour I flash two-minute warning signs to the rest of the security people, joking, of course. The crowd is not amused.

8:30 pm. - The house lights dim and Shooter takes the stage "I Can Dance". Duncan White, lead singer sings and reassures himself. Colour, flash backstage people dig it, the crowd digs it - but I can't.

White screams, "Are you having a good time? We are." Creating the effect has ruined the effect for this humble labourer. You remember Duncan White, the asshole from the Greaseball Boogie Band, post users of Sha-na-na's discovery - 50's nostalgia? Give us music, not facade. The high schoolers dig the band and so do a lot of others, me included. White's voice is strong, the band tight and the sound good. Why don't they take off the funny suits?

Break. We move equipment. The Beach Boys play old favorites on tape. The crowd likes this. 50's nostalgia, the Sha-na-na creation, brought to you by some of the originals.

The crowd is keen, House lights dim. The crowd comes to life, pressing the frost fence. Security on its toes. Coloured spots swing over the audience. Sha-na-na's manager appears onstage, tails and English accent. Some blurb. "And now Sha-na-na."

The crowd roars. Beach Boys on tape. Sha-na-na charges onstage, Beach Boys on tape breaking into Sha-na-na's rendition of "Reckin' Robin" and the Sha-na-na rock 'n roll revue is underway. Colourful, alive, a vibrant hour-and-a-half medley of rock classics. Dancers front stage, always front stage. I sweat, waiting, waiting for the stage to collapse. The 50's nostalgia fantasy fails to move me, bu the music is, oh so good.

Alienation - I see a pattern. Stage work. Create the effect. Shooter, gross, facade, A.M., flash our way to the big time. Sha-na-na. Good music, good show, self-aware, laugh at the facade, use the facade, no facade. I begin to dig the show, getting lost in the Sha-na-na fantasy.

You should have been there and if you weren't I can't tell you much more about it. I guess a good reviewer carries a camera, a pad and a pencil in his head or hand, maintains his objectivity. My objectivity came about by total subjectivity - being a part of the show. Sha-na-na's Tour '75 wasn't nostalgia, it was a revue, a revue of rock 'n roll from its inception to date, bringing us through the years, parodying stars while presenting noteworthy renderings of their classics, through the Beatles, through the Stones, through Elton John and glitter and encoring with a Sha-na-na parody, celebration-affirmation "Let's go to the Hop". Sha-na-na. Proud and self-aware Rock 'n Roll forever.

Drama Dept.'s first major show

"Well, what a play. Everybody caught it, most of all Me," Czar Nicholas I remarked after the first night of Gogol's great comedy. The public Censor was outraged by the play and would have banned it but for the Czar's approval and subsequent instruction that all members of his court see it.

Gogol's self-defined task in the play was to laugh at everything that was bad in Russia in one go. He chose as his epigram for the play "if your mug is crooked, don't blame the mirror." What makes the work endure is the accuracy of portraiture of pin-minded bureaucracy, who run a town in the back of beyond entirely for their own advantage. They divert public grants into their personal accounts, use the police in an extortion racket and ignore the poverty, disease, and injustice they are paid to deal with. We meet a mayor who grabs everything he can without regard for its worth, a judge who locates his kennels in the courthouse, a postmaster who opens the mail to satisfy his curiosity, and a Director of Charities who administers the hospital on the philosophy that you should let nature take its course. This team of little men with pompous titles and uniforms fall victim to a completely insignificant card-sharper in one of theatre's finest comedies.

Gogol's are small people, very ordinary, with big put-on faces and clothes behind which they can hide. They use the trappings of rank and the accessories of fashion to appear bigger and more important than they are. In a small town, their insecurities and discontents are played out in petty jealousies, tyrannies, and incompetencies.

In a 9x12 room of false perspectives, designed by Queen's student Tony Abrams, a cast of thirty play out their pretensions in costumes and make-up designed by Rhonda and Peter Lancaster, also Queen's students.

Directed by visiting professor, Brian Meeson, The Government Inspector combines farce with a darker note of tragedy. It provides a fast-paced evening of laughter, an instant vision caught between a flash of lighting and a thunderclap.

The production opens on November 6th at 8:30 p.m. in Convocation Hall and continues November 7th, 8th and 13th, 14th, 15th. Tickets are $1 for students and $2 for non-students on Thursdays; $2 for students and $3 for non-students on Fridays and Saturdays, available from the Drama Desk, 547-6291, and at the door.

Hard times

On its second national tour, Ten Lost Years returns to Kingston, following its two sold-out performances last year. Re-experience the Dirty Thirties, the Depression Years in Canada, in this theatrical adaptation of Barry Broadfoot's best selling book.

Ten Lost Years is an exciting portrayal of the times, using song, dance, music, mime, and characterizations of hard times and happy memories.

Tickets are available from the Performing Art Office, Agnes Etherington and the Grand Theatre.

Horn's flute

Paul Horn is one of the worlds leading jazz musicians. As such he has been associated with some of the musical giants of our time: Duke Ellington, Nat King Cole, Sinatra, Miles, Davis even the Beatles.

Horn's musical appearance revolve around jazz festivals, symphony, and a few concerts. Some may recall his nationwide television show of a few years ago or be familiar with his dozen or so movie scores. These activities have made Paul a recipient of many musical awards - winner of jazz polls in Down Beat, Melronome and Playboy, plus two grammy awards for jazz suite.

Paul presently makes his home in Victoria, B.C., and teaches for that city's university music faculty. He has taught at seven universities throughout North America.

To see a fine jazz flutist be at Grant Hall on November 4th at 8.00 p.m. Tickets may be purchased at the John Orr Room, House of Sounds, Tara Foods, Silver Threads, Renaissance Music and Sam the Record Man.

Men's basketball a tough new team

Alps Boniwell

For the Men's varsity basketball team, Hallowe'en is just the start - the start of a new season which, if early optimism proves correct, could prove a good deal more successful than the 6-8 record from a year ago. This year's Golden Gaels will be an improved team - a tough team that will be competitive with everyone in the league. Certainly the playoffs are within easy reach.

Although they've lost seven players from last year, including captain, Stu Beck, and the leagues' 3rd leading scorer, John Keck, the spaces will be more than adequately filled by transfers, rookies, and returnees. One of the big advantages of this years' team will be its excellent depth at every position. This gives coaches Barry O'Connor and Bruce Black a much more flexible and adaptive game plan. Combine that with a very mobile and flexible offense and that adds up to a nice broad range of different things that this team can do both around the basket and on defense. Two key additions to the squad are Dave Lockhart and Derel Swinnard. Lockhart, at 6'7", is from Laurier, and although Swinnard isn't quite that tall, he can shoot.

Defense, as was last year will be heavily stressed and will be geared to forcing the opposition to move where and when it would prefer not to. It'll be an aggressive and active defense, though shut-outs are not to be expected - at first.

For players and fans alike, this year there has been two new rules added to the game. Both of them have to be applauded. First, a thirty-second shot clock will be implemented to speed up the action, and second, dunking is now legal. (Dunking is basketball jargon which means driving the ball straight downwards from above the hoop. It is done with much force.)

So that's a pre-season view of the basketball Golden Gaels. Gametime on Friday is 8:15 pm at Bartlett gym. It's good value for your student card, so come on out and enjoy.

Golden Grapplers begin new season

The Queen's Wrestling team has begun practicing for yet another OUAA season. The Golden Grapplers will be operating under a new coach this season and are looking to improve on last year's efforts.

Coach Mike Dwhytie will be counting heavily on returning wrestlers Al Stewart Del Demonte Alex Faseruk, Jim Holden and Dominic Parella in order to have a successful year.

So far a few promising rookies have turned out for the team, especially one Zemo Scafarelli.

Coach Dwhytie is still looking for prospects in all weight classes, but particularly at 109 lbs. and heavyweight. Practices are held Mon. - Thursday from 1:30 - 7:00 in the combatives room at the gym. Anyone interested in coming is most welcome.

Volleyball

Val Archibald

This weekend will see the first of two Queen's Women's Invitational Tournaments planned for this year. The tournament will be held Sat. Nov. 1st, from 11:00 am to 6:30 pm in the Ross and Bartlett gyms. Nine teams will be competing, including Queen's, McMaster, Sir Wilfred Laurier, Ryerson, Carleton, Ottawa U., and Guelph, as well as two Kingston club teams, Taka I and Taka II.

Queen's has a very strong team this year, and coach, Donna Gallagher, has high hopes of winning the national championship in March. This tournament will provide spectators with an excellent opportunity to view top-level volleyball, so come on out and cheer for the Queen's team!!

Waterpolo

On Nov. 7th, 8th and 9th at McMaster University the Invitational Tournament will be played for the Chalanger Cup. The first Round Robin for Queen's is with U. of Calgary, U. of Ottawa, and U. of Windsor. The first two will then go to the semi-finals. The third Round Robin in the OUAA will be played on Nov. 15th at U. of Toronto; the fourth on Nov. 29th at Queen's.

Cross-country to U.S.A.

Bob McCormack

This past weekend the Queen's cross-country team was invited down to the Paul Long Memorial Race, at Lehigh University in Pennsylvania. It was a long trip down with limited sleep the night before but all in all the team put in a fine showing and the trip was an enjoyable one.

The major problem facing coaches Eadie and Lund was to prevent the team from becoming overawed by the competition. The teams present included Villanova, Syracuse, Lehigh, Plattsburg, U of T, and the Pioneer Track Club from Philadelphia.

The day of the race was a wet one but the course was very fast and relatively simple. The overall winner was a runner named Teague from Plattsburg who negotiated the 10,000 m course in 31:12. The top Queen's runner was once again Adam Shoemaker finishing 13th in 32:07. Next was Clauss Rinne 21st with Murray Hale close behind coming in 29th. The other Queen's runners were Mike Deguide 34th, Bob McCormack 35th and Mark Fields 39th.

Queen's also had three runners in the open five mile race as a final selection for the 7th spot on the team and the top runner was Ian Gales who came 5th in the college division with Scott Ogilvie behind him in 10th and Max Barr, also among the top 15 college runners.

The overall team results showed Queen's in sixth place which was a little lower than they had hoped for but the team knows they will have it all together for the final championship meet this weekend.

The major disappointment of the day was finishing behind University of Toronto, the only other Canadian college invited. The Gaels are hopeful, however, that that loss will be averaged next week at the OUAA's in Guelph. From here the top team will represent Ontario at the CIAU's in Victoria B.C. and it appears to be a battle between Toronto, Western and Queen's for the trip.

The team representing Queen's looks at this point like Bob McCormack (capt.), Adam Shoemaker, Clauss Rinne, Murray Hale, Mike Deguida, Mark Fields and Ian Gales with Scott Ogilvie as a reserve runner and our new manager Max Barr. With some good performances and a touch of good luck, Queen's cross-country could well capture its first ever OUAA championship.

Bews News: fall sports

Paul Findlay

Last week saw the completion of the regular seasons for both Flag Football and Rugby. In Football, Civil-Math and Law '78 both had 3 and 1 records in Division 1, but Civil-Math was awarded 1st place by virtue of their victory over Law '78. In Division 2 again there was a 1st place tie, this time between Commerce '76 and Bus Grads both with 3 and 1 records. In regular season Commerce '76 won over the grads and thus were awarded 1st place. In Division 3, P.H.E. and Arts '77 both had 3-0-1 records with the tie coming, of course, when those teams played so a toss of a coin gave P.H.E. 1st place. In Division 4, Arts '76 last year's champions, held the only undefeated, untied record in the league, having 5 wins. Mechanical took 2nd with a 3-1-1 record.

The quarter-finals were played on Tuesday night. Arts '77 took Civil-Math, 17-7, P.H.E. shut out Law '78, 20-0, Comm '76 trounced Mechanical, 29-0 and Arts '76 outlasted Bus Grads 14-6. In that last game, Bus Grads had the ball on the Arts '76 3 yard line when time expired, so it was quite a close and exciting game.

In Rugby, Division 1 finished with P H.E. holding a 5 and 0 record; 2 nd place went to Arts '77 who were 3rd and Civil-Math at 2 and 3 were 4th. In Division 2, Commerce '76 and Education were tied at 5 and 1 but Commerce '76 had beaten Education in regular season and thus took 1st place. Law '77 were third with a 3 and 2 record and Commerce '79 finished 4th at 3 and 3.

In the quarter-finals on Monday, P H E. squeaked by a surprisingly strong Civil-Math 7-4 in double overtime Arts '77 took Arts '78, 8-0, Commerce '76 shutout Commerce '79, 14-0 and Education beat Law '77, 16-0 in a game that was closer than the score indicated.

Semi-finals in Rugby were held on Wednesday and Football semi-finals were last night, results were not known when this was written. Finals in both sports will start on Monday and will be best two-out-of-three series

Soccer is finished the regular season this week. Teams that have clinched playoff spots so far are Arts '78 (3-0-1), Meds (4-0) Science '79 (3-1), Arts '77 (3-0) and Mechanical (3-1). Playoffs are scheduled to start next week.

In Softball, Electrical (3-0), P H.E (5-0), Arts '77 (3-0) and Civil-Math (3-2) are leading their divisions.

In Volleyball, P H.E. (4-1), Arts '77 (4-0), Chemical (4-0) Artsci Grads (4-4) and Law '76 (4-0) appear to be the strong teams

Hockey is going strong and Broomball will start next week Horseshoes has reached the quarter-final stage and all the other tournament sports are progressing

This week, the up-to-date standings for the top three teams are first, PHE 23889, second, Comm '76 22082; and third, Arts '77 20981. Note that all three of these teams are in both the Flag Football and Rugby semi-finals. You can bet that there will be some competitive games to decide the championships

Panic and conjecture

Students who abide by "situational ethics" and who are claiming to take the "practical" approach to the non-student AMS President debate are panic-stricken. "What would happen to the AMS if John Gray were to cease being AMS President?"

The constitution states that the Vice-President (Operations) "shall be Acting President until a new election is held within a month," in "the absence or unavailability of the President, or in the event that the office be vacant."

But what else would happen? Would current Vice-Presidents Ian Nordheimer and John Wilson find a running-mate and seek re-election? Would they instead back out of AMS politics? Would there be any teams at all who would run for the Executive office? Would the four AMS Commissioners re-apply to the new Executive for their old positions?

Right now, nobody can answer these questions. "What would happen to the AMS if John Gray were to cease being AMS President" is merely conjecture.

Why student gov't

Several students have petitioned for a general meeting of the AMS to be held November 8. Perhaps anticipating an AMS Court decision Monday in opposition to a non-student AMS President, these people are trying to keep Gray as President by recommending that the AMS Board of Directors make Gray and member of the AMS retractive to September 1.

The Board has stayed out of AMS politics in the past, and probably would in this case as well. It should stay out -- what is the point of having a student government if the Board is going to make decisions such as these?

We can sympathize

John Gray is a changed man these days. The tension and insecurity of his current predicament have made him, in his own words, "tired, worn out", and "very protective."

We, too, are caught up in the extra-curricular mill, and can appreciate the difficulty Gray had maintaining a healthy academic standing. We sympathize with his situation.

Gray and his leadership abilities are not being questioned by the Journal. We are certainly not out for John Gray's neck.

As outlined in the editorial which called for his resignation (Queen's Journal, Oct. 21), we simply protest that the constitution has been misinterpreted by the student government.

Opinion: Keep Gray

Terry Collins

The Journal camp seems to be split down the middle on John Gray's current situation. This writer is adopting the practical point of view that we should do whatever possible to keep John Gray on as AMS President. Having consulted with John Wilson and Ian Nordheimer, this year's V P.'s, it appears that if a new Executive election is called, presuming a court decision that Gray cannot hold office, the opportunity for a graceful exit would be welcomed by them both. Witson is a fourth year Economics student, Nordheimer is in his final year of Law. It is most probable that these two would bow out if asked to run again. As for the Commissioners, there is strong feeling that they too would decide to pass along their responsibilities if someone else applied to a new Executive for their posts.

One of the chronic problems with the AMS is the brevity of the Executive's term of office. Starting a new team now to take over until February would be hopelessly fruitless and senseless.

For the sake of the Constitution, a General Meeting of the Society has been called for Sat., Nov. 8, at 2 p.m. in Wallace Hall. At that time a motion to make John Gray a member of the AMS retroactively (with the help of the AMS Board of Directors) will be introduced. Making Gray a member as of September 1 of this year will allow the Constitution to go unscathed.

At the same AMS General Meeting, the students have the option of removing from the books the antiquated rule that requires the AMS President to be a student. How many courses a student politician can cope with should be up to the individual, not the constitution.

letters

Dear Editors:

This is not the John Gray affair.

The issue is whether the AMS President can be a non-student-whether it is John Gray, Ron Watts, or Alfred E. Newman is immaterial. John Gray is, unfortunately, the central character- but nothing more. There is no question of his competence or effectiveness as President of the AMS. Only his eligibility is in issue- and this eligibility would be in issue whenever a non-student assumed the role of AMS President under the constitution as currently written.

Let's cut out the emotional ranting over the "Leadcrless AMS". Remember, the students elected Outer Council to represent them ACCORDING TO THE CONSTITUTION which calls for student administration. It's one thing to make amendments to the governing rules- it's quite another to unilaterally change them in the middle of the game. If the students want a full time President who is not necessarily a student, it is the duty of Outer Council to amend the constitution after due deliberation, due process and due approval of the constituent students. Outer Council has no authority to foist a non-students President on us. But it's the law of the AMS now. And if the people who make the laws flaunt them and ignore them, it is the duty of the electors to call them to account.

John Gray is not the victim of a witch hunt or a purge. Outer Council is being challenged as having overstepped its authority. Call this dispute the "Constitutional Caper" or the "Outer Council Shuffle", anything but the "John Gray Affair".

Liquor rules and events do not mix

Leslie Gaukrodger

When students learned of the amendments to the Liquor Licence Act of Ontario, their immedite reaction was gravely to predict a drastic reduction in Queen's social life. Headlines like "LLBO laws threaten campus dances" reflected the worries of many people. It was feared that the new maximum capacity limitations, combined with a tax levied by the University on bar profits would pose insurmountable difficulties for campus organizers. What affect have these restrictions had on student social life on campus?

Mark Hayes, who organized the football pubs at West Campus this fall expressed strong feelings of discontent with the system. "We sold more than 2,250 pints of beer, the room was full and we used as much volunteer labour as possible. In spite of this we had to charge admission at the second pub in order to break even."

In Hayes' opinion, the problem originates with the delegation of the control of liquor sales to Saga Foods. Students are forced to use Saga's cashiers, pay a manager, and to purchase all supplies from the catering service. After subtracting these costs, plus the price of the beer from the total cash inflow, the University's 50 percent tax is levied. With what remains the organizers must cover the cost of room rental, janitors, advertising and constables.

As a result of these difficulties, he predicted a movement towards holding activities off campus. "Apathy is no longer the problem", he explained. "We have to people who are interested in running the events. But what is the point in doing the work when there is no way to hold a really profitable event, especially when the chances of getting lathered are so great!"

Hayes, Social Convenor of Commerce '77, stated that the year societies are the hardest hit by the changes. Plans for events prior to Christmas are being carried through, although no on-campus events are being planned for the second semester by the Commerce '77.

Many of the same problems were encountered by the organizers of Susie-Q-Week. Since bar profits can no longer be expected to cover all the expenses, a few of the big events have a slightly higher price tag than in previous years.

The biggest obstacle confronting this committee, were the restrictions limiting the number of people permitted to attend events where liquor is sold. Consequently, only 200 tickets will be available for the Semi-Formal. To compensate for these limitations, more events than usual have been planned to accomodate everyone.

The Mackintosh-Corry Street Dance, an original and promising addition to the week will have a bar located in a fourth floor lounge, the only room in the building that is licenced for liquor sales.

Campus Activities Commissioner Peter Meech said that the only place where students can set up their own bar, reaping all the profits, is Jock Harty arena. Problems arise, however, because it takes 60 days to acquire the necessary special occasion permit. As well, the event is often of a considerably large scale than normal and consequently may not be successful, as organizers could be hard pressed to cover their costs.

Unlike many of the other events on campus, the Science Formal was hardly affected by the newly enforced regulations. Doug Draper, the head of this year's committee predicted, however, that Science '77 will encounter problems which could threaten the present scale and format unless changes are made in the regulations.

He pointed out that the liquor licence was extended for this one evening to allow two bars, one in the Red Room and one downstaris in Grant Hall. Although the committee presented the Kingston Fire Department with proposed designs for building alternate exits out of the Red Room windows, these were not required in order to obtain fire permits.

Draper said hopefully that this event would help prove that the alternate locations for serving liquor could be used safely and successfully. "As far as we know we are not doing anything illegally", he stated, then added, "maybe we only need one event to show that it can work and that it is not hurting anyone."

The committee did find, however, that their efforts to raise money at other events prior to the formal were considerably restricted. Plans for a dance in Grant Hall in September were cancelled because it was feared that the capacity restrictions and the tax would have reduced their profits to a level insufficient to justify the effort.

Weekly dances in Grant Hall, and overcrowded Clark Hall smokers are now a thing of the past. Organizers are becoming disillusioned with the 50 percent tax which renders futile all attempts to hold a profitable event, even when much of the labour is volunteer.

Many see the high percentage tax as self-defeating. "Instead of skimming the cream off the top of the milk", according to Mark Hayes, "they are taking the whole bottle." As a result Hayes said campus activity has significantly decreased. If this trend continues, the University may never be able to collect the money that they need.

It remains to be seen what further results will come out of the liquor event situation on campus.

If you travel with the Queen's University Travel Club, you're covered by more insurance than if you would be using any other means of transportation.

Third year Arts student Murray O'Shea, President of the club, explained that despite the rumours to the contrary, the Travel Club is, "above standard" in insurance coverage. The coverage is in the amount of five million dollars per person per bus. What this means, O'Shea explained, is that if one of the Club's buses is in an accident and only one person files a claim he has access to the total five million. Should ten people file, each one has access to one-tenth of the five million dollars. The Ontario average, according to O'Shea, is between three and four million

The Club is self-sufficient. It is supported "entirely by those who use it", and receives no AMS funding. Money comes from two sources, the tickets and the annual membership fee of $1.00. From the price of a ticket of a ticket the club retains fifty cents for the purpose of advertising, paying ticket sellers and so on. O'Shea adds that it "is in the constitution of the Club that any excess profits will go to Project Green. We run only to break even".

Buses are rented on a per seat basis from a Toronto firm. The idea is that, for example, if you pay $11.50 for a ticket to Toronto the company gets $11.00 of that. Therefore if the bus runs with forty people in it the company makes $440, more than the usual amount. On the other hand, should the bus run with only twenty-five, says O'Shea, "they make less than they ordinarily would on a straight rental". Depending on the time the buses are running, "one-half to three-quarters full".

"All new people this year", are in charge of the operation. O'Shea admits that there were problems last year but all those, "are behind us now". There has been a travel club at Queen's for the last four years to "give people a chance to travel cheaper than they ordinarily would Admittedly it's more expensive than a car but it's cheaper than the train or Voyageur bus."

The buses that ran last weekend are the first of a bi-monthly service to Ottawa and Toronto. Buses will go to Montreal on the weekends where demand is great enough. Rates are $8.00 round trip to Ottawa and $11.50 to Toronto. One way is $5.00 and $6.00 respectively.

The club is not yet recognized as official by the Outer Council and is running on the special permission of John Gray, AMS President and John Wilson, AMS Vice-President (University Affairs). O'Shea hopes to gain recognition for the Club's constitution at the next Outer Council meeting.

According to O'Shea the club is running relatively complaint-free. For example, the Toronto Football weekend went "perfectly", and on Thanksgiving there was trouble with, "only two out of sixteen buses, for which inconvenience the passengers were compensated". One bus got tied up behind an accident outside of Pickering and consequently arrived in Toronto an hour and a half late The travellers each got a dollar refund and the driver was instructed to make stops all down Yonge St. from the 401 to Bloor St. and atong Bloor. This has been the Club's, "major incident to date".

Not only does the club run to Toronto and Ottawa but they are definitely planning a bus service to the Quebec Winter Carnival, and possibly something to Florida". While they don't like to "horn in on the Ski Club, we'll do trips to someplace like Mont St. Anne if there's enough interest".

O'Shea stresses the fact that the club is open to suggestions. If you've got an idea and some people to go along with it talk to the Travel Club They'll, "investigate it and if it's feasible will publicize it and get a bus".

Gray out but door still open

Jude Byrne, Nick Gray, Sarah Yarnell

The AMS Court convened last night to decide on the case of the Aesculapian Society versus the AMS Outer Council. The issue arose from Outer Council's decision of October 9 to reaffirm John Gray as AMS president despite his non-student status. At that time David Carter, recently resigned AMS speaker, ruled Council's decision unconstitutional. However, he was over-ruled by Outer Council.

The Court considered both the Corporate By-laws and the AMS Constitution and decided that because he is no longer a student, Gray cannot hold the position of AMS president at this time. The Court declared the office of AMS President to be vacant.

In order to ensure that no further problems arise, the Court strongly recommended that an election be held after changes, pertaining only to this particular case, are made to the constitution. These changes would have to be the waiver of by-law 8, section 3a, that "The President and Vice President of the AMS running as a team shall be elected from the student body at large "

This would allow students to elect John Gray to the position of president as a member of the AMS although he is not a student This election would have to be held with utmost expediency at the discretion of Outer Council.

These changes would have to occur on three levels: first at the level of Outer Council which could draft a resolution to suspend the relevant sections of the constitution; then be passed at the November 8 AMS General Meeting, and then be forwarded to the Board of Directors, and be finalized by a campus-wide election.

SVB News

Spare Time? Help Others. Put these four words together and come to see us at the Student Volunteer Bureau to find out exactly what you can do There are a lot of programmes still in need of volunteers, so you can fit the job to your timetable.

Three years ago a number of Queen's students got together with people from North Kingston Parish and arranged a 'Hot Lunch Programme' for school children. Why? They were concerned that a number of kids did not receive adequate lunches...so in response to this observed need the programme began. It is still running but needs your assistance to help prepare the meal, to supervise the children, to tidy up. Have you an hour to spare around noon? Come up to the SVB Office, 2nd floor in the Grey House. We are there between 12:30 and 4:30 p.m weekdays. We need your help.

Conquerors of Yale

Terry Collins

"Remember Captain Curtis and the Conquerers of Yale
So boys go in and win..."

So go two lost lines from "Oil Thigh na Banrighinn" as sung during the first half of this century. The lines refer to the occasion of Queen's victory over Yale in a hockey match for the Intercollegiate Championship held in Buffalo N.Y. The team was led by Guy Curtis, a man who became a legend for his athletics at Queen's around the 1900's. He was outstanding as point man for the hockey team and was captain of the football team at the same time.

Born in Delta, Ont., near Brockville, Captain Curtis, as he was known, enrolled in a B.A. course here in 1886. He took classes on and off until 1893 but did not graduate. He was exceptionally gifted as an athlete and it is presumed that he became engrossed in sport at the expense of his studies. Captain Curtis played from 1890 to 1895 and it was said that as long as he was there, Queen's won Championships. In 1895, Queen's challenged for the Stanley Cup but lost 5-1 to Montreal. The rugby team won the Dominion Championship in 1893. Both times Guy Curtis led the teams. Despite numerous offers from other teams, Curtis would play for no one but Queen's even after his departure.

Curtis was best known for his football prowess and for the "discovery" of Alfie Pierce in the 1890's. Meeting on a street in Kingston, Curtis instructed Alfie, a young black, to report the next day for chores as a waterboy. Alfie never left Queen's. He stayed on for sixty years as mascot-cheerleader of Queen's teams up to the time of his death in 1951. For generations of Queen's students Alfie was a beloved figure on campus. The Queen's Bands still pay homage to Alfie in their advertising ("Alfie Sez:"). Living in the old Jock Hardy Arena during the winter and in the old Richardson Stadium in the summer, he made it a habit of knowing most people on campus and the sport they played.

At a game between Queen's and U of T in 1928 Alfie spotted Curtis sitting in the stands, only the third time Curtis was known to have revisited Queen's in the twenty five years after his departure. Curtis, a friendly man, but for some reason reluctant to return, had been trying to hide his face in o newspoper during the game. Alfie found out about this and directed the football players to corry Curtis around the field on their shoulders. The crowd cheered wildly at the news that Captoin Curtis was back. Queen's won their game against the Blues.

In 1930 Curtis died and was buried in his home town of Delta. Alfie and the principal represented Queen's officially at the ceremony. Later a collection was taken up at Queen's to erect o fitting tombstone for the greatest athlete Queen's has ever had.

If, sometimes, this note of appreciation is omitted, it is because we haven't learned how to count this bloody italic script.

TV at Mac-Corry

Mike Macmillan

Starting this Thursday, November 6th, the Campus Activities Commission will be sponsoring a series of noon-hour television programmes in the student lounge area in MacIntosh-Corry Hall. The programmes, which are being supplied by Queen's Television, are varied in content, some popular, and some "educational". They will start at 12:30 every Thursday. They are suitable for light viewing, the object being to provide an easy going atmosphere in which to relax, an alternative to sitting around and simply vegetating.

The programme this Thursday is Chariots of the Gods, the well-known epic by Eric Von Daniken. Other planned noon-hours for this term are: Nov. 13th-She Stoops to Conquer, Nov. 20th-Sara T.-Portrait of an Alcoholic (starring Linda Blair, of Exorcist fame), Nov. 27th-Say Goodbye and Roland Michener, the Man and the Office.

This noon-hour series is similar to ones at many Ontario Universities, such as York, where they have been very popular. It is hoped that Queen's students will also enjoy some intellectual stimulation at lunch-time—"food for thought", you might say.

Mac-Corry Lounge – Thursdays at 12:30.

Meds' talks

Richard W. Pidutte

The Aesculapian Society will be presenting a bi-weekly student lecture series entitled "Health Science Rounds".

The lecture will be concerned with common health problems including cancer, heart disease, and motor vehicle accidents. They are intended to be of interest to the general public and are open to all.

The objectives of the series are to educate the public about general health care and to emphasize the team approach in medicine Increasing public awareness about common health hazards is seen to be an important form of preventive medicine. With this in mind the presentations are designed to cover the causes and where possible the precautions related to each problem.

Students from the faculties of Medicine and Nursing, and the School of Rehabilitation Therapy will present the role of their profession in the team approach to the treatment and care of the patient in each case.

The lectures will be held every second Thursday, starting November 6, in Etherington auditorium at K.G.H.

Smoking ban

OTTAWA (CUP) — Responding to complaints by faculty members and health services administrators, the president of Carleton University has established a committee to regulate smoking on the Ottawa campus.

President Michael Oliver said the committee is designed to make recommendations for policy regarding smoking on campus. They will hold public meetings and report to the president by December 1, 1975.

Student member Dan Perley said the committee would firstly consider prohibiting smoking in the eating areas of the campus, and also consider the division of classrooms into smoking and non-smoking sections.

Perley said that university cleaning costs would be greatly reduced if university staff did not have to sweep cigarette butts and empty ash trays.

"It's not fair that part of my student fees go to cleaning up the smoker's mess," he said.

According to Perley, the committee, though it has a non-smoking majority, will be responsible to the entire university in making arbitrary decisions on smoking issues.

The committee consists of a college dean, a member of the faculty, a member of the support staff, a member of the student association and two students.

Cable-tv show

"Interface: Queen's Report", a weekly television show sponsored by the community liaison portion of the AMS External Affairs Commission will be aired tonight at 7pm on Channel 13 Cable. According to Paul Bennett, AMS community liaison coordinator, the show may feature such things as interviews with campus groups, community groups and visiting professors. Bennett hopes the program will "provoke controversy and dialogue and provide a service for the Kingston community." The program will be geared at both the Queen's community and Kingston.

Moderators on the program will be four Queen's students: Susan Clark, Jan Johnson, Paul Konyk and Cam Dow

Tonight's program will feature Queen's news and interviews with the people involved with the "Community Forum Canada" program.

If anyone has any suggestions or criticism of the programs, they are urged to call Paul Bennett at 549-4577.

Watch-pets

OTTAWA (CUP) An Ottawa pet store has all the money making shark schemes beaten. They will sell you your own shark.

It's more than a conversation starter," a radio advertisement claims. "It's a unique addition to your own aquarium."

"A shark of your own," the advertisement proclaims, will enable you to study first hand one of evolutions greatest achievements.

The advertisement did not say who sold the food for the new addition, or how big it would grow.

Parrot discusses education issues

Ross Bartlett

The new minister of Colleges and Universities in Ontario's Tory government, Dr. Harry Parrot, spoke to a group of about thirty people, mostly members of the youth wing of the Progressive Conservative Party, on Saturday, Nov. 1. The party members were from Western, Guelph, Carleton, Ryerson, Wilfred, Laurier and other universities

In a friendly and free-wheeling discussion of almost two and a half hours, the Minister touched on numerous topics concerning post-secondary education in Ontario. The group was kinder to Parrot than a truly open meeting would have been, but this helped him to relax and he appeared genuinely interested in the comments and questions of his audience.

Part of the questioning centred around Parrot himself, during which he revealed himself as a very concerned and sincere person, optimistic about the possibilities for his new position in what is obviously a tight situation.

He emphasized that he must see things on a wide scale while the individual student only sees the situation at his own university and Parrot sees his job at least partially as attempting to reconcile the two points of view. His personal philosophy on education includes a bias towards job-oriented learning, but he admits he's "got to search that one out." He himself is an orthodontist.

The first question concerned the real problem of the Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP), in particular the matter of parental contribution to the student's education. The point was contested that although eighteen year olds are allowed to drink, vote, sign contracts - in other words act as full adults - under the present OSAP set-up the age of independence is set at twenty-four, two years of full-time work or fourth year of university. Why must a person's parents be involved if that person considers himself independent?

Parrot explained that changes were made in the system because of a well known case wherein a wealthy person's dependent was receiving aid. He added that, "often we make bad rules to control certain people", and as a result other people get caught in them. This matter precipitated a change in the system five or six years ago because, "public opinion was that people who did not deserve help were receiving it", and for this reason there was great interest in OSAP.

Parrot went on to request that the various member P.C. organizations make representation to the provincial government on their positions He gave personal reasons for and showed a deep interest in having the present system changed. The public position of his ministry is that the committee is responsible for advising on OSAP and their suggestions will be retained and seriously considered.

Craig Brown, Queen's Chief Delegate to the Ontario Federation of Students, asked if the Minister would be prepared to push firmly for any extra funds the committee might think are necessary. Parrot replied that his ministry is third from the top in funding, superceded only by those of Health and Education. Parrot assured his listeners that he will "fight for as much money as I can get," while acknowledging that his hands are fairly firmly tied because of the government's attempts to curb spending.

John Gray, President of the AMS, queried the minister concerning the Mackintosh-Corry complex for which Queen's had a verbal agreement for financial support from the province to the tune of 1.7 million dollars. After the capital moritorium came in the money has never shown up and there has been no statement from the Province as to when it might arrive Gray wished to know how the government expects to regain its credibility with the insititutions around the province in light of these and other similar actions.

In reply the Minister made an analogy to the situation where one year of education costs $2500 (he stressed that the figures were totally arbitrary). The next year, however, costs have risen to $3200. At this point his son comes to him to request the necessary money, but due to commitments to the other members of the family, he can only give his son $3000. Now, says Parrot, the son would claim that he's been cut back $200, while his father "would say that the funding has increased by 20 percent, which when extrapolated to 570 million and 600 million (the difference between what the Universities have requested this year and what the Province is prepared to pay.)The situation is really no different" Again he cited the major problem as being one of perspective on the issue

Parrot would rather expand class sizes than eliminate the chance of university education for all (an important Tory position).

Brown stressed that the universities are now in real trouble. He made the point that the most important part of a student's education is "the number of times he interacts with a professor." Obviously reducing the number of chances for this by increasing the student teacher ratio will cause the quality of education to go down.

Queen's itself is headed for a massive deficit this year, added Gray. Parrot answered that he doubted that class size really affected the quality of education and questioned Gray's figures. The issue was never resolved, each contender sticking resolutely to his own figures.

The later questions centred around general government policy One matter that came under question was the possibility of a rent review board, or boards, might affect students. Due to his oath of office, Parrot could not fully discuss the matter but he did note that there should be a bill tabled in the Legislature by Nov. 5 and that "you can expect rent review boards".

The meeting was informative, although superficial. With a sympathetic audience Parrot came across as an excellent man for his job. It is discouraging that the Davis government seems to go through ministers in this portfolio at an alarmingly quick rate and Parrot may not even get a chance to get settled in before the fortunes of politics move him out again.

Fanatics fantasize

Rob Buller

Not many students would know the first name of the Team Manager of the Ferrari Formula One Team. Fewer yet would know his professional training or the type of passenger car he drives.

But this type of information is common place to a small but growing group of Queen's students who have recently formed a new club: The Queen's Racing Fanatics Association (or QRFA to those who know). The club's aims are simple: to share a common interest in motorsport and to encourage racing fans.

Now there is a difference between a run-of-the-mill fan and a true fanatic. A quantum difference. A fan might know who was World Champion last year or who won the Canadian Grand Prix in 1972. A Fanatic knows how much the World Champion was paid by his sponsor and how team politics affected the results of at least two races that year. And who the Driver in question is dating at present and how racing changes THEIR life. (That's correct madam, they don't before a race!)

True, this sort of trivia won't change the world much but it can be very helpful in understanding a complex, sophisticated professional sport such as racing. And racing is one of those sports that seems to generate a devotion in fans; either it leaves one cold or it becomes a passion.

To this group it has become just that. They formed last year when chance brought three of them together in Leonard Hall. Paul is studying Psych, but works part-time as a track announcer at Mosport. Mark is the trivia king and enjoys design and mechanicals; Barb is the photographer; Rob has raced Formula Fords and also writes on motorsport; Rich likes posters; Jim builds the most fantastic model racing cars, and there's Sarah who likes to come to races now and then. All are students, some even pass.

Besides attending races as often as they can this group has become a set of dedicated armchair drivers (as opposed to quarterbacks) who continue to enjoy the sport long after the season has ended. They organize slide shows and film nights getting films free from sponsors and race organizers. And they will talk racing for hours on end.

But, because most of them are frustrated drivers too, they set up a driving competition among themselves last summer. Not many of them could afford a $100,000 Ferrari, but a rented Go-Cart was well within the budget. And so, the QRFA Championship was started at Shannonville Speedway, and it was continued at Goodwood. Not exactly the caliber of Mosport or Watkins Glen, but at ten minutes for $3.00 who could complain?

The QRFA is always looking for others that share a strong interest in racing of any kind. If you are a fan and would like to join just call Paul or Jim at 544-9749

Oh yes, the Ferrari Team Manager. He is Luca Montezemola; he is 26, a lawyer, and he drives a Lancia Beta.

Perhaps one day she will squeal past Paul in the Corner 5 announce booth at Mosport. In this pic, Barb, a member of the Queen's Racing Fanatics Association, is playing race car driver on a rented Go-Cart at the nearby Shannonville track.

THANK GOD IT'S FRIDAY ?

Well, we used to, anyway!

Grad House has traditionally provided a focus for many graduate student social activities—not just T.G.I.F.s, but for Welcoming Day, Society and club meetings, departmental parties, colloquia, hockey-watching and even wedding receptions.

Grad House provided a comfortable atmosphere where grads in all disciplines met with each other and other members of the university community.

This Year There Is No Grad House

WHY NOT?

In 1970 the Graduate Student Society (G.S.S.) leased a university-owned house at 157 King St. E. after increasing graduate enrolment over-extended the limited space and facilities of the Stuart St. Grad House. The lease on King St. was due to expire in August, 1975, and in anticipation of this the G.S.S. met with the Administration late in 1974 to discuss alternative arrangements. At that time we were given verbal assurances that a more conveniently-located house would be made available when the King St. lease expired.

As the months changed, however, so did the Administration's promises (only verbal, remember). The locations they proposed in 1974 were withdrawn from consideration in 1975, and the only explanation offered was that of "unsuitability". Unsuitable to whom?--the graduate students had absolutely no say in the matter! By late spring, the G.S.S. recognized that without an honest effort by the Administration there was no hope of obtaining a new house for the 1975-1976 session.

Under these circumstances we felt that we could find, with the aid of the Administration, a location on campus where at least T.G.I.F.s could be held for this session. However, we were told that of all the licenced areas on this campus not one would be available on a regular basis. Despite a policy that licenced events have priority in booking the licenced locations, despite the fact that the locations we tried to reserve had not been booked for licenced events, despite a number of letters from students and faculty, and despite supportive resolutions from various committees, all we have really seen is months of buck-passing, stalling and frustration. This year the administration has no room for graduate students.

Women march for equal rights

OTTAWA (CUP)--About 150 demonstrators marched on Parliament Hill to throw the IKNTERNATION Woman's Year slogan back on the doorstep of the federal government.

"It hasn't been done...WHY NOT?" demanded speeches, chants, pamphlets and picket during the two hour demonstration October 25.

Equal pay for work of equal value; equal job opportunities, access to free, quality childcare for all; removal of abortion from the criminal code; lesbian rights, equal rights in marriage and property law; and safe effective birth control for all were major issues protesters believed the government had ignored while favouring an elaborate publicity campaign to celebrate IWY.

"No serious attempt has been made this year to implement legislation with teeth that would put an end to discrimination and remove our secondary status," Women and the Law Society representative Shirley Greenberg told demonstrators.

She cited equality in decision-making power, equality in division of labour in marriage and the equality in the sharing of income and property as three main areas requiring change. Others included eliminating the female sexist image in law and recognizing a housewife's individual right to pension, insurance and retraining.

Women and the Law Society speaker Chris Barnes did not believe wage disparity was about to change, heralding an even wider gap between wages and job opportunities as a result of the federal governments wage and price guidelines.

Telegrams of support from across the country included a message from Ed Broadbent leader of the federal NDP party who pledged his alliance with the women of Canada "in protesting the government's inaction to provide effective legislation to deal with the high degree of discrimination against women which still exists in our country."

A large contingent from Gays of Ottawa participated in the demonstration demanding equal custody rights for lesbian mothers and inclusion of the term "sexual orientation" in the Ontario Human Rights Code and the Canadian Human Rights Code and the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Although the Gay Movement and the Women's movement have experienced a traditional tension, Marie Robertson cited "sexism", as the common enemy and encouraged the groups to support each other in order to bring about its downfall.

"Lesbians are oppressed as women and as gays", said Robertson, noting the ever present fear of losing children, jobs, or homes because of choosing a homosexual lifestyle.

Unproductive nation when women on strike

REYKJAVIK (CUP)--While Canadians were protesting International Women's Year October 25 in Ottawa by marching in front of the Canadian Parliament Buildings, the women of Iceland went on strike, leaving their worried menfolk wondering how to run the country without them..

Housewives, teacher, clerks, industrial workers and even nursemaids took the day off, bringing Iceland to a virtual standstill.

The strike, in support of International Women's Year, had the backing of most of Iceland's women's groups.

The women, - there are about 60,000 of them over the age 19 on the island of 215,000 people - staged their token work stoppage "to show how indispensable we are to our country's economy and national life".

Gray affair simmers

Dear Editor:
I think that it is time to tell your readers what actually happened at the AMS meeting when John Gray was reaffirmed as the president of the Alma Mater Society. When John Gray resigned as a student, his eligibility for president of the AMS was brought into question. The Speaker was called on to make a ruling and asked for advice ft then came to light that the relevant section read as follows: "All intramural students of Queen's University shall be ordinary members of the Society, provided they pay the non-academic fee as prescribed by By-Law." (Article II, Section 2(c)). It was then brought up that there was a precedent to follow in this matter, that being that two members of the Board of Directors of AMS Inc., (which is the full name of the AMS) were not students but were considered members of the AMS because they paid their non-academic activity fee The same exception therefore could apply to John Gray. The Speaker ruled that the precedent did not apply and that the president of the AMS had to be a student. This was challenged (and put down) because the phrase says who shall be ordinary members but does not say who shall not be. It was also felt that the reason for this section was to protect the AMS from outside people who would not have the best interests of the Society in mind. For the latter reason primarily, John Gray was re-affirmed as the president of the AMS. This was a case where the spirit of the constitution rather than the letter of the constitution was upheld.

Gerry Lewarne

Dear Editors:
From the tenor of recent letters to the editors, f feel called upon to put forward some arguments in favour of the Aesculapian Society's actions. The issue is whether or not the President of the AMS can remain a member of the AMS (and therefore eligible to be President) when he is not a student. The Outer Council has adopted one interpretation, many other students another. It is necessary to have the Constitution, as it stands, interpreted.

The Aesculapian Society has done well to bring this grievance against Outer Council for the actions it took on Oct. 9, 1975.

Firstly, many members of Outer Council failed in their responsibility to make decisions based on the best available information. The Speaker explained the Constitution, the motions involved, the meanings of the motions and their implications at least twice. Even so, questions continued long after the decision had been taken Those counsellors who failed to understand what was going on, were negligent and Outer Council should be taken to task for this failure.

Secondly, the AMS Executive gave the least possible notice of the non-student status of the President. More advance information, planning and thought into the procedures would have enabled Outer Council to act more quickly and in greater surity. Asking Outer Council to make a major policy decision on such short notice is, in my mind, insulting.

Thirdly, the AMS Constitution governs the actions of the AMS There should be perfect clarity on the interpretation of its clauses That there is so much debate on the interpretation of the Constitution on this issue is reason enough to seek to have it clarified

The frequently made comparisons to other full-time student government presidents is, in my mind, analagous to saying that since there are so many military dictatorships in the world, Canada should have one also. The AMS is not built that way; until we reorganize it to allow for a full-time president (if such is desired), we must address ourselves to the problem of whether or not a non-student can be president.

Whether or not the AMS will be thrown into chaos and confusion by a forced resignation is something we may have to face in the future. To use that as an argument for not doing anything is foolish and short-sighted. We should not accept the principle of altering the AMS to fit the individuals because of expedience; but of living by the AMS Constitution.

I should like to add, however, that I think that John Gray's decision to devote himself entirely to the AMS was noble in all the best senses and a fine example to 10,000 apathetic "students."

Christopher J. Porter

Dear Editors:
This letter is directed at the controversy surrounding the "Gray Affair". There is now going to be an AMS trial concerning Mr. Gray's eligibility, which, if it cannot be substantiated, will call for a new election within 30 days, and result in numerous legal hassles. The trial, as such, f feel is unjust. Granted, John Gray should be placed on trial, not AMS tribunal, but a trial of his peers,- this being a student referendum concerning his position. This could be arranged, I'm sure, sometime before Christmas. The results of the referendum should then initiate amendments in the AMS constitution regarding this particular situation.

The referendum, I feel is the best way of settling the decision, they being the students, the right to voice their opinion in a matter which is going to have repercussions stretching into at least the upcoming year.

Let's go to it- United Way

Dear Editors:
During the summer a Budget and Admissions Committee composed of active business and professional representatives of Kingston selected 25 local agencies to be aided by the United Way. The staffing of these agencies comes from the volunteer work of 800 Kingstonians for whom there is no compensation. Transportation and meals are not provided by the United Way. Professionally qualified staff such as nurses and social workers accompany the volunteers which means there are salaries to be paid. Government support is provided but as in many other organizations, funding is restricted - there's never enough. The total sum needed for Kingston and District is $389,000 or 11.25 percent more than last year. An increase of 9 percent over 1974 contribution is needed from Queen's to allow the U.W., to aid the 25 agencies effectively. Our aim is $4,000.

One's decision to support U.W. depends upon how the contribution is interpreted - it could be supporting a Blood Bank that one day YOU or a family member may need to save a life. We all differ in financial circumstances and the donation decision is entirely left up to the individual. However, it is worth considering that each donation is divided among 25 worthwhile selected agencies and Kingston does need an 11.25 percent in-crease to make U-Way efforts work. Last year 100 percent of Kingston's large firms' employees contributed, many of whom are supporting families. - $4,000. needed from Queen's students? - let's go to it - the United Way !!

More on Edwards case

Dear Editors:
I write this letter with some trepidation, as I am fully aware that any person who makes some impassioned plea in a letter to the editor is likely to be regarded as just another crackpot. Also, I hesitate to accuse someone of writing a biased piece of journalism without incontrovertible proof.

However, in comparing Terry Collins article on Times of Turbulence with the description of the same events in the Who's Where, it is my personal opinion that the Journal article presents Chuck Edwards in a somewhat less than favourable light. And, having spent two summers driving a taxi in Kingston, I resent Collins' seemingly patronizing attitude towards taxi drivers.

Chris MacMillan

Dear Editors:
When I read Souvenirs in Tuesday's Journal, I was interested in seeing that, for the first time in this series of articles, Terry Collins neglected to reveal his sources. I should hope he has something more trustworthy to fall back on than "scores of newspaper clippings" and word of mouth, especially when giving such a one-sided point of view. (Edwards made the unfounded claim..., Edwards misinterpreted Becker's message... He alleged..., etc) How are we to know that Terry Collins didn't do a little alleging, misinterpreting and unfounded claiming, as well?

Glenn Jones

Dear Editors:
Contrary to popular belief, I am not a hard nosed commie killer pinko hater. If the article on Chuck Edwards reflected a one sided presentation of the facts then it might be said that the Adell Report, produced by the Senate Committee investigating the case and the newspapers reporting it, were biased against Chuck. The report was not believed to be one sided at the time. The conclusive Adell report provided most of the information from which the Souvenirs column was produced. I regret that I was not on campus to gather first hand information on the case. From the facts presented in the Report it was concluded by the Committee, the Senate, and this writer that Edwards was malicious in his continued groping for accusations to make about his supervisor, Mr. Becker. The Committee stated that it was quite understandable how Edwards had "confused" the situation, particularly since he had only heard of the RCMP investigation in the form of a rumour. It was his continued persuance at the hearings of issues that were intended merely to malign Becker that made Edwards appear vicious in his attack (for example, Edwards' contention that Becker was claiming the work of his students as his own. This was proven by the Committee to be totally false. In any event where the hell does it fit into his major argument?) The motion for expulsion of Edwards may have been reflective of this same feeling that Edwards had gone beyond reason in his case, against Becker.

My apologies if I ridiculed Edwards by stating that the last heard of him he was driving a cab in Kingston. That was certainly not my intention. The day after the Journal went to press I discovered that Edwards was working for a firm in Toronto.

The Souvenirs column was written after a great deal of research and numerous conversations with the Journal Editors of that period. If someone would like to write a more "responsible" account, I'm sure it would be of interest.

An interview with director Brian Meeson

Journal: I suppose the first question to ask is why did you choose this particular play?
Meeson: Well the real reason ultimately was the matter of casting. I had seen last year a number of plays being done on the main stage and I was worried by the kinds of demands that were made on student actors. They were being asked to play dramatic roles of middle aged people and I think middle age, because it has its own set patterns and securities and neurosis, is extremely difficult for young actors to play. It is much easier for them to play people their own age, or to play character roles or to play older people. Those three I think are much more in their range than the heavier middle aged roles. So f was looking for a play which would somehow satisfy that concern that I had.

Secondly, I was concerned by the fact that we really did not have any obvious outstanding superman or superstars as actors in the area, so that I really wasn't out to find a part that would satisfy anyone there. I was also interested in trying to attract as many people as possible and to exploit what I saw as a fairly strong strain in the department in terms of character diversity, both in terms of what I had seen people do on the stage and also looking at them physically and seeing the enormous physical contrasts between them.

I suppose the final reason was that I am a nut about Russian drama. I will direct Russian drama anytime under the sun, because I think it is the finest in the world and it has the greatest range, almost of any drama and because I think it is closer to regular human passions and interests and emotions than any other great drama. How did I come to Gogol? Well Gogol is a grotesque writer.
Journal: What do you mean by a grotesque writer?
Meeson: His characters are grotesque; they are grotesque in as much as they bear all of their moral and psychological blemishes on the outside. You see the grotesquery outside the character, so that you have characters with large bellies, with warts, humps, and facial blemishes and so on. It is a very physical world, Gogol's is. He constructs his scenery out of physical objects. The way he makes fun of people, particularly the Bourgeoisie, is to show them trying to be bigger than they actually are, by putting on little bits of finery that they think people in the capital wear, or dressing up their costumes with a hat, that was probably in fashion three years ago. In effect, they live in a totally artificial world which is created out of their imagination of what people who really have status, money and rank really live like. So the set we have here represents their tiny world ft is nine by twelve; it's their psychological space. They think it's really grand, so that elements of that set, so like the doorways and the windows are like cut out pieces that they have taken from pictures from their minds of what grand places look like and they are pieced together like a collage. Just like in suburban homes people have Armstrong tiled floors that are imitation marble. Everything they do is an attempt to take or imitate little bits of what they think that people with wealth actually have. In the set we have confined the people in their real space so they, being big people with small minds, big put-on faces, living in a tiny little cramped world The whole thing is like television never-never land. The space between the end of the set and the beginning of the black curtain that surrounds is a space where people will continue to act while not being on the scene, but you will see them waiting to come in, or in one case you will see them climbing the walls of the set to look in through a door or a window. That area will not be lit, but part of the acting will go on there, even though the acting area is precisely defined by the walls.
Journal: The play was designed to have an effect in Russia many years ago. fs there anything in the play for us today?
Meeson: Oh yes, everything The play is entirely about politics in 1975, in fact looking at what's happening in the Liberal government today, I would say that what's happening in Ottawa is exactly what's happening in this play. You have a number of officials who have acquired a lot of money and quite a lot of power which they proceed to build into little petty empires. Ottawa may not be a good example of a small backwaters town, but I was looking in the Globe & Mail and I saw where the mayor of North Bay had been released from police detention on his own recognisance. He had been caught in a gaming house and it was pointed out that the gaming house was in effect a sanctuary that the police could not enter because the mayor happened to be a police commissioner and that's the kind of small town politics that goes on in every small town Just five or six power figures hold all the power. We have changed in no way from where it was, except that we have got rid of inspectors.
Journal: Are you pleased that there is a large number of people required for the cast? Are you happy with the balance that has been achieved?
Meeson: I am extremely happy with this. ft's the most pleasant thing I've found. The original hunch paid off. There isn't anyone in the cast f'd be willing to trade, not one That's unusual. Normally by this time you've found one that you'd like to dispose of, or regret having cast. By this stage you are aware of the limitations of a student actor, the things he can't do, or the certain things that he grabs onto the first time and which are spontaneous the first time he does them, but which after that become rather set. But that's in the nature of inexperience.
Journal: So you are looking forward to a good performance?
Meeson: I think it will be a strong performance. Comedy is always a little tricky to play; making darn sure that you don't go into extremities trying to hunt for laughs That's always a problem. The other problem with comedy is being able to play it at a high enough pace and still be audible. One of the problems is to be top of the script. They tend to speed up the middle of the speech and take up cues slowly. But the real thing is that you've got to reverse that Journal: What are the dates of the run?
Meeson: The plays Thurs 6, Fri.7, and Sat.8th and then runs the following Thurs.13, Fri.14 and Sat. 15th.

George Harlow White

Studies of nature pencil sketches and water colours by nineteenth century British artist George Harlow White have been published in the exhibition catalogue Occasional Paper No. 2, by Agnes Etherington Art Centre, Queen's University.

"The desire to bring to public notice the existence of one hundred pencil drawings in our permanent collection, charming studies of trees and forests by White, motivated me to search for further information about the artist and his work," explained Frances Smith, Curator of the Art Centre. The Catalogue is the result of three years of extensive research by Mrs. Smith.

The drawings were given to the university in 1944 in two albums bound by the author, as part of the Segsworth bequest. It is not known how the drawings came into Mrs. Segsworth's hands. Mrs. Smith became aware that the drawings were stored in the Douglas Library and arranged for their transfer to the Art Centre's permanent collection.

George White ventured to Canada in 1871 at the age of 53, and stayed for six years afterwhich he returned to England. Although no records have been found to confirm his ownership, the artist has noted "my land, Oro township" (near Barry, Ont.) on the reverse of some sketches. Scenery in western Canada was also the subject for some of the Englishman's work; he made several sketches a day while travelling across the country, Mrs. Smith said.

Mr. White was elected to membership in the Ontario Society of Artists, and several years later, in 1880, was made an honorary member of the Royal Canadian Academy.

The drawings and water colours will be on display at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre at Queen's University, November 2 to December 31, 1975.

By the way...

The extension to the Agnes Etherington Art Centre will open December 13, 1975. Built to provide storage, shipping and other basic services for the existing building as well as 2,000 square feet of new gallery space and laboratories for the Master of Art Conservation Programme, it is a striking addition to the architecture of Queen's University.

The design by Marshall, Merrett, Stahl, Elliott, Mill & Ross was brought to realization by T. A. Andre & Son, Kingston, Ontario.

Pass Pasolini

Sandra Bernstein

The most recent screening in the New Cinema series was of Decameron, Pasolini's selection of tales sacred and profane from Boccaccio's classic of medieval Italy.

We are probably wiser not to question how true he is to the original material, but how he differs and whether his twentieth-century narration is interesting and valuable for us-especially since Boccaccio himself, like Chaucer, was usually re-working stories from Ovid, other classics, or bawdy folk-tales. Pasolini's activity is legitimate, and only the quality is at issue.

In fact, judging from my experience with Pasolini's Canterbury Tales, I'm rather glad I haven't read the Decameron. No great work of art can be adequately transposed to another medium; however, Canterbury Tales was so far inferior to the original that it was an insult to Chaucer.

Certainly Decameron is so highly stylized that it belongs more to Pasolini than to his source. The characters have extraordinary physical presence and dimension, their flesh-tones standing out in the dullish-green lighting. One gets a picture that is teeming, astir with life, a panorama of squirming characters whose outflow of energy can barely be absorbed by their time and space. It is much more reminiscent of Breughel, in fact, than of Giotto, who appears frequently in the film and with whom Pasolini (rather grandiosely, at this juncture in history) seems to identify.

Seeing Decameron is an invitation to enter the director's world for a couple of hours, to see humanity and a very vivid past through his eyes. This vision is enriched by many historically accurate and interesting details of mise-en-scene, and some fine camerawork and acting. Pasolini, like Wertmuller in The Seduction of Mimi, shows a lively sense of gesture. He is fascinated, too, with individuals and faces that seem super-real: a taste like Fellini's but lacking the latter's constant celebration of life. Pasolini makes a more muted statement, but his details are so palpable that he maintains a high level of intensity.

The director apparently made the medieval movies because the material and characters interested him, as did the workings of the forms and expressing of his truths. One sympathizes with his energetic pursuit of artistic goals, with his recent skepticism about the value of political films, with his concern about form per se. I wish Pasolini well, but cannot feel excited or enthusiastic about Decameron. At its end, one may feel intrigued, yet wonder, "How interesting, but so what?"

Perhaps the dissatisfaction derives from the fact that his films are neither extremely entertaining, very artistically innovative, nor ideologically accessible. I'll go to the next screening of his work (Pig Pen.on Nov 14) but I'm not counting the days.

A Classic in the making

Liz'beth Haworth

The Book of Eve Constance Beresford Howe (Avon Books).

Best sellers - never read them, pulp trash, unoriginal, dull, yes? Most emphatically, "no", for here is a new best seller Canadian novel which just might become a modern classic. After my summer's stodgy diet of women's stories by British females (Iris Murdoch, Margaret Drabble etc.) The Book of Eve was a welcome change, a bitter-sweet souffle. I think I broke my own record for nonstop reading; so eager was I to absorb every detail to the last word that I could not put the book down once I had started reading it.

The Book of Eve has all the features of a first class novel - vivid, dynamic narration, a realistic view of life with its struggles, romances and earthiness, humour; and a leading character with wisdom, insight, and a lot of guts. The story is about an Eve who thumbs her nose at Adam, God, and their Garden of (Very Boring) Paradise, and takes a toothbrush and a taxi out of suffocating safety into the World. Eva is the woman and, a little surprisingly, is a sixty-five year old grandmother for whom life is about to begin. With the arrival of her first Old Age Pension cheque, Eva decides to leave her middle class home in ReadersDigestville to walk out on the querulous, chronically ill husband of forty years, and to make a fresh start without any compunctions.

The old boarding house on Sherbrooke Street in a decaying part of Montreal hardly seems a likely setting for rejuvenation, yet to Eva it is perfect. She regards the various human and animal inhabitants of the house with amused acceptance, being equally tolerant of the arrogant randy tom cat outside her window, and of the bucolic foreigner from upstairs, whose charm extends somewhat further than her kitchen, where he first appears.

Yet, even in the happy if unconventional haven Eva settles into, thoughts of her past at times seep, filling the apartment, pervading her sleep, so that she relives the pains and defeats of her youth. The poignant picture that emerges is that of a vital woman whose capacity to love was never fulfilled, who had long ago been thwarted in her plans to earn her PhD, and who certainly did not find happiness-everafter in her marriage with Burt. Images of her husband are of a cold, unimaginative man; again and again return the memories of her miscarriages, her illnesses, her marriage rape.

With her only son, Eva needs to maintain a certain distant contact, but even he has failed her. She feared loving him too much and in the end he grew to be more like his father: beyond his babbling outrage at Eva's desertion he can barely express his feelings except in cliches After such a barren, fruitless life, surely the answer is not defeat but a second try

And for Eva, life blossoms in some unexpected ways. At sixty-five, she has no misty-eyed illusions about the ways of the world, but has long since been reconciled that sex belongs to the young lovers, and to the tom cat in the lane who carols his love ditties all night. Except for Johnny, the Hungarian from upstairs, she might have right. Very fortunately, he perceives the great need for love and loving that has so long been dormant in this woman. Johnny is middle aged, a refugee far from his country and family, and he remains delightfully irrepressible with an enormous capability for caring for everyone he meets. So it turns out Eva's Golden Age may indeed be rich and full, if not without its own complications and challenges.

To categorize The Book of Eve as another women's lib essay would not do Beresford-Howe justice; if anything one might call it Over 60's lib. Eva in her sneakers certainly does not live up to most people's expectations of a Tea Granny The small but significant sufferings, joys, surprises, expectations are those experienced by anyone, any age, and they are the more valuable to Eva whose existence until then had been one of submission and blandness. Small infirmities like her high blood pressure remind her of the passing years, but far more devastating was her mental illness, brought on nigglings of guilt and loneliness. It is just one of the trials Eva overcomes with characteristic courage and wit, and, in this case, the gift of a bottle of cheap wine. The Book of Eve is a charming inspiration of hope that is bound to brighten your day like an embrace.

Queen's Soccer Gaels win first OUAA Championship

Gary Barnes

This past Saturday afternoon, the Queen's Golden Gaels Soccer Team emerged as the OUAA Soccer Champions by virtue of a 2-1 victory over the Waterloo Warriors. The game was a sudden-death playoff between the top two teams in the OUAA league standings. The Gaels and Warriors were first and second with 17 and 16 points, respectively, from 10 games. In league play, the two teams battled to a 1-1 draw, although Waterloo held a territorial advantage for most of the game. So the Gaels needed to prove in one final game that they were worthy of the league title.

A Saturday morning rainfall produced a very slippery playing field and a strong south wind was blowing diagonally up the field. The Gaels won the toss and elected to have the wind at their backs for the first half. The game was played on the rugger field which is about nine yards shorter than the Gaels normal soccer field. This proved to be an important factor as both goalkeepers had difficulty in keeping their kicks from travelling too far when they were with the wind. Any long kicks made by the Gaels fullbacks or midfield in the first half, also invariably ended up by being gathered by the Waterloo goalie. The secret for both teams was to keep the ball on the ground with short passing. The play was evenly distributed between the two teams for the first half, with few actual good scoring chances for either side. The dynamic duo of Ron Heidebrecht and Chris Clarke were reunited in the Queen's backfield and successfully shut off all Waterloo attacks up the middle. The Warriors' best scoring opportunity came from a corner kick, when the ball was headed off the cross bar and out of bounds. Late in the first half, the Gaels received a free kick just outside the eighteen yard area when the Waterloo goalie made the mistake of stepping outside the box Horst Rabeneick took charge of the kick and put a low shot around the wall and into the net. This gave the Gaels at 1-0 lead with just 6 minutes remaining in the half. Unfortunately the lead did not hold up as a Queen's miscue resulted in a Waterloo goal with just a minute left in the half. Chris Clarke, attempting to head the ball back to goalie Bruce Howkins, inadvertently put it out of his reach and watched helplessly as it rolled slowly into the net. Normally this would give the Waterloo team a lift into the second half, but it was the Gaels who actually came out stronger and more determined to win.

Playing with the wind now, the Waterloo side tried unsuccessfully to play high kicks up the middle. Most of the Queen's goalkeeper's action was in gathering those long kicks and then throwing the ball out to his team-mates. The Gaels played much better against the wind than Waterloo did in the first half, and this was the secret to their success Urged on by a small, but vociferous crowd of supporters, the Gaels moved the ball into the Waterloo area only to be thwarted on several good scoring chances. As the time slowly ticked away, the possibility of overtime loomed very large. Coach John Walker was noticeably silent on the sidelines as the game pressure mounted. Then with about 6 minutes left to play in the game, the Gaels struck on what must be considered a picture goal. The play developed in the midfield area where Gary Harvey fed a pass down the right wing to Mark Bennett. Mark carried the ball down the wing and then crossed it into the middle to an awaiting Jim Monaghan. Jim volleyed a perfect shot on the first bounce into the upper left-hand corner, just beyond the outstretched arms of the Waterloo goalie. The Queen's team and supporters went wild with excitement and the first "Oil Thigh" ever was performed at a soccer game. Queen's held on for the last few minutes, and nearly had another goal when Tom Becke unleashed a wicked shot, which the Waterloo goalie made a diving save on. When the final whistle finally sounded, the Gaels had accomplished what no one could ever have guessed; an undefeated season topped off with the OUAA championship.

Queen's will now be heading off to Victoria, B. C. to represent Ontario in the National playoffs to be played Nov 7, 8 and 9. They are slated to meet the host team, University of Victoria, in their first match, and then Concordia if they should win. Several players will be graduating this year and coach John Walker will be on sabbatical next year, so this is the last chance that roughly half of this year's team will have to play under Coach Walker. He has inspired the team all year and was certainly the biggest factor in their success this season. No matter what happens in Victoria, the soccer team should be quite proud of their accomplishments this year

Notes: Coach Walker predicted a 2-1 Queen's victory at a team meeting on Friday. Queen's finished with an impressive 29 goals for and 10 against The top scorers were Mark Bennett, Jim Monaghan and Bill Ersil with 6 goals each and Horst Rabeneick with 5 goals Dave McIntyre chalked up 2 shutouts in nets, while Bruce Howkins had one

Ron Heidebrecht, one of the stars in the OUAA soccer finals, heads a ball in this past weekends 2-1 victory over Waterlo, which sends them to the Canadian Championships in British Columbia.

Sports round up

Men's

Cross-Country: The Queen's Cross Country team travelled to Guelph to take part in the OUAA Championships. They finished 2nd behind Toronto, out of eleven teams. There were five Queen's runners in the top twenty spots, Adam Shoemaker placing sixth and missing CIAU selection by one spot.

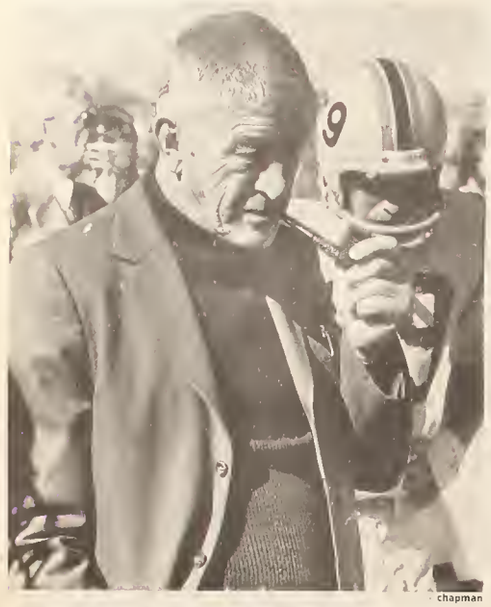
Basketball: Gaels split their winnings on Friday and Saturday In exhibition play, defeating Bishops 78-46, Centennial College 73-41 and then losing to Erie College in Buffalo, 83-76, and Erindale College, 87-77.

Football: Ottawa Gee-Gees defeated the Queen's Golden Gaels in OQIFA Eastern Semi-Final Football action. Score was 57-26. Gaels played well but were simply over-powered.

Hockey: Two exhibition games resulted in two wins. RMC 11-0. Bishops 8-3.

Soccer: Sudden death playoff resulted in our Gaels obtaining the league title and winning themselves a trip to British Columbia. They defeated Waterloo 2-1 and will play Nov. 7,8 and 9 in Victoria

Women's



Field Hockey: The final part of Women's OWIAA Field Hockey was held at York this past weekend, with the Senior Gals finishing in fifth spot, and the Intermediates in third. Games for the Seniors are as follows: Queen's vs Waterloo 2-1; Queen's vs Western 2-1; Queen's vs McMaster 3-2; Queen's vs Guelph 3-2;

Games for the Intermediates are as follows: Queen's vs Trent 2-1; Queen's vs York 3-0; Queen's vs Toronto 3-2; Queen's vs Laurentian 6-0.

Volleyball: Queen's Annual Volleyball Invitational. McMaster won. Queen's place third.

Basketball: Gals went to Guelph this past weekend for the Guelph Invitational. Defeated Sir Wilfred Laurier 95-15; defeated McMaster 46-42. Gave a tough game to Hamilton, but lost 58-42.

On Saturday afternoon, the Ottawa Gee Gee's showed the Queen's Golden Gaels why the Bytown boys are favoured to win this year's College Bowl. The Gaels left Lansdowne Park on the undesirable end of a 57-26 score.

The Gee Gee's employed a perfect balance of passing and running to build up a 27-0 halftime lead. Gaels' defense gave up only six points in the opening quarter but were gradually being worn down by the power running of Neil Lumsden. Lumsden's 27 carries for 111 yards equalled the aggregate rushing total of the 3 Queen's running backs. Lumsden scored the first 34 points of the game for the Gee Gee's and ended the game with an amazing total of 37 Other Ottawa majors went to Colton, Dipietro and McNeely.

Gee Gee quarterback Jim Colton complimented the rushing game with a devastatingly effective short passing game Colton hit on 13 of 16 passes for 175 yards with Dipietro, Avery and Medwin being his primary targets. Ottawa should enter into next Saturday's OUAA Eastern Final as solid favourites to defeat the U of T Blues.

The Gaels' scored their points in rapid succession, after the game was out of reach in the late third and early fourth quarters. Latham picked all but 12 of his 176 yards passing in the second half as he attempted only 4 passes in the first 30 minutes. Jerry Kaczmarek and Bob O'Doherty each caught two touchdown passes in the Gaels ten minute scoring spree which temporarily closed the gap to 17 points at 43 to 26 Two of the Gaels majors were set up by Gee Gee fumbles. Ted Tyczka picked up the first fumble after putting a tremendous hit on a Gee Gee back Tyczka also handled the punting chores for most of the game due to an injury to Will Kennedy in the first quarter. Don Kitchen recovered the other Ottawa miscue.

The Gaels 26 point comeback salvaged some respectability for the team which despite the score did not really play poorly, but were simply overpowered. Frank Tindall deserves to be proud of his team for they gave all they had for him in his final game of his coaching career. Coach Tindall certainly established himself as one of the all time greats in college coaching over his 29 year stay at Queen's. Our legendary smoker of pipes and maker of men will move over next year in favour of Garney Henley, whose exploits on the gridiron with the Ticats, and on the basketball court as coach of the CIAU basketball champs of 1973-74 at Guelph have also made him famous in his own time. Henley should bring with him a pro-style offence similar to that used by U of T and Ottawa U and early indications are that his name will attract the quality of ballplayer that should enable Queen's to challenge those schools that have previously defeated us, largely on the strength of their recruiting power

Cross Country second in the OUAA

Ian Gale of men's X-Country ended up in 17th spot. Right behind him was Mike Deguida who ended 18th.

After a long hard season of racing and training the Queen's cross-country team ventured down to Guelph this past weekend to compete at the OUAA championships meet. Unfortunately the day was wet and windy which turned the 10,000 metre course into a treacherous mudbath. On numerous occasions runners fell due to the lack of footing and in places the mud was several inches deep.

Nevertheless the Gaels put in a fine effort finishing second in the eleven team field, close behind a very strong team from University of Toronto. A solid team performance had five Queen's runners in the top twenty and it is rare indeed when this is not good enough to win a race of this calibre.

The field included members of Canada's National and Ontario Track team (in fact the winner Brian Stride had just returned from the Pan Am Games). The Queen's team has no runners of this calibre but Adam Shoemaker had an excellent race placing sixth and missing selection for the team to the CIAU's by one spot. Adam has run well all fall and is definitely the cross country rookie of the year. The second Queen's runner was once again Klaus Rinaa who has also had a fine freshman year and has great potential. Bob McCormack who finds 10,000m a long way to go had to be content with 13th spot with yet another rookie Ian Gale close behind him in 17th spot. Ian has been improving all fall and really came up with a good race. Right behind him in 18th was Mike Deguide and the veterans, Murray Hale and Mark Fields, finishing 23rd and 27th respectively. While the Gaels did not quite upset U. of T. this year, they gave them the toughest challenge in four years, and with the top five Queen's runners all having at least two more years eligibility this team will certainly be a force to be reckoned with next year.

Of course much of the team's success is due to the great coaching of Walter Gaddie, the flying Scott, who directed Queen's cross country to four victories in six meets and always got us back to Kingston in good time for the parties

The women's cross country team also ran at Guelph. Although cross country is not an official OWIAA event yet, there has been considerable interest in it shown in recent years and the women hope that it will soon be a sanctioned event. The women's race on Saturday was ½ the length of the men's race, through the same collection of hills, fields, cow manure mud, etc. There were 19 finishers: from Queen's, Anne MacMillan placed 7th, Anne Brown 13th, and Sue Plummer 14th. In the team standings, Queen's placed 3rd behind Western and York. More competitive cross-country experience would have made a big difference for the Queen's girls, they are all strong runners but lack the strategic know-how that might have meant higher placings. At any rate, the cross country running has been good endurance training for indoor season.

Field Hockey gains ground

Lyn Atwood

This past weekend saw the final part of the OWIAA Field Hockey finals and the completion of another field hockey season. Both the Intermediates and the Seniors enjoyed a relatively successful (all things being relative) season. The Intermediates ended up in a close third spot (unfortunately by handing Laurentian the championship on a silver platter)., and the Seniors ended up in a fifth place finish, the best they've done in years. Hopefully they will continue onward and upward next year.

The Seniors played two games on Friday, and two on Saturday. On Friday they were defeated on Penalty Flicks by Waterloo. Gail Thompson scored the only goal (by flicking) in the 2-1 loss Laurie Gallagher (fullback) must be highly commended for saving many of what would have been 'sure' goals against Queen's.

In the next game Queen's defeated Western with a 2-1 victory Nanette Cuddy and Pearl Dixon were the scorers. Saturday morning saw low temperatures and pouring rain as the Seniors took the pitch to meet Mac in a game which resulted in a 3-2 loss. Leslie Ferrari scored two fantastic goals; one on an endline lunge and back pass from winger Carol Ford. In their final game of the season the Queen's Seniors managed to 'put it all together' to come up with an overtime 3-2 victory over University of Guelph. Gail Thompson scored the first goal. Nanette Cuddy potted the second one assisted by Gwen McConkie and Gail Thompson. A goal which had been scored earlier on in the game by Jan Wagar had been called back and so the game was forced into overtime. Pearl Dixon managed to put it in the net right off the bat assisted by Les Ferrari.

The Intermediates fared a little better on Friday but were knocked on their ear on Saturday Their first two games resulted in victories Trent was more trouble than had been anticipated but Queen's dealt them a 2-1 loss. Goals scored by Deb Stretton and Lyn Atwood. In the next game Queen's Intermediates 'put it all together' to upset York 3-0. The Gals were literally at their end the whole game Even though the Intermediates were in serious goal scoring trouble this year the ball managed to find it's way into the net three times. The first goal was scored by Lyn Atwood and Ann McKinney potted the other two.

Saturday morning the Intermediates met their fiercest rivals U. of T. on the pitch. Unfortunately Queen's was not up to par until the second half whey they were already down 3-0. They managed to answer back with two goals before the clock ran out. This loss however, put them out of contention for the championship. Goals scored by Kirsti Boniwell and Lyn Atwood. In the Intermediates final game of the season it was like a huge anti-climax. Laurentian just trampled all over the Gals taking the ball up the field time after time. The only real fright Queen's afforded the Laurentian goalie was when "N.J." Bridge raced up the field past the defence on a breakaway. Unfortunately no goal was scored The final score of that disaster was 6-0. Laurentian walked away with the Intermediate Championship while in the Senior division University of Toronto will go to UBC to represent Ontario in the CWIAA finals.

Basketball Gals at Guelph Invit.

M. Brunton

The women's varsity Basketball team gained some much needed experience over the weekend at Guelph. As there are seven rookies and only six veterans comprising the team this year the three games in Guelph were just what was needed to show the team where they stand Well, they stood up extremely well and with a little more time to jell they could easily stage some upsets later on in the season.

The first game on Friday against Wilfred Laurier was more like a warm-up as it was handily won by the Gals with a score of 95-15. The Queen's squad ran all over Wilfred Laurier, scoring most of the points on breakaways. Everyone on the team contributed to the 95 big ones but rookie Kim Headford came out on top with 14 points.

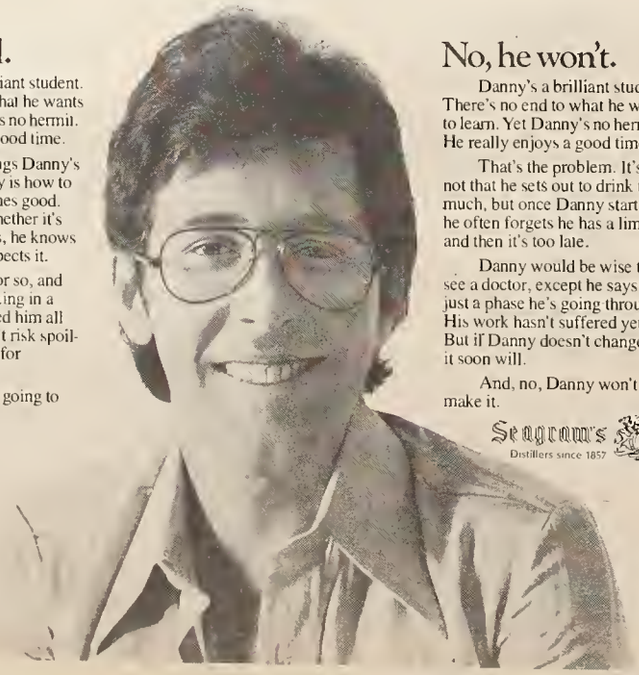
The next game against McMaster on Friday night proved to be a much more exciting contest. It was a hard fought game with the point gap wavering from 2 points to 10 points with Queen's on top for the majority of the game. Rookies Kim Headford and Heather Gifford were both extremely strong on the boards. Laura Mattson, a welcome import from the Laurentian squad and Kathy Keely, the team's stabilizing influence, tied for high scorer with 14 points each. With really great team work and a super defensive effort the Gals pulled it out of the fire with a score of 46-42.

Saturday, the team went against the Hamilton Mercury Bobcats. The Hamilton squad proved to be too much for the 'green' Gals. But, once again the defense shone and kept the game respectable. Special mention should go to Heather Gifford who had the arduous task of shadowing Pat Tatham (national team center). Not only did she do a great job of frustrating Ms. Tatham but she was also top rebounder grabbing 15 off the boards. Top scorer was Kathy Keely with 14 points. Once again, due to a consistant team effort, the Gals gave Hamilton their hardest competition of the tournament. The final score was 58-42.

With the Guelph Tournament over, the Gals have nowhere to go but up and are looking forward to a successful season.

on the move...

Swimming and Diving



John Ireland

After two months of hard preparatory training, the Swim Gaels blast off this season (Queen's pool Friday Nov. 7 at 6:00 pm.) followed by the Club invitational (Sat. Nov. 15 all day) next weedend. The squad this year, as indicated by times early in the season, shows tremendous strength, and after a lean year last season, the Gaels look to be fielding their strongest aquatic contingent ever.

This dramatic turnabout is due in the first instance to a particularly rich crop of rookies (that's right, U of T did miss a couple!) From half a dozen important additions, mentioned must be made of Tim Dennis, a nationally ranked backstroke and I.M. specialist, and ex-Age-group swimmers Bruce Ripley and Drew Fagan, both very strong versatile contenders. These join sophomores Wayne Serebrin, Joe Schnittker and Leo Hwozdyk to form a pretty solid nucleus for some seasons to come. In addition, the two swimming members of the Terrible Trio ("Darrell, where are you?") John Ireland, back from his year "in exile" and John Pearson, that perenially tough CIAU contender, will constitue the veteran core.

Aussie coach Chris Curran has every reason for optimism and both he and Diving Coach Dr. Nelson Freedman, hard at work with his Diving Squad featuring returning veterans Kerry Powell, Jim Stone and Fred Kallin, are looking forward to the best showing ever by Queen's swimmers and divers throughout the coming season.

Yes, he will.

Danny's a brilliant student. There's no end to what he wants to learn. Yet Danny's no hermit. He really enjoys a good time.

One of the things Danny's learned at university is how to keep those good times good. When he drinks, whether it's beer, wine or spirits, he knows his limit and he respects it.

Another year or so, and Danny will be working in a field that's fascinated him all his life. He wouldn't risk spoiling the opportunity for anything.

Yes, Danny is going to make it.

No, he won't.

Danny's a brilliant student. There's no end to what he wants to learn. Yet Danny's no hermit. He really enjoys a good time.

That's the problem. It's not that he sets out to drink too much, but once Danny starts he often forgets he has a limit, and then it's too late.

Danny would be wise to see a doctor, except he says it's just a phase he's going through. His work hasn't suffered yet. But if Danny doesn't change, it soon will.

And, no, Danny won't make it.

Hockey Gaels off to fast start

Carnegie

If the first two exhibition games are indicators of the season to come, the Gaels' hockey fans are in for an exciting season.

At RMC on Thursday night Steve Gross tallied the hat trick to lead the Gaels to an 11-0 romp of the RMC Redmen. It was a physically tough game and the traditional cross-town rivalry was ever so evident. Goaltender Clyde Harris was a tower of strength in the nets, garnering his first shut-out of the season; Steve Aubrey blasted a pair of goals and singles went to Scott Glassco, Mike Haramis, Bill Van Camp, Paul Stanton, Bill White and Tim Harrison.

Hockey Gaels played before a Jock Harty crowd of 1500, defeating Bishops 8-3. Erlier on they had dealt a 11-0 loss to RMC.

booth

On Friday night approximately 1500 fans cheered the Gaels on to an 8-3 win over the Bishops University Gaitors. The Gaels scored five unanswered third-period goals to break the 3-3 deadlock after two periods. Willie Wing, Bill Van Camp and Geoff Arnoldi scored first period goals to get the Gaels off to a fast start. Nick Stevens replied for Bishops. The Gaitors fought back in the second period with goals from Dave Perras and Brendon Burns.

The third period was dominated by the Gaels as Dougie Gills notched the winner at 4:09. Steve Gross, Mike Haramis, Craig Shannon and Bill Van Camp with his second goal padded the win for the Tricolour squad. Clyde Harris played the first two periods in the nets and newcomer Dave Eaton earned a shutout in the third period.

The Queen's coaches dressed a total of twenty-five skaters for the two games and are now faced with selecting a starting line-up. The Gaels are at home this weekend for their Annual Invitational Tournament. Friday at 6:30pm RMC will tangle with the Gee Gee's from Ottawa and at 9:00pm the Gaels renew old rivalries with Laval University from Quebec City. The consolation game will start at 1:30 on Saturday with the Championship game for the Dutch Cup to be played at 4:00pm. See you at the Jock Harty Arena this weekend!

V-Ball Gals open OWIAA season at home

klaus sipolins

Queen's Gals were 'set' for a big weekend but failed to show potential strength, finishing a disappointing third in Invitational.

Jane Petterson

This weekend saw the official opening of the OWIAA Volleyball season with the Annual Queen's Invitational Tournament held in Ross and Bartlett gyms on Saturday. Although this is the first OWIAA Tournament, many of the teams in the university league have been practising and competing in an Ontario V-Ball Association league since early in September. Many of the players on the Queen's team have been playing for a Kingston club team (TAKA) under the guidance of the Queen's coach Donna Gallagher. The TAKA team has been very successful in pre-season competition and coach Gallagher feels that the Queen's team will prove to be even stronger with the addition of players who do not play for TAKA. Of the teams invited four of the strongest declined to attend. Without Toronto, Western, Waterloo and York the calibre of play was considerably lower. Mac and Queen's were obviously the strongest teams present. They ended up in first and third place respectively.

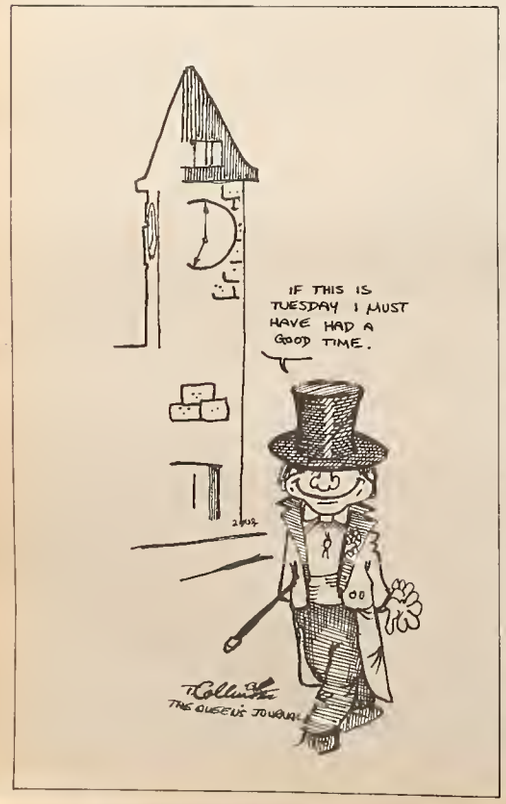
The Queen's Gals appeared in their first 2-game match against Sir Wilfred Laurier. Unable to combine a consistent offense with their quick defense, the gals split the match winning the first game 15-6 and losing the second 12-15. The second match showed a more confident Queen's team executing, at times, an offense which was exciting to watch. The more settled Gals easily defeated Guelph in this match, 15-8 and 15-9. The third Queen's match of the day put our Gals against a juvenile (under 16) club team from Kingston (Taka II). The weaker and much less experienced Taka II team was no match for the gals who took the match 15-2 and 15-9.

The best game of the weekend should have been Queen's against McMaster and at times this proved to be the case. Unfortunately, the Queen's team encountered recurring problems with their serve reception and attack. At times the Gals startled the Mac team with fantastic hits when there was no block against them. The Queen's play was inconsistent, however, and they had to settle for a disappointing split with Mac in the match, losing the first game 10-15 and winning the second 17-15. Following this match the Gals went on to play a boy's team from Rideau High School. Playing at the women's net height, the boys were deceptively impressive and won the first game 15-7. Better blocking and a good solid attack kept the Gals in the lead in the second game as they went on to win 15-11.

Although the Queen's Intermediate Volleyball team (last year's champions) no longer exists, a team coached by last year's winning coach, Brian Skinner (assisted by Kim Chicquen) and consisting entirely of Queen's students, played this weekend under the name of Taka I. The Taka I team had a successful weekend in their first competition against senior university teams, finishing with 5 wins and 7 losses. Their last match, against Sir Wilfred Laurier, was particularly exciting and well fought by both teams. After some long, hard rallies, the Queen's players on the Taka team lost the first game 14-16. The Gals came right back, however, to soundly defeat Laurier 15-9 in the second game. Coaches Skinner and Chicquen were more than pleased with their team's performance in this, their first tournament.

The final results of the tournament found Mac and Rideau High School on top with two losses apiece and Queen's a disappointed third with 3 losses. It should be noted that this was the first time that the Queen's team had played together and that this weekend offered an excellent opportunity to experiment with line-ups and different attack combinations. It is hoped that the Gals will settle down to a more balanced game in the next tournament.

Speak up you dozers



Stop for a minute, and consider how many classes you do not enjoy. Of all your courses this year, how many do you find boring and hardly worth the bother of attending? Now, ask yourself why a certain course is so lousy. Maybe you have lost interest in that subject, or maybe your prof is making you lose interest.

Thinking back to high-school and even to first year, you might be surprised to discover how a particular prof has influenced your choice of subject. A good teacher interests his students in the subject, and opens enough doors to encourage them to carry on. After you choose a major, a bad prof can spoil a course for you, turning your original enthusiasm into numbing indifference. Next thing you know, you have changed your major.

Some of the time-proven methods of ruining a course include lecturing from five year-old notes, so the prof has no fresh ideas on his material, giving badly prepared lectures that make taking notes a nightmare, or wandering off on unrelated matters and expecting the class to decide what is important. Some profs may pretend that they can't waste time explaining fundamental ideas, when in fact they have not spent enough time planning careful explanations. Other profs may set hopelessly difficult exams that would stump their colleagues, so that students have no idea if they learnt anything. Some profs don't answer questions; some don't like anybody to disagree; and others appear to be concerned with other things.

If you find that you are in a lousy course, figure out what is wrong. Then go and talk to your prof about it. Don't just say that you keep dozing off every time he opens his mouth. He has probably noticed that. Tell him that you are not learning anything from his course; tell him what it is that spoils the class for you. Many profs would gladly listen to useful criticism, since they seldom receive any advice about lecturing. One or two need reminding that teaching a course is what they are paid for.

Naturally, most profs deserve respect for their knowledge and experience, but no student should tolerate sloppy lecturing in the disguise of superior learning. We all contribute to our profs' salaries, and we have a right to get our money's worth.

Ms. Haynes exaggerates

Dear Editors:
Ms. Michelle Haynes' "Opinion: Tuition, summer jobs, and being female" is certainly valid but not in Canada and not in 1975.

Mrs. Haynes' "little lamps of learning" have evidently failed to illuminate certain dark corners. There is no reason why women should pay less in tuition fees than men. Admittedly, finding a summer job that gives a worthwhile salary is difficult for everyone. I must disagree, however, that we as students are entitled to the same wages as full-time employees. We are not skilled nor are we planning on contributing to the company in any sort of long term fashion. Therefore, we should expect lower wages.

As far as being female goes, Ms. Haynes is till involved in that manufactured battle created by Women's Lib or the "They won't let me do anything because I'm a girl" syndrome. Have you ever applied to a construction company? If so, you would have learned of a number of jobs including flag girls and lighter work crew.

If I may be so bold as to turn soothsayer I would predict from Ms. Haynes' fait accompli attitude that she will most likely get married after second year. After all, women "are so obviously only here to procure a husband. Well! Aren't they?"

Elizabeth Hemmerick
Arts 77

Dear Editors:
Granted, as an over-all trend, that women are unfairly discriminated against as regards their relative wages compared to men; is it really fair to conclude that tuitions for women should be adjusted accordingly? I think not. A closer look at the realities of student employment, I think, will show that the difference between male earnings and female earnings are not as great as Mrs. Haynes would have us believe. The average student (of either sex) is just that - a student. In most cases he has little or no skills. For Joe Queen's to obtain a job in construction is not as easy as some would think. Of course some students do have advantages in that they can find good and often rewarding jobs, because of the nature of the courses they take. This would include the Engineering student as well as the Nursing or Rehab student. But be honest Ms. Haynes, do you really think the first year male Artsci has a decided advantage over the first-year female Artsci? Believe it or not there are jobs that provide wages above the minimum wage for both men and women, but they are not always easy or "nice". For example, this summer I earned $3.50 per hour working in a muffler factory. Not a very pleasant way to spend a summer, but the job was open to anyone. Also such things as public utilities (garbage collection?), and recreation are not "closed" areas of employment. Sure some people don't like these jobs and most people are lucky to get even the minimum wage these days, but when I say most people, I do not mean most women or for that matter most men, but only most students (period). If we are going to start altering tuitions, because of insufficient summer earnings, let's start on the basis of the financially constrained student and not just the poor female student. Believe me, there are as many males in the same position. Mrs. Haynes has a right to crush her "little lamps of learning", but I suggest she's stepping just a little bit far to one side.

Glass and menageries

Dear Editors:
Let's leave John Gray and the painted pavement alone for a while. Embark with me on a trivial, ridiculous journey of complaining idiocy (that is, here's another typical Journal letter).

Chu, a friend of mine who happens to be a dog, is pretty tired of extracting fragments of glass out of her paw pads. So am I. The streets in and around the campus resemble the reject floors at Consumer's Glass Co. For us barefoot crazies, and more especially, the dogs who inhabit this place, it's a plain in the pads.

If you are disgustingly drunk or pissed off enough to kill, and a bottle happens to find its way into your dirty syphilitic hand, go break it in your bathtub. Not on the streets. Please.
P.S. Trivial, right?

Radiation bandage: new healing method

Barbara Nyland

A new bandage which will allow wounds to heal much more quickly and neatly has been developed by Dr. Cesar Romero-Sierra of the Queen's Anatomy Department and Dr. Alan Tanner of the National Research Council.

This bandage could become part of our everyday household equipment. It incorporates a device which generates electromagnetic waves of radio frequency. The wound is bathed in this radiation, and additional doses of a chemical already produced by the body to speed up healing are applied. The amazing results of this process could have extensive effects in everyday medicine. Cosmetic surgeons are interested in the process because lesions are healed more neatly and there is less scar tissue.

This project was inspired in the late 1960's while Dr. Romero-Sierra and Dr. Tanner were studying bird control in airports. Their purpose at this time was to find a way to stop birds from flying into aircraft and in this way to prevent serious accidents. Micro-waves were directed at the birds causing momentary paralysis. This idea has not been used in airports because as yet the expense is too great, but observations on the effects of the micro-waves on the birds led to a momentous discovery. Within the tissue of the birds who were exposed to radiation there was an increase in the production of collagen, the protein which makes up the largest part of the skin.

The results were exciting. Collagen is essential in skin repair and its increased production seemed to imply an increased healing speed.

For four years the scientists kept a very low profile, performing isolated experiments while supported by only personal funds. They tested their hypothesis on laboratory rats and dogs. Controlled testing using only the radio waves did not give the dramatic results which had been hoped. It was then that they applied the body's own healing methods. When histamine, a chemical already produced in damaged tissue was applied the edges of the wound came together much more quickly and neatly. Dr. Romero-Sierra, showing his great confidence in the procedure performed the experiment on himself. "It is less irritating than iodine" he commented.

As the research proceeded the mystery of what was occurring unfolded. The increased histamine sped up the body's natural healing processes while the controlled direction of the radio waves allowed manipulation of the all important collagen fibrils. The fibrils could be virtually knitted together at the beginning of the healing process, whereas in normal healing this did not occur until later stages.

Full use cannot be made of any scientific discovery until the long-term effects have been studied. The research team has not yet been concerned with this; but Kellex, a Toronto firm, is now developing machines which in time will allow the production of the bandage. Dr. Romero-Sierra and Dr. Tanner expect to submit their project to the Department of Health for licensing in the near future.

The research team is now attempting to discover the optimum dosage of radio waves and histamine. They have found that at least one million times the natural dose of histamine must be applied to cause death.

This invention could be an answer to our skyrocketing health care costs. Hospital stays may be shortened and the number of people requiring hospitalization may be decreased.

Someone forgot to close the barn door before the horse got away..... Hmmmm.....

Dunning Flicks profits put to good film use

There has been a good response to the Dunning Flicks shown this term according to Michael Creagen, President of Cineguild. Cineguild is the sponsor of the Thursday evening Dunning Flicks.

"The entire profit from the screenings is kicked back into student film making", according to Creagen. Creagen stated that "the money goes primarily into providing film stock for students to shoot their own shorts". Last year a sum of well over $1,000 was provided by Cineguild for this purpose.

Creagen stressed that Cineguild is "trying to keep the admission to Dunning Flicks at $1 and only through student support can this be done." Creagen asserted that in short, "we're here to entertain."

Cineguild was originally started to allow people not enrolled in film production courses to make films.

BC election called

Gerry Lewarne

British Columbia Premier David Barrett called a provincial election Monday. The election will be held on December 11. This election call follows two very controversial decisions that he has made in the past three weeks. Three weeks ago, Premier Barrett ordered 50,000 striking workers back to work. Then a week ago he froze prices on many essential commodities in an effort to make the federal anti-inflation programme more equitable. The first action angered the unions who swept him into office in 1972, and the second action calmed them down.

When he announced the election, Barrett felt that if the NDP were returned to power, he would have more influence with the federal government in discussions about the anti-inflation programme. He said, "The large organized interest groups can look after themselves, but someone has to fight for the organized majority. It is my belief that most British Columbians want strong leadership in the fight against inflation."

Rent review boards

The Ontario P.C.'s have gotten themselves out of one political corner by announcing last week that there will be rent review boards. However, it has not been announced what the rent income ceiling will be, how many regional boards there will be, or who can appeal rent increases. The decision follows the release of a 450 page report on rent review from B.C. in which one of the conclusions was that rent review with control does not affect the building of apartments.

Federal housing subsidy

Barnett Danson, federal Urban Affairs Minister, announced that anyone in Canada, regardless of income, will be eligible for a housing subsidy under the new federal housing programme. Danson stated that this programme, along with others to be announced, will generate one million new houses in the next four years. The way Danson will do this is to direct lending institutions to put a further 750 million dollars into this area. However, this assistance will only apply on low-priced houses; specifically, a maximum of $43,000 in big cities down to $28,000 in small towns. Further, the government will give loans to municipalities who wish to put in sewers to open new housing districts.

This is the wrong way of going about what the government wants to accomplish. They want to make people more happy and a time-tested way of doing this is to make it easier for them to own a house. Instead they should be promoting industry in areas where agriculture is not very important. Admittedly this is more difficult but in the long run far more desirable. For a start, how about a loan for Malcolm Bricklin?

Washington shake-up

In the past four days, Washington has seen more action than in the previous two months. President Ford announced that he has fired James Schlesinger, Secretary of Defence, and William Colby, director of the CIA. He also announced that Henry Kissinger is no longer the head of the National Security Council. Also on Monday, Vice-President Nelson Rockefeller said that he did not wish to be Ford's running mate in 1976. According to many sources, Schlesinger was kicked out because of his public battles with Kissinger. Colby was given the boot beeause the CIA investigations have embarrassed the administration because he gave out too much information. Rockefeller's move is seen as helping Ford because the Republican right-wing does not like Ford's present mate.

bottomtey
There was recently a meeting of Outer Council to decide on many important issues facing Queen's. One of the most important was the question of tides.

"We are totally against tides. They have no positive effect, they bring in no money there is nothing good about them." said one representative.

An observer stood up. "Mr Speaker speaking as an interested student, I find it necessary in my capacity, limited though it may be, to remind Outer Council of the fact that, to the best of our knowledge, it is of great and utmost importance to consider that it is of my opinion that the people are intending to retain their tides, feeling as interested students, that they don't want anything, which with sweat and hard toil they have earned, lost. In effect, if I may be allowed a brief summation, they want what they have and no one can take it away. Thank you."

"Mr. Speaker" added a third debater "I just want to say that I agree with that last remark. You can't just take things from students. After all, we're supposed to represent their interests." ("If he's not going to add anything," I thought, "why doesn't he shut up?")

The first speaker stood up. "Mr. Speaker! I thought I had made myself perfectly clear. The tides are useless, and I think we should get rid of them." His voice was rising in anger. "If you can't see that, I really pity you. What must be done must be done! Now!"

The other members slapped their hands on the table and barked. In one corner a rep was balancing a brightly coloured ball on his nose. He was rewarded with a fish.

The Theology rep spoke up. "But God gave us tides, and there must be a reason."

"Besides," sneered an onlooker, "time and the tides wait for no man', the say. You're powerless, you're useless, there's nothing you can do."

"Mr Speaker!" shouted the first rep. "These infidel communist atheists are obscuring the issue with that sort of rhetoric. I insist we call the question, and vote yes!"

They did, after the appropriate barking and clapping side show routine. The motion read "that tides shall hereby and therefore be totally vanquished and removed and annihilated for now and for all future generations till the sun falls from the heavens and judgement day is upon us." They all left and went to the pub, having accomplished twice what they usually do at their bi-weekly good-time rally and narcissism club.

Convocation

Some 250 students, most of them from the School of Graduate Studies and Research and the Faculty of Arts and Science, will be graduating at the fall convocation to be held at Queen's University Saturday morning, November 8 at 10 o'clock.

Principal Ronald L. Watts will address the graduates at the ceremony, to take place in Grant Hall.

Students who have worked for their undergraduate degrees during the spring and summer terms and graduate students who have completed their theses in this period will make up the group being laureated.

Open house

"The university serves the community" is the theme for an Open House to be held at Queen's on Saturday, November 15. The event will open doors to most of the buildings on campus both in the morning and afternoon.

Several departments are preparing audience-participation displays or conducting "mini-lectures" on subjects of popular interest. A folk concert is planned and there will be guided tours of the Physical Education Centre's facilities.

The starting point for visitiros will be Mackintosh-Corry Hall, where students will distribute directional aids and outlines of the day's features.

Get 'em gals... this is your chance!

Susie-Q week at Queen's is a chance for students to exchange their traditional stereo-type roles in the dating game. Girls, full of daring, hearts beating rapidly, have their pick of the men at Queen's. No longer are they required to wait for someone else to take the initiative. During this week, their efforts to be with the men of their choice are officially sanctioned and encouraged.

Originally the women's society, 'Levana', held teas and dances in Ban Righ to which women were allowed to invite men. These events were so successful that they led to the three-day Sadie Hawkins Week-end initiated in 1942. Providing women with the opportunity to 'get their man', they proved to be a great success. Gradually this developed into the week-long program that we have today.

This years' committee has a varied and interesting calendar designed to meet the needs of even the most sociable females. Athletic events have been scheduled daily. In addition, dances, films, concerts, and lectures are included in the week.

The realization that most guys experience the same apprehensiveness and lack of confidence that you are feeling could prove to be an eye-opening experience. Don't be shy girls! Most guys remain close to their phones during the week and are only too eager to accept your friendly offers. (If nothing else, it's worth points to them.)

Make the effort! The opportunity only comes once a year. It's losts of fun and well worth conquering those pangs of anxiety. Do it! (Submitted by Suzie-Q committee)

Remembrance Day classes

The University suspends classes and laboratories for one hour on Tuesday, November 11th, to honour the sacrifice of those who went out and did not return, specifically three hundred and sixty-two Queensmen in two World Wars and to engage in a Service which is both remembrance of sacrifice and resolution for peace in our time. The two-fold nature of the Service is indicated by the quotation from Stephen Spender standing alone on the front page of the Service folder: "They travelled a short while towards the sun and left the vivid air signed with their honour." and the quotation from Omar Bradley standing alone on the back page: "It is easy for us who are living to honour the sacrifice of those who are dead. For it helps to assauge the guilt we should feel in their presence. Wars can be prevented just as surely as they are provoked and, therefore, those who fail to prevent them must share in the guilt of the dead."

Necro member has cheap thrills

Dear Editors:

The word is out...? The word is in? Whatever. There it is in the budget highlights. Queen's (oh really?) Homophile Association has been granted $250 for God only knows what use

What? Him too?

Those self proclaiming "We're people too. We must be. I read it in Ann Landers...It's time to stand up and be counted...signed Anonymous."

Incidentally, the Necrophiliacs Club will have its first meeting yesterday at high noon. No shame there. No need to skulk to our club meetings under the cover of night

And I should add "What better place for necrophiliacs to find their cheap thrills than at a university?" In Kingston, no less.

John Nebel

(All homophile members please note, not yours sincerely)

Susie-Q line-up provokes wrath

Dear Editors,

As I write this my friends and myself have been sitting in line for almost two hours. It is 8:45. The line-up is for tickets to the Susie-Q semi-formal.

Queen's has an enrolment of almost ten thousand students and 195 tickets is not adequate. The thing is poorly organized and unrealistic, not to mention preposterous. Girls who waited in line for almost four hours on the first day of ticket sales were told when they got into the John Orr Room that they couldn't get tickets

Both mornings, a list was started to keep traek of people who showed up. It was not used beeause the organizer of the dance had not begun it herself. As she put it, when asked why she would not use the list: I'm the organizer. I do what I want "

It's too late to do anything about this year's Susie-Q, but next year we hope to see a great improvement over the gross mishandling of this year's affair.

Jennifer Wilding and others.

Parking tickets tax patience

Dear Editors:

Becoming a member of the Kingston Community as of September 1975 has already had its complications. My major problem is parking facilities around Queen's. I am presently working for a student society within the university. Upon accepting the job I thence went forward and tried to get a parking permit. The Parking Office said there were no outside faeilities available and inside they are $26.50 per month. I think that this amount is too high for any individual to pay.

So I have been, like many other less-fortunate people, parking on side streets, meters or whatever other parking space is available. Last week some kind soul(s) moved my car down the street and put it up on blocks. The parking authorities had previously come by and issued a tieket for obstructing a driveway. I am sorry to the party concerned but I did not see the driveway. I think that the aetions of these people (possibly Queen's students) could have been resolved in another way.

I think Queen's University as members of the community should look into this matter. Daily, I see parking tickets on an overabundance of cars, which I am sure the people of those cars are as furious as I am.

If this situation is not resolved soon, you can cateh me outside City Hall at 5:15 p.m. standing beside the collection box making my daily contribution.

The town meeting revived

The idea of the town meeting is being revived across Canada to prepare Canadians for Habitat, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlement to be held in Vancouver in 1976

Kingston's town meeting will take place in the fourth floor theatre at St Lawrence College beginning at 9a.m. - p.m. on Saturday, November 22

The Community Forum, the official title will give all interested citizens and groups a chance to articulate the worries they may have about community life. Morning and afternoon sessions in small workshops will focus on challenges and proposals. The event will be essentially a brainstorming session

Unlike the images evoked by the very word "brainstorm", however, the Community Forum is a well structured and planned day. The people responsible for the structure are from the Institute of Cultural Affairs, a research, training and demonstration group concerned with the human factor in world development. The proposals from this forum and other forums to be held across Canada will be published as a set of proposals representing the consensus of thousands of Canadians on the future direction of Canadian communities.

The participants in the Community Forum will include representatives of community organizations, service clubs, unions, churches, etc. Most of the steering committee, is especially anxious that "people who are not otherwise involved should be there. We would like to hear from the non-joiners."

On arriving, each participant will be presented with a booklet detailing the day's activities. The day is divided into five segments: THE PRELUDE - coffee and registration; THE NEW WORLD - talk which will lead to workshops on the present challenges; THE INTERLUDE - a buffet and dramatic presentations, THE NEW HUMAN - another talk leading to workshops, this time on the practical proposals; and THE PLENARY - reports and a closing session

In the small workshop sessions, group members will be encouraged to write down in the booklet names of issues to be discussed. The Community Forum structure is typified by step four of the Present Challenges Workshop. In answer to the question "What challenges must be met?" participants will be asked to fill in the blanks in the following: In the arena of ..... the underlying challenge is ..... which has to do with .....

"Straightforward instructions and plenty of space to write down comments encourages a thoughtful articulation and discourages the idle speculation that often ensues from unstructured brainstorming.

The Institute of Cultural Affairs wisely recognizes that the essence of community feelings cannot always be found in words. To this end, one of the four afternoon workshop groups will work on telling the new story, singing the new song, creating the new symbol and enacting the new drama.

Throughout the booklet are quitations by famous Canadians that capture one aspect of Canada. The total effect of the booklet is to produce much food for thought and well-founded hopes of great success for Kingston's Community Forum.

bottomley

The issues at hand

Given the workshop situation, it is possible that none of the following issues will be raised. They do, however, constitute a sample of the broad area to be covered by the Community Forum participants.

1. The degree of responsiveness of all levels of government.
2. Understanding and respecting neighbours.
3. The quality of formal education at primary, secondary and post-secondary levels
4. The relevance of Canadian Law to Canadian lives.
5. The degree of satisfaction with the present methods of coping with infractions of the law.
6. The distribution of resources (land, money, minerals) across class and age groups
7. The role of minority groups (by age, sex, class, creed and race) in the community

bottomley

Challenges and proposals

For too long, 'our stumbling-blocks ha[ve] been problems to which we must find [a] solution. It is painfully obvious, however, that many of yesterday's solutions [are] today's problems. The North America[n] way of life is the pragmatic way. Life is [a] puzzle to be put together, to be solved. [If] there is not enough room on the streets [for] all the cars at rush-hour, then by all me[ans] widen the road. The expressways of [the] sixties may be vacant in the eighties because mass transit found a better way [of] getting several thousand people into a[nd] out of the core of a big city.

It is important to note, therefore, th[at] title of this article. Challenges a[nd] Proposals, not problems and solutions. And the challenges to be threshed out [at] the Community Forum will be unique in [at] least one aspect. The topics will [be] presented for discussion by citizens [of] Kingston - not their elected represe[n]tatives, but the people themselves.

The purpose of the Community For[um] is not to bandage the wounds inflicted [by] modern society but rather to expose them to the fresh air of open discussion by concerned citizens

The growing disenchantment with government may present an obstacle at the Forum. Lin Good, National President of the Community Planning Association of Canada (CPAC) feels that the most significant "danger lies in just being negative". Nevertheless, she is convinced that the Community Forum will work.

The CPAC will be presenting a brief to the Canadian government based on the results of similar forums which they are sponsoring. The CPAC forums differ from the forum coming up in Kingston in that they are on specific topics. Housing, land use and the effect of the sea on the quality of life in Maritime communities have already been explored by CPAC forums.

Mrs. Good feels that it is important to keep our problems in focus. The report to the Canadian government may describe an undesirable situation given the high standards we have set for community life. Other delegates to the Habitat Conference will not be using our standards. Where we may strive for happiness and integration in the community, many countries still have to worry about sheltering their people from the elements. She is somewhat apprehensive about trying to relate local problems to international problems.

Lois Miller, alderwoman on Kingston City Council, is a member of the Steering Committee for the Community Forum. Ms. Miller hopes for great success; to her, it is a "highly structured method of developing consensus in a group." In this lesson in decision-making, "the process is as important as the result." That is to say that the people meeting and discussing the issues is of great importance. Too seldom do the issues leave the halls of government buildings. The sense of community to be derived from the Forum is of as much value as the conclusions that can be reached

Past forums successful

This is not the first Community Forum to be held in Kingston. This past summer, a mini-forum was held to prepare for the November event. AMS External Affairs Commissioner, Peter Lane, was pleased with the results of the mini-forum. Lane hopes to establish "a basis, an understanding" that will apply to students, faculty and the community.

The Community Forum held in Sackville, New Brunswick decided to change the municipality's status from village to town. In addition, they decided that they needed a social planning council.

The success of the Community Forum has prompted Ottawa West to make the Forum an annual event. The Steering Committee assumes that the proposals will take responsibility for implementing them. The ICA is open for further consultation and in-service training at their regional centres to share their experience in community development.

Conclusion

The idea is sound; conclusions, however, must be reserved until the event itself may be assessed. The JOURNAL will be at the Community Forum on November 22. All Queen's students and staff are invited to participate in the Forum. The JOURNAL will note impressions and attempt to arrive at some conclusions regarding the value of the event in the November 25 edition.

Cooking with the Hook

Although John Lee Hooker's life has been chronicled by many historians, as the life of any musician of his significance and calibre would be, there are many minor discrepancies that render it impossible to be accurate with dates and statistics. Least concerned with historical accuracy is John Lee Hooker, and if the man himself is a bit hazy about the what and when of it, one can only surmise that, from an artistic point of view, these are not central concerns.

John Lee Hooker was born August 22, 1917, in Clarksdale, Mississippi, cotton country, rough hewn and anachronistically rural. Clarksdale is the principal town in the Northern Mississippi Delta region, and it bears no reference to its size.

John Lee's father died when he was a little child and he was raised by his mother and stepfather. His stepfather, William Moore, was a blues guitarist himself of some repute and renown in that part of the country. It was from him that John Lee learned to play guitar.

No personal history is necessary to determine the general atmosphere of John Lee's childhood. Music was an integral part of the work and recreation of the rural, Black Delta sharecropper. The men in the fields sang as they toiled and the women accompanied their domestic duties with gospel and blues. Spare time was devoted to musical "store pourchin" as much as anything else and if the people weren't actually performing their music themselves for their own entertainment, they were listening, by John Lee's time, to phonograph recordings.

John Lee Hooker's musical image stems from his roots in the land of the black sharecropper. He's a blues guitarist: laidback and smooth. His flitting fingers around the neck of his Les Paul can create rich riffs or sensual growls.

Hooker Jr. (vocals), Ken Swank (drums), Les Silver (bass), and Charlie Grimms (guitar) fill every song with a heartfelt blues aimed at producing maximum boogie. Their judicious mixing of tunes should make for an interesting concert.

But as John Lee says: "Blues is the root of all music; jazz, ballads, rock'n roll, everything comes from blues. Just step it up a bit and change it a bit, but its all blues when you get right down to where its at." Let the John Lee Hooker Band prove this to you. Be at Grant Hall on Sunday, November 9th at 8:00 p.m.

Tickets can be purchased at the House of Sounds, John Orr Room, Tara Foods, Silver Threads, and Renaissance Music and Sam the Record Man. The prices: advance $3.50, tickets at the door are $4.00.

Dope on Dunning

Tom MacGregor

The Dunning Film series certainly pulled some different tricks out of its hat this week with a couple of anti-drug films from the thirties. These melodramatic propaganda flicks, Cocaine Fiends, and High on the Range, are part of the whole genre which has re-emerged in this post-drug era to be laughed at. After all its always good to know how much people trying to save you are willing to distort reality.

Being a silent movie buff, I naturally liked the silent western, High on the Range, the best. Even at this early date the western archetypes were well established. We have the Ben Cartwright-patriarch figure who wants to clean up all the pot smoking on his ranch so it will be a decent place for his beautiful daughter to inherit after she marries the handsome hired hand. Of course this leads to a tragic tangle with the pot-smoking, animal-beating villain. All must be resolved by the non-smoking hero who has loved the daughter from afar for years and placed his life on the line for the handsome hand who has his mind distorted with the killer weed. All the gestures and cliched expressions of silent cinema are found here in abundance as well as such natural titles as "It was a shot 'cause I heard it." It was a shame this one was the short one.

Cocaine Fiends is a feature length talkie done in the melodramatic gangster movie style. Here one must laugh at the naivete of the youths who mistake Cocaine for headache powders until they are hooked and of course at the mercy of their suppliers! Its quest to show that no realm of society is free of the drug curse causes the film to lose focus, starting with a small town girl and ending with a rich city girl's giving up of the wild life. As we all know and see in this film, dope leads to other indecencies such as prostitution, suicide, kidnapping and of course coffee pots which boil over when unmarried couples start to embrace!

Certainly dope is a serious matter but who could take it seriously when films like these were trying to make people "aware" of their evil.

Polished performance

Janice Dawson

The Domino Theatre's current production of Lloyd George Knew My Father, is Britain personified. Under the very competent direction of Valerie Hirschfield, the production proves to be tight and beautifully detailed.

Set in present time, it is the story of a delightfully batty old British couple, General Sir William Boothroyd, and his wife, Lady Sheila Boothroyd. When Lady Boothroyd decides "to do herself in" because the government is building a "two lane carriageway" across the family estate, the ensuing uproar is hilarious. Everyone is upset for different reasons—Lady Boothroyd's son Hubert, the M.P., and his wife, Maud, panic because they are afraid Hubert will lose his seat in the House; grandaughter Sally supports Sheila's decision until she realizes that "Granny" is in earnest; although Lord Boothroyd seems, in his senility, unaware of the situation, we find in the end that he has accepted his wife's decision; Robertson the butler has, with calm sadness, also accepted the situation. Simon, Sally's finance, a budding journalist, appears as an uninvolved spectator even though he complicates things by sending the story, complete with photographs of Lady Boothroyd by her grave, to all the London papers.

Ron MacPherson and Beverly Stewart (Lord and Lady Boothroyd) gave superlative performances, being completely natural and very convincing. Alan Anderson (Robertson, the butler) was a delight to behold. Deryck Hazel (Hubert), Jill Hodkinson (Maud), Marilyn Walsh (Sally), and Brian Parker (Simon) all gave convincing and enjoyable performances.

This is a delightful show, set with excellent characterizations, framed in a lovely, well used set, and polished wittily by director Valerie Hirschfield, and the result is a delight to eye, ear and mind.

QUEEN'S DRAMA GUILD
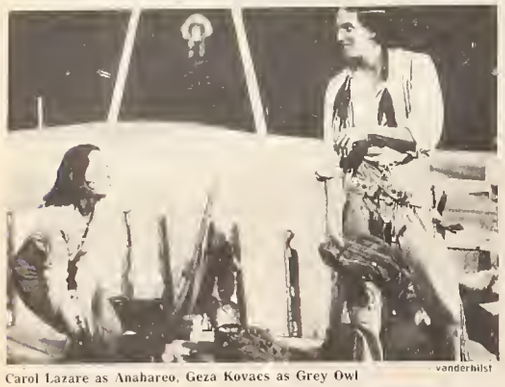
76th year



The Drama Guild will be holding another meeting at 5:30 on Tuesday the 11th in the Green Room of the Drama Department in Theological Hall, to discuss the casting for the radio plays and also to prepare for the live performance of one of the new radio scripts for open house Saturday the 15th. For those of you who weren't at the meeting last Tuesday, the Guild has decided to put on a re-creation of a live taping of a radio play as it would have been done during the more golden age of radio. Costumes and props are to be provided thanks to the courtesy of the Drama Department, and we'll be doing one of Dave Fanstone's original scripts. So come to the meeting and join in the fun.

Open Circle production tight

Alan Mann

It is not the common Journal policy to review arts events that occur in cities other than Kingston and although policies are made to be bent, the cause of such a bend must still be worth the energy When I received the invitation to see Life and Times of Grey Owl, done by the Open Circle Theatre at the Toronto Workshop, I decided to go see the play for various reasons The most important were, first being a drama major, I enjoy the chances I get to see what is presently being done in Canadian Theatre (something one rarely hears about in Kingston) and second, Grey Owl is one of Canada's few internationally known authors and even if he weren't, he was a major factor in Canada's cultural and ecological coming of age and as such is worthy of our attention.

vanderhilst

Carol Lazare as Anahareo, Geza Kovacs as Grey Owl

The simple fact that the play is about this man, makes it worth trying to see if it were not too far out of the way, but there are several factors in this production that make it almost alone a reason to go to Toronto.

The story is well written and avoids the always tricky grounds of trying to dig into the psychological motivations of such a complex character. This is not to say that the play is little more than a series of news clips, but that authors Martin Lavut and Arnie Gelbart used only what is known about Englishman turned half-breed to create a moving piece of work Moving not only in the emotional sense, but also in terms of action and interest

Astrid Janson's set and designs worked well alongside the style of production set up director Ray Whelan: chairs, tables, trains even houses that appeared from nowhere when called upon only to vanish when finished with as completely as Archie Bellany's past.

Geza Kovaco played not only a convincing Grey Owl, but also a physically similar one. He handled well the difficult transitions from the decisive Grey Owl of the "present" to the young Archibald Bellamy of the "past".

Carol Lazare as Anahareo, his woman, provided an excellent counterpoint to the cool Grey Owl. Her warmth, her love and occasionally her raging temper gave us a character that one could empathize with, for the character of Grey Owl was as Grey Owl himself, was, noble enough to be respected, yet too aloof to feel for.

The interplay between these two actors was one of the most convincing relationships this reviewer has yet to see on stage. One had no doubts during the more intimate moments, whether they be the soft, quiet scenes or the sometimes violent ones, that a real understanding of the characters and their feelings had been achieved.

Steve Bush, Maureen McRae and Jack Messinger play the other seventeen characters involved in the Grey Owl saga from Archie's Aunt Ada to Vincent Massey. Each character change was as complete as the character interpretations were unique and honest.

The problems of the play lay in 3 factors. The most difficult one to overcome is the lack of aging that occurs, so that when Grey Owl dies, his death comes as a complete surprise. As for the other two, having worked in Convocation Hall, I can sympathize easily with the cast. Somewhere in the P.A. system a ground wire is loose and there is always the sound of a local radio station coming through the speakers, softly yet clearly, and the other is a question of location. On the night I attended, Anahareo's final speech was for a time drowned out by an ambulance on Yonge Street.

The Toronto Workshop is located at 12 Alexander St just off Yonge between Welsley and College Streets and Grey Owl runs until Saturday November 15 and is well worth the price of admission.

Horn's golden whispers

blevis

The lights fade into darkness, the crowd waits in quiet expectation, and a silent figure walks slowly onto the shadowy stage to be greeted with a hesitant swell of applause. With no introduction and no pretension, Paul Horn sits bathed in blue light with his gold flute glowing softly in his hand. A single tuning note, and his third annual Queen's concert has begun.

Until you have heard Horn in person, you cannot appreciate the haunting sound of his unaccompanied echoing flute. Listening to someone else describe it is hopeless; even listening to his Inside album on your expensive new stereo system won't do it. You have to be THERE as he sends golden whispers into every corner of Grant Hall and spins shimmering webs and rippling curtains of sound that hang in the air like Northern Lights. The effect is simply incredible.

Horn and his band have moved away from their earlier rock leanings and are now playing softer and cleaner jazz. Neil Swainson's technical and creative virtuosity on bass contributed much to their open style. Percussionist Jim McGillveray and drummer Kat Hendricks worked well together to produce inventive and complex rhythms that never dominated the music, although McGillveray's constant playing was unnecessary, and tended to become repetitive. He and Hendricks had an irritating habit of filling in any quiet periods with wind chimes, but on the whole were a welcome change from the metronomic beating that characterizes so many percussionists.

Pianist Ron Johnston provided good structural backup or a counterpoint lead as needed. During the softer numbers like Joni Mitchell's Blue or Bach's Siciliano flute sonata, he and Horn moved apart and together like well-choreographed ballet dancers.

Horn led the band through a varied programme of songs that called for great amounts of originality and skill. He carefully avoided undue focus on himself, however, and always remained one voice out of five. The group played together as few others do; always interacting with each other in a shifting, pulsing fashion that left the eye and ear free to wander easily among them. The "be-bop" style of Charlie Parker and John Coltrane is evident here, and Horn's South American and East Indian influences combine with it to create a truly unique musical creation

To those unfamiliar with Horn or avant-garde jazz, it must have sometimes seemed like a confused and bewildering mass of notes and accents. They may have been more at ease during the slower and quieter pieces when Horn built his improvisations on a simpler structure without the flashing drive and cross-rhythms of Hendricks and Company. His work was most impressive in these numbers as his lyrical phrases wove through the underlying framework The flowing lines continually invited the audience to lean back, close its eyes, and float a little

A beautifully sensitive piece entitled Sunset Painter summed it all up and left the audience sighing as Horn's liquid flute sang like a songbird at dusk of the muted fires and soft starlight of evening.

The lights picked him out and faded into darkness, the crowd applauded in quiet appreciation, and the silent figure walked slowly off the stage

R.M.C. joins Queen's Chorale

Lin Rowe

On Saturday, November 8, at 8:30 p.m. in Grant Hall, the Music Department of Queen's University will present an admission-free concert of choral music by both Queen's Choral Ensemble and The Royal Military College Chorus.

This is the first time that the thirty all-male voice chorus and the 140 member Choral Ensemble have combined forces in a concert The program, which covers a wide gamut of music, includes anthems, folk-songs, negro spirituals as well as Poulenc's "Mass in G. Major". This latter, one of the rarely performed and more difficult pieces of choral music, is in 6 parts plus a chamber choir of soloists.

The Queen's Choral Ensemble will be directed by Denise Narcisse-Mair assisted by Charles Brown and Marilee Jones. The Royal Military College Chorus is under the direction of L.Cdr. P.W.Johnson, assistant professor of Civil Engineering at R.M.C. Organ accompaniment and organ interludes will be provided by Christopher Hunt.

The large Queen's Choral Ensemble has for the past three years, under Professor Narcisse-Mair, been performing for growing and enthusiastic audiences both in Kingston and out-of-town. Ms. Narcisse-Mair is also conductor of the Toronto-based Hart House Chorus which has just recently completed a five-country European tour during the course of which they represented Canada at the Paris festival "Estival".

B-Ball Gaels split

Alps Boniwelt

Last Friday and Saturday the Gaels played togelher under game conditions for the first time and it was no quick dip in the pool. In the space of 24 hours they played 4 full-length games and with the exception of the initial one, all against fresher opponents. Their record, everything considered, it was a respectable 2 and 2. Enroute to compiling that mark, they demonstrated ability and potential in displaying some very fine basketball, both offensively and defensively. They were dead from exhaustion by the 4th game. Otherwise they could have easily gone 3-1.

Friday night in Bartlett gym the basketball Gaels opened their exhibition season with 78-47 victory over a relatively pathetic Bishop's team. Anyone who was there had to be impressed. It's been a long time since a Queen's team has had the kind of balance, rebounding and defence that this years' team makes an integral part of their repertoire. Shooting was glaringly absenl in 2 games at the George Brown College, tournamenl, where Queen's played 3 times on Saturday. In both of these contests the Gaels wound up holding the short end of close scores.

In the firsl game against the Erie Panthers from Buffalo the Queen's shol a blistering 17 percent in the 2nd half and yel to their credit only lost 83-76 against an opponenl that scored 137 and 114 points in other games.

The second game, versus Centennial College is only worth mentioning for the score which was 91-34 in favour of Queen's and for the facl that it put the Gaels into lhe consolation finals one hour later against Erindale, the Mississauga campus of U. of T. In the finals, they simply ran out of energy while Erindale only stopped running because the gym wasn't long enough. Still, while virtually playing the game as stationary picks they only lost by 9, 77-68.

The team's leading scorer in each of lhe 4 games was different. Dave Lockhart had 16 on Friday night, Steve McCreely 18 againsl Centennial, Andy Boniwell 20 against Erindale and Derek Swinnard and Bruce Nickel each notched 19 against Erie.

Queen's has a good team with the potential to compete for any position in the Eastern Division.

This Saturday lhe Gaels open the regular schedule at Ryerson and play an exhibition contest Sunday in London against the Mustangs.

Rugby moves into first over weekend

Wally Hertz

On a field that was so wet, that seagulls were parked in lhe south end zone, and in front of a hostile multitude, the Queen's Rugby club not only assured itself of a place in lhe OUAA finals, but stormed into a tie with York University for first place.

On the first day of a rugby-filled weekend, lhe first XV defeated an over-zealous Waterloo team. A referee, whose vision seemed somewhat impaired by lhe cold weather, kept Queens from scoring on early attempts, until Peter Kopp converted his own try to put Queen's inlo a 6-0 lead. Peter Quinlin who beautifully set up the first try, accounted for Queen's other score. The fine aggressive forward play, lead by vice-captain Kevin Honsberger and Gus Monette, held Waterloo scoreless until a penalty kiek was eompleled in the dying minutes of the game.

The second XV from Queens then steamrolled over Waterloo's seconds in their most impressive offensive display this year, keeping their winning streak going at 15 in a row. The Rev., Kevin Parker, bowled over for Queen's first try, then Jim Grey's four-point addition was Xeroxed by Steve Pary and Queens lead 25-0 at the half. John Rulka, Bob Landrige and Bill Brown all had trys in the second half. Don Davies accounted for Queen's other 17 poinls with a try and an accurate toe. "Bermuda" Bill Buchanan's scoring streak was stifled at 108 consecutive games.

Sunday, Queen's sang lheir way to St Catherines where the Brock University fans were to be disappointed as the hometown boys were blanked 15-0. Nigel Costeloe, who spent the previous evening nursing his roommate's wounds, earried the ball aeross for Queen's only try. Again the aecurate toe of Don Davies added points to put the game out of reach. Queen's finished the game with only a six-man pack, as two forwards were cut, and required stitches.

Tomorrow, Queen's firsts will face York in the finals, in Toronlo at York University at 2:00 P.M while the seconds will be playing Western al 12:00. Queen's will have relurning to the line-up, captain David Bonker, who was sidelined with an eye injury. With all persons in good health, it seems Queen's chanees for a championship are excellent in both divisions.

Some tight action in this weekend's rugby aeton which saw Queen's move into a tie for first.

Bews News

Paul Findlay

The soecer regular season finished on Monday. Division 1 had Arts '78 with a 3-0-1 record and Civil-Math 3-1, making the quarter finals In Division 2 a strong Edueation team were 3-0-1 to edge out Arts '76 (3-1). Meds and Arts '77 were both 4-0 in winning Division 3 and 4 respectively Scienee '79 and Mechanical were the runners-up both with 3 and 1 records.

In the quarter-finals Arts '78 shut out Arts '76 2-0, Meds edged Mechanical 2-1, Civil-Math squeezed by Edueation 1-0, and Arts '77 beat Science '79 1-0. Wednesday night was to see the semi-final matches between Arts '78 and Meds and between Civil-Math and Arts '77. The winners of these games were to play the final last night.

In Rugby action last week P.H.E shut out Arts '77 13-0, and Commerce '76 edged Edueation in a game which many people thought would determine the champion, in overtime by Ted McKenzie's drop goal, 3-0. On Monday of this week the first game of the finals was played, being a rematch of last years final between Commerce '76 and P.H.E. The game was a defensive struggle as neither team could put anything together With the score 0-0, less than 3 minutes remaining, and, as Danny Gallivan would say, overtime looming large, Commerce '76 was awarded a penalty kick from about 35 yards out Ron Knox's kiek was good giving his team a 3-0 lead. On the ensuing kick-off by P.H.E., Gord Carruthers got the ball,punted,followed up his kick, recovered it, and beat one defender to go in for the try. Ron Knox converted as the game ended in a 9-0 victory for Commerce '76. The 2nd game of the finals was to be played Wednesday night and the 3rd, if necessary, last night.

In Football, Arts '77 avenged their Rugby loss by beating P.H.E., 14-7 and Arts '76 defeated an injury-riddled Commeree '76 team, 10-3. In the 1st game of the finals on Monday, Arts '76 and Arts '77 met, like Rugby, in a rematch of last years finals which the senior team won. This year though the 1st game was taken by Arts '77 by a 7-0 score Dave Knight scored the touchdown on a 15 yard run. Dave Cape kicked the convert.

Softball and Innertube Waterpolo are both finishing soon. Hockey is continuing. Arts '76 lost its first game in 2 years, in a well-deserved 3-1 win by Comm '77. Commerce '76 is 3 and 0; Arts '78, Arts '77, Mechanical are all 2-0. Broomball began its season this week.

Ree League Hockey has caught on with 18 leams entered. There will be a Managers' Meeting on Monday, Nov. 10 at 7:00 pm in Classroom A-B to discuss the financing of the league.

There will be an athletic stiek meeting next Wednesday

Late Flash:

Comm'76 7 P.H.E. 3 (triple overtime)
(Comm '76 wins Rugby final, 2-0)
Arts '77 8 Arts '76, 0
(Arts '77 wins Football final 2-0)

Gray proposals

The AMS Court decided Monday night that John Gray's loss of student status meant loss of AMS membership; the inevitable conclusion was that he is no longer AMS President. The office office of President is therefore vacant, and an Executive election must be held within 30 days.

Ian Nordheimer, AMS Vice-President (Operations) is Acting AMS President until a new Executive is elected at a date set by Outer Council.

Whether John Gray will be able to let his name stand in the upcoming election will be determined by students who attend tomorrow's AMS General Meeting. (All students may vote at a General Meeting.)

Several motions to alter the AMS Constitution so that John Gray could be eligible for the AMS Presidency may be brought to the meeting. The Constitution states that the AMS President must be a member of the Alma Mater Society. John Gray no longer belongs to the AMS because he is not a student. If, however, he were made a member, he would be eligible for the office of AMS President.

Outer Council could propose a motion to suspend By-law 8, Section 3-a that "The President and Vice-Presidents of the AMS running as a team shall be elected by the student body at large." If this motion were supported by the majority of students present at tomorrow's meeting, then the AMS President would not have to be a Queen's student at the time of his election. Gray would be allowed to run for AMS President.

Another possible motion may be proposed to change the constitution so that any person receiving either the majority of votes at a General Meeting or via referendum, or receiving the unanimous support of Outer Council, could become a member of the AMS. (See article below by T. Collins.) If this were passed, Gray could become a member of the AMS, and so could anyone else. Gray, along with other non-students, would thus be eligible to run for AMS President.

A motion could be proposed that the AMS Board of Directors be requested to make John Gray a member of the AMS retroactive to Sept. 1, thus making him eligible for election. As suggested in the Queen's Journal editorial, Oct. 31, it is doubtful that the Directors would comply with this request, and it would be a mockery of the student government if they exerted their corporate power in this way.

Approval of these motions by a majority of students at tomorrow's meeting could put John Gray back in the running.

But none could make him a student, and none could solve the problem of whether the AMS President should be a student. None could erase the haunting feeling that it has been generally understood and accepted that the Queen's student government should have a President who himself is a student, and that this understanding should be altered only after due consideration and informed debate.

Opinion: Best way out?

Terry Collins

Perhaps the most logical proposal made to date in resolving the "John Gray Affair" is the following:

A motion is made at the General Meeting that the students make a Constitutional addition to this effect: "That any individual may be made a member of the AMS upon a) a unanimous vote by Outer Council or b) winning a simple majority vote in a referendum or at a General Meeting."

The obvious motion to follow this one, if accepted by the student body on Saturday, would be "That John Gray be made a member of the AMS."

This would make John Gray eligible for the position of AMS President. It would also relieve the AMS Board of Directors from the responsibility of exercising a power it would hesitate to use. It would give the students the ability to authorize a non-student to run for a key AMS position in the event that no student wants the job at any time in the future.

It's constitutional, it's simple, and it's functional

Reasons for decisions

Dear Editors,

I am writing to clarify the article which appeared in the Journal of Tuesday, November 4. The Court was very strongly urged to find some way of permitting John Gray to complete his term by counsel for Outer Council. Our job is simply to decide questions based on the rules set out in the Constitution and Bylaws of the AMS; we do not have any mandate to rewrite the document. Having decided that John Gray's loss of student status meant loss of membership in the AMS; the inevitable conclusion was that the office was vacant and new elections must be held.

However, having been asked to find a way of permitting John Gray to complete his term, the Court went on to outline several alternative methods. The Court is neutral on the question of whether John Gray should complete his term; it is just not a question we may consider. The procedure set out in the Journal was strongly recommended as the procedure to be followed if the decision were made to permit John Gray to complete his term. The reason it was recommended, over the other alternatives, is that it requires a positive decision of each policy determining body of the AMS, Inc.; that is, the Board of Directors, the General Meeting and student body at large, and Outer Council. If each of these bodies constitutionally decides that the term should be completed there can be no doubt about the legitimacy of the incumbent.

In closing, the Court suggested ad hoc amendment because it feels that the question of the student status of the person holding the Presidency is too important to be decided for all time in a moment of crisis. The written reasons for both cases heard on November 3 will be completed by November 17 at the latest and will be made available to the Journal as was our practice last year.

Peter Wells
AMS Chief Justice.

Cross-country corrections

Dear Editors:

I would like to thank the Journal staff for its conscientious reporting and photographing of the Cross Country team's exploits over the past season. However, I would also like to point out that a little more care could have been taken in naming the picture in Tuesday's issue.

The photo in Tuesday's edition, of the runner wearing Number 35, was not "Young Ian" Gale but was veteran Mark Fields. Since it is Mark's final year at Queen's, it would be nice to have the record set straight; after all, who wants to be confused with an upstart rookie?

Secondly, one expects a certain number of spelling mistakes in every article, but they seem to have been plaguing the same team members all season long. Hardest hit has been our Sudbury man, Claus Rinne, who has never had his name printed correctly. (It came out on Tuesday as Klaus Rinaa!). He has requested that, if it continues to be impossible to spell his name properly, in future it would be better to write "The Long Tall Sunbeam" instead of attempting it. At least everyone would then know who it was being written about!

Impossible statement

Dear Editors,

A front page article in your newspaper of Tuesday entitled "All Aboard the UTC" states that the Travel Club is running "on the special permission of...John Wilson..."

I have no idea where this information came from. I have never spoken to Murray O'Shea in my life. What's more, the question of a Travel Club would be the responsibility of the Q.S.A. director and the Vice-President (Operations). I have nothing to do with giving permission or not giving permission for the establishment of serviees.

I appreciate that this may have been an honest mistake on the behalf of Mr. Bartlett. However, I would hope that there is enough knowledge of the AMS at the Journal to realize that the above statement is fundamentally wrong.

Your obedient servant,
John D Wilson
Vice-President (University Affairs)
Alma Mater Society

Opinion

Have we forgotten?

Brian Copeland

We are a generation who have forgotten those who died in the cause of freedom. Mrs. A.C. Douglas in a letter to the Whig-Standard's Cliff Bowering noted, "The young people under 30 have no idea what you are talking about if you bring up 'war'. They don't care either, because all of it took place in the older people's lifetime, not theirs."

The Frontenac County Board of Education reasoned that children have forgotten and do not understand what Remembrance Day is for, and so they moved the school holiday to Monday the tenth. Even an Ontario Legion has decided to change the day because it inconveniences the hunters.

The torch that was handed to us, the torch of freedom, has gone out. Our concern for self has caused us to forget those who died over thirty years ago. With valour and courage they died for the hope of a free world. To them we owe a moment of remembrance.

There is no greater love than to lay down your life for another. The love of those men and women who died in the two World Wars was unbounded. Only by remembering them can we truly understand the love and the hope that they sent to us, through their deaths.

On Tuesday at 11:00 a.m., I ask you to stop and share a moments silence, as we consider the privilege of freedom, and remember those who died for us. The cost is too high to forget.

Election not needed Council may approve president

The power to appoint an AMS President was extended to Outer Council at a well attended General Meeting of the Society held Saturday in Wallace Hall.

The controversy surrounding the office of President was sparked when former AMS President John Gray withdrew as a student at Queen's last month. The AMS Court last week declared Gray ineligible for office because the current AMS Constitution requires that the AMS President be a student.

The AMS then faced the prospect of having to call an election to fill the post for the 16 weeks remaining in the Executive's term of office. With these additional powers, Council will have the option of appointing a new President, if calling an election should be unfeasible.

Considerable discussion at the meeting centred around whether the AMS President should be required to be a student. One student commented that just as the Canadian Prime Minister must be a Canadian citizen, the AMS President should be a student. Jennifer Wilding, a first year Psychology student, answered, "There are more Canadians who care about being the Prime Minister than there are Queen's students who care about the AMS."

Robert Wood, a fourth year Commerce student and member of the AMS Board of Directors objected. "We need a politician, not just an administrator." A non-student would only be an administrator of the AMS services, only a student could be the politician, representing students on student issues.

ASUS President Bob Atkinson explained the proposal which came to the meeting from Outer Council. He said that ideally, the students would be given a chance to elect a new President, but "a time limit comes into this." Outer Council has been elected by the students, he stressed. "Why should there be an election when the other two members' positions are jeopardized?"

Several motions to reinstate John Gray as AMS President, with the co-operation of the Board of Directors, were defeated at the meeting by students who preferred that the AMS President be a student.

AMS sanctions referendum issues

Three issues concerning student fees will be taken to the students in fall referenda this month.

Students will be asked to fund community service programs such as Telephone Aid Kingston, Student Volunteer Bureau, Birth Control and Information Referral Service, the Drug Centre, and Teleclinic with a specific 75 cent student fee. Presently these programs are funded, in part, by general AMS funds.

A second issue involves university athletic program and facilities: students must decide if the University Athletic Fee shall be increased from $20 to $25, and if an Athletic Facilities Users' fee of $7.50 shall be established to provide funds for the capital repairs and maintenance of physical education facilities.

Whether the Student Health Service will be continued is a third issue; if they decide yes students will also have to decide if they wish to increase the Student Health Fee to $10, or maintain it at $6 with a corresponding reduction in the present level of service.

All three referenda questions ask if these fees should be tied to Consumer Price Index and adjusted annually in correspondence to the Index.

A motion to approve the charter of the University Travel Club was tabled at the Outer Council meeting on Thursday night.

Speaking on behalf of the club, Bernie Koch, QSA director of the AMS, asserted that the insurance level of the club is "certainly adequate". Rumours to the contrary had been circulating earlier this term. After inspecting the buses, Koch found the buses to be reliable and safe. Koch added that the club agreed that all books and funds were open to the AMS at any time.

Some debate arose over the fact that Don McVie is indirectly involved with the operation. McVie was involved with the AMS Excursion Club last year, a group that ran into financial difficulties. He is now coordinator of Venture Ways, the University Travel Club rents it buses from Venture Ways. Commenting on the situation, Ian Nordheimer, Vice-president Operations, stated that "it is a trade-off"; maybe people do not want to have anything to do with Don McVie, but does this university want a bus service."

Several Outer Council members expressed concern over the actual constitution presented by the club. Kathy Wood, ASUS rep, questioned the "Loop holes" in parts of the club constitution. In particular, one section permits the club to cancel an excursion if there is "insufficient participation by members". Wood stressed that "it's a little late at 5 o'clock to tell people they have to find another way to travel".

The club has been operating for some time as a non-official club and has run trips on Thanksgiving and on the Toronto football weekend.

In order for the club to become an official AMS club the constitution must be approved by Outer Council. The motion is expected to be brought from the table at the next regular Outer Council meeting.

No rice this term

Jim Avis, Education Commissioner, announced Thursday evening that the Oxfam Starvation Day, originally scheduled for November 20th, has been post-poned until "sometime next term". This is attributed to the fact that John Gray, ex-President of AMS, had been organizing the event and in the light of his sudden departure, Avis did not "see how we could put it on" on the scheduled date.

The purpose of the Starvation Day reflects the University's obligation "to recognize the problems of the world at large", said Avis. Students will be asked to forego one meal and contribute its money value to Oxfam.

SVB News

Where have all the volunteers gone? Only 180 students have signed up as volunteers and we at the Bureau are wondering why? Perhaps students aren't interested in helping people in Kingston as volunteers through the Student Volunteer Bureau? Is the work load heavier this year? Is everyone trying for first class honours? (must ask the faculty about that one!) Is it a lack of publicity? Is the Grey House too difficult to find? We are hunting for reasons, some we have found and are trying to remedy - others are up to you the student. Can't you spare an hour and a half a week? The variety of programmes should mean that practically every student should find a volunteer position that interests him-her.

— Swimming with emotionally disturbed kids.
— Swimming with retarded kids (Fri. mornings) or skating with retarded kids (Wed after 3 pm)
— The lunch programme will be starting in January.
— Scouting programme desperately needs bodies.
— Big brothers and Big Sisters.
— Two volunteers for the Community Forum Canada at St. Lawrence, Nov. 22, 8:30 to 5 pm (lunch provided).
— Our list goes on, and on, and on. Thank you to the students who have signed up. don't forget to stop by the office to pick up your Newsletter.

Although the Student Volunteer Bureau Executive and many agencies are disappointed at the low numbers of volunteers this year, an evening seminar for volunteers, students, faculty, and students is planned: the Red Room, Kingston Hall, Nov. 20 at 8 pm. "Juvenile Delinquents - the System and the Changing Laws" Among the panelists will be Ms. Hackett, a former Volunteer Officer and Judge Thompson of the Juvenile Court.

Come and listen and participate - sociologists, psychologists, lawyers, and Outlook trippers. More information will be published next week.

Come in to the office and volunteer! Second floor of the Grey House, 12:30 to 4:30 pm weekdays. See you!

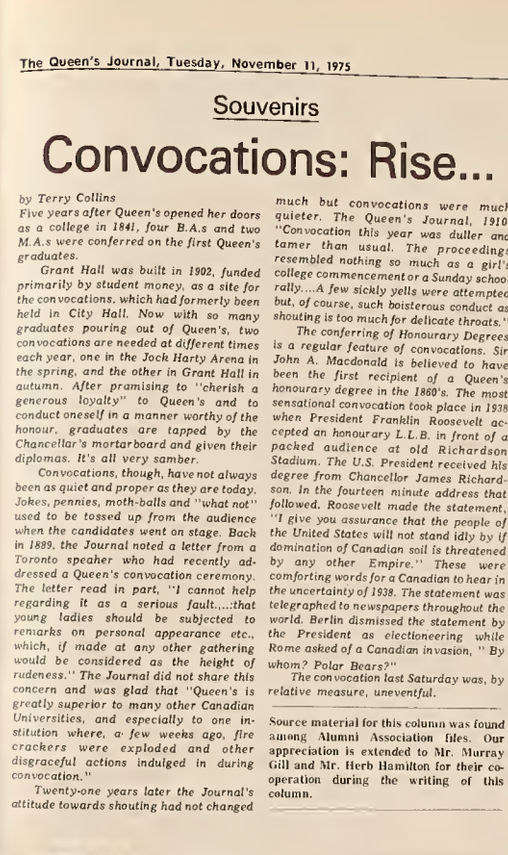
Convocations: Rise...

by Terry Collins

Five years after Queen's opened her doors as a college in 1841, four B.A.s and two M.A.s were conferred on the first Queen's graduates.

Grant Hall was built in 1902, funded primarily by student money, as a site for the convocations, which had formerly been held in City Hall. Now with so many graduates pouring out of Queen's, two convocations are needed at different times each year, one in the Jock Harty Arena in the spring, and the other in Grant Hall in autumn. After pramising to "cherish a generous loyalty" to Queen's and to conduct oneself in a manner worthy of the honour, graduates are tapped by the Chancellar's mortarboard and given their diplomas. It's all very samber.



Convocations, though, have not always been as quiet and proper as they are today. Jokes, pennies, moth-balls and "what not" used to be tossed up from the audience when the candidates went on stage. Back in 1889, the Journal noted a letter from a Toronto speaher who had recently addressed a Queen's convocation ceremony. The letter read in part, "I cannot help regarding it as a serious fault....that young ladies should be subjected to remarks on personal appearance etc., which, if made at any other gathering would be considered as the height of rudeness." The Journal did not share this concern and was glad that "Queen's is greatly superior to many other Canadian Universities, and especially to one institution where, a few weeks ago, fire crackers were exploded and other disgraceful actions indulged in during convocation."

Twenty-one years later the Journal's attitude towards shouting had not changed much but convocations were much quieter. The Queen's Journal, 1910, "Convocation this year was duller and tamer than usual. The proceedings resembled nothing so much as a girl's college commencement or a Sunday school rally....A few sickly yells were attempted but, of course, such boisterous conduct as shouting is too much for delicate throats."

The conferring of Honourary Degrees is a regular feature of convocations. Sir John A. Macdonald is believed to have been the first recipient of a Queen's honourary degree in the 1860's. The most sensational convocation took place in 1938 when President Franklin Roosevelt accepted an honourary L.L.B. in front of a packed audience at old Richardson Stadium. The U.S. President received his degree from Chancellor James Richardson. In the fourteen minute address that followed, Roosevelt made the statement, "I give you assurance that the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other Empire." These were comforting words for a Canadian to hear in the uncertainty of 1938. The statement was telegraphed to newspapers throughout the world. Berlin dismissed the statement by the President as electioneering while Rome asked of a Canadian invasion, "By whom? Polar Bears?"

The convocation last Saturday was, by relative measure, uneventful.

Source material for this column was found among Alumni Association files. Our appreciation is extended to Mr. Murray Gill and Mr. Herb Hamilton for their co-operation during the writing of this column.

The 57th Remembrance Day

The eleventh of November is nigh again,
On this date Remembrance Day did begin.
It will be the 57th to be exact.
I remember the first and do look back -
They seem to come in quick succession
And of them to us there is no recession.
We old boys of the Great War make no fuss,
But our thoughts return to then, by each of us.
We oft wonder what we fought for,
In that holocaust of the first Great War
We fought in trenches against the Hun,
And in Belgium and France it was not fun.
There was one hellhole named Corcellette
And that place I'll sure never forget.
With us were English, French, and Anzacs too.
Oft o'er the top we went as the clock struck two
There were Indians, and Yanks, all pals then.
How I pray there will never be the likes again.
Fifty-seven years have passed since the first Armistice Day,
We walk no more as the parade moves by our way,
We are old, our steps and slow, and our eyes do fail
And all of us pray that soon peace on earth will prevail.

AMS outer council

Smoke-screen clouds meeting

Giles Gherson

The amended motion "that the AMS Outer Council recommend to the Principal that all smoking in classrooms during classtime be prohibited," was finally defeated by Outer Council last Thursday evening, after a persistent and seemingly endless debate.

Little time was spent discussing the purpose of the motion: "People do get distracted when they get smoke blown in their faces", said Chris Nind, who had moved the recommendation. He held that "sitting in a smokey room is bad for one's health; moreover such a situation is unfair to the non-smoker". These points caused little controversy. Outer Council members being more concerned with how the problem was to be approached.

Initially the motion directed that the smoking recommendation be made to the Senate, however several members opposed this. John Wilson, Vice President, University Affairs, felt that such a motion "would present some humour in a Senate meeting" and that it "would not shine well on Outer Council". As an alternative he suggested that if the recommendation were made to the Principal, the latter could then make a ruling and take steps to effect a policy.

Wilson's amendment was passed despite some opposition. Nind considered that "It's a matter important enough for the Senate to look into," and pointed to the fact that the body has not looked into the smoking issue since 1947. In any event "The Senate is a more democratic body" claims Jamie Avis, Education Commissioner, who also felt that the recommendation should receive due consideration there.

Supremely democratic was Ian Nordheimer's suggestion to place the issue on the fall referenda and let the student decide. However, it was too late to introduce a motion to this effect.

Other suggestions indicate a preference for a class by class approach, considering it a problem to be sorted out between the individual professor and his class. However, this brought the problem back to square one; class agreements don't neeessarily guarantee the non-smoker's right to smokeless air.

As one Outer Council member stressed, "regulations would obligate people to sit up and take notice", either in terms of an outright ban on smoking in class, or a rule forcing professors to bring up the question in their class

Debating Union to Princeton

Graham Sellers

On Friday a Queen's debating team, consisting of George Gregory and Monte McMurchy, will depart for the annual Princeton Invitational Tournament. This is the most prestigious debate in North America, and the fact that we are among the chosen represents something of a victory for the fledgling Debating Union

Queen's had a long tradition of skill, success and excess in this art, which somehow petered into oblivion along the way. The Union was revived a few years ago; now, under the presidency of George Gregory, it is becoming a very active group. Last year we placed fifth at the McGill Invitational Tournament (the largest in North America), and more recently a team came third at the Hart House competition (Toronto). Last Tuesday witnessed a victory against St. Lawrence University of New York in a debate held at Queen's

The topic for debate is: "Be it resolved that extremism in the defence of liberty is no vice." Members of the Union expect, hope and pray that the team will do well. If you are interested in joining a team, debating or simply wish to hear more about the art, there is a meeting in the third floor common room of the Student Union Tuesday, November 11 at 7:30. There our returning representatives will either be praised and exalted or tarred and feathered, and at least two debates are planned. Upcoming tournaments include McGill and RMC

Community on the move

Peter Lane

In a sleepy rural community of 600 people just 80 miles north of Kingston is one of the most exciting and innovative projects of community development and services in Canada today. North Frontenac Community Services, centred in Sharbot Lake, is an organization which provides a dynamic system of community education and social service programmes throughout the northern townships of Frontenac County.

North Frontenac consists of the nine northern townships of the county covering about 1,000 square miles. The population of about 5,000 is widely distributed, with several small villages of about 100-150 each serving as centres. The land is rocky, with several lakes and is generally poor farm land. Over the past few decades the area has deteriorated economically. Once scattered with several small farms prosperous saw-mills and new railway developments, North Frontenac has become under populated and under employed. Employment is largely limited to summer tourism, a few minor construction projects and subsistence farming. The seasonal unemployment remained between 25-80 per cent.

Five years ago, the citizens of North Frontenac became disatisfied - no new industries were coming into the area, social services were based in urban communities 80-200 miles away, there was little opportunity for locally initiated projects to be successful, and citizens were losing control of local resources. In this setting, the citizens took the initiative to establish a comprehensive programme of community development and service delivery.

The programme has two primary activities - animation and services. Animation in North Frontenac has basically involved stimulating grassroots awareness of problems and involvement in activities. This has been done by establishing the North Frontenac News, a community newspaper that is widely distributed throughout the area and informs citizens of developments and services and to provide opinion. The Community Animator also serves to encourage the development of senior citizens groups, recreation communities, and civic action groups formed in an attempt to meet identifiable community needs (e.g. housing, transportation, economic development).

In the provision of community services, North Frontenac is the envy of rural and urban communities. A multi-service centre has been established in Sharbot Lake which is directed by a volunteer citizen's management council. The centre represents an integrated dynamic service bank for all of North Frontenac and offers such services as information on Family Benefits, Disability Pensions, OHIP, income tax advice, U.I.C. etc.

In addition, Queen's legal and visit twice a month and a Canada Manpower Outreach worker is available to provide information and counselling on employment opportunities, volunteer work income supplements etc.

An example of one of the many innovative developments in the area is the transportation system. It became apparent that transportation was a real problem when the medical clinic and service centre attempted to service such a large area.

To meet the perceived need, a Transportation Committee was struck. It examined several proposals and decided that the most feasible one was to develop a bank of volunteer drivers. The North Frontenac Community Services then presented a brief to the government and requested funds to reimburse drivers for mileage costs. The government granted their request on a trial basis and the system now is operational.

The developments in North Frontenac are indeed exciting. They represent a coordinated approach towards community development and services. Moreover they represent a stimulating example of what a small rural community can do when it decides to pull itself up by the bootstraps and work co-operatively towards self-improvement.

Futurology

Chomsky is right. The university is a status quo preserving apologist for society. Universities gather biased data on the "is" of society, and try to show that "ought" follows.

If social, political and economic theory has any value, the university should be boldly prescriptive, as well as descriptive. The more we know about our society, the more we should be able to create a better society.

Elrond's second Integrative Education seminar, Futurology - Creating World II, will consider the tools now available for controlling, anticipating and planning the reconstruction of society according to a holistic view of the historical process. Yes, the day of Open House is at hand. On Saturday, Queen's is opening its showcase to Kingston-which includes us.

So what are we going to show to Kingston?

The Music Department has a smashing display which will strike a chord in everyone's heart. From 8 to 9 pm on Friday the 14th, in the Music Building, there will ba a piano quintet playing the first movement of the Trout Quintet; then comes a brass quintet, a trio composed of harpsichord, flute, and guitar.

The Film Studies people are showing a lecture and demonstration that night in the Film Studies Building.

On Saturday, the Languages Departments are bringing the atmosphere of Old Europe to Kingston Hall with displays, and a Kaffeeklatsch in the Red Room.

The Drama Guild is presenting at 3 pm in Convocation Hall a workshop on the designing and directing of the play, the Government Inspector, which they are presenting that week. In the Theology Building, the Drama Department will be conducting tours of the backstage and costuming departments. They are presenting, "On the Air", a simulation taping of the 1950's radio play, Angel of Death and an original play.

The International Centre has a Caravan Display with arts and crafts of different countries from 10 to 5 and 7 to 10 pm.

And how about a tour of the Anatomy Museum? The Anatomy people are also showing a display of the electronic microscope.

The Biology Department is conducting tours of the Greenhouse and Herbarium in Earl Hall. The Chemistry Department is presenting a lecture and show in the Frost Wing. The Sociology Department is showing a reproduction of the photographic exhibition of the Family of Man which was displayed in New York. And the Engineering people are bringing all sorts of displays.

But where do you start on Saturday, November 15? Mackintosh-Corry Hall is the centre of action and that's where you get your programmes. And if any strangers ask you for directions to Mac-Corry, be obliging, it's not easy to find.

On Saturday night, there's a coffee house in Lower Ban Righ cafeteria with folksingers John and Hugh Greenwood. It starts at 9 and it costs only a dollar.

There's more, much more that we're offering to Kingston.

The capacity for love & compassion

Dear Editors,
This letter is concerning the attitude John Nebel so forcefully put across in last Friday's Journal on the homophile association. His opinion deeply upset me, not because I haven't heard similar opinions since I arrived at Queen's, but because it reinforced the futility I have felt since arriving.

I came to this university with many of the same hopes and dreams that are typical of a first-year student. And like many others, I was unsure about how I would get on. I suffered homesickness, a drop of grades and a shattering of the illusions I had about university life. This is very natural and was a growing and uplifting experience. Yes, I thought, if I could adjust, if I could adapt, I'd be happy here at Queen's.

But I found the milieu at Queen's could not adjust to me. I was, by their definition, "queer". It shocked me that, while almost every campus in North America had homophile groups, Queen's did not. Not knowing this at first, I stopped people in hallways and inquired where the campus gay centre was. After finding this a totally inadequate system, as well as mortifying, I investigated via the telephone. This action proved equally futile. Counsellors confused "gay groups" with 'gael groups" and upon discovering my dilemna, referred me to student health services.

I wondered why I had never been political and I realized it was because I had never been in a situation where my sexuality obliterated every other faculty of my person. I had always believed that it was just one detail, one characteristic, in the enormity of my personality. I never saw the world divided up into "straights" and "gays" until I came to Queen's. I just saw everyone as a person. Granted, I felt the need for gay company, but in the same way a music student seeks out the company of another music student.

this while, I was never wholly convinced that the situation could not change. I felt that if I was reasonable, other people would be reasonable too.

John, I was one of the people instrumental in setting up the Homophile Association. For me, it was a reactionary move and an attempt to help out other people who found themselves in a situation similar to mine. You implied in your letter that QHA had a purpose of recruiting "innocents" and providing sexual pleasures for its members. I feel sorry about that and I feel sorry for you. If I used your brand of logic I could easily infer that the university itself is a facade for the sexual gratification of its students. Sex, sex, sex. you refer to the word homophile as one would refer to the word homosexual. This leads me to think you do not understand its meaning. Homophile simply means a capability to love someone of the same sex. A homosexual has sex with someone of the same sex, regardless of whether he-she cares about the individual. I am a homophile; I love members of my own sex. I am a homosexual; I have sexual relations with members of my own sex. The sexual relationships are not the central focus - they are merely another expression of the affinity I feel for other women.

I am not ashamed of what "I am"-I still believe it is just another part of my character. I am a homophile, I am a student, I am a female, I am 19 years old, and I am a redhead. So what? Yes, so what, indeed! I do not believe that my sexual orientation or my emotional orientation undermine my status as a person. What I believe is that other people erroneously believe that concept. I think that the purpose of QHA is to show people like yourself that we are not "queer" and to ask you to evaluate an opinion you have probably borrowed and might have never objectively examined. I totally support Queen's Homophile and I think a community service like it has been badly needed in Kingston for many years. Your attitude proves the need. The question that worries me is whether you can be cured, not me!

John, I sign my name to this letter. It makes it fully mine; it defines a part of me. The courage comes from the fact that I cannot be personally assaulted for my openness. I know in several days I will be at Antioch College in Ohio. Many of the homophile association members do say "Let's be open" and "we need not be ashamed" - and this is good. That is how it ought to be, but that is not how it is. The realization does not make us hypocrites.

The reason why it cannot be open and utopian, right now, is because of people like yourself. I know that acceptance and openness is the ultimate goal of QHA; I also know it will take time. I'm convinced it can happen and it can happen even at Queen's.

Sincerely
Jayne Coulter

P.S. And John I am not a "Queen" (?whatever that is) - I am a princess!

Nebel depressing

Dear Editors,
In a time when everyone is trying so desperately to free themselves from exploitation, oppression and persecution - women, blacks in America, homosexuals, third world country peoples - a letter such as that written by John Nebel (Queen's Journal, Friday, November 7) is extremely depressing.

Alan Dolan

Freedom to live

Dear Editors,
I know that this letter will be laughed at. I know that it will be made the butt of many jokes in residence washrooms. I know that it sounds as if I have a martyr complex; and yet this letter has to be written, so bear with me please.

Why won't people try to understand? Why do people take such delight in causing other people pain? It certainly does not seem to me the mark of the socially or morally mature human being of today's society.

So why the continued jokes at the expense of homosexuals? Does this prove to someone that he or she is superior to us? Does this really help them think more of themselves? I'm sure there are more constructive ways to vent this wasted energy than in maligning an already overtasked segment of the population with insults that, considering where they come from, go in one ear and out the same.

It is sad, very sad, to think that there are people who will not try to understand, people who have developed a 'holier than thou' attitude and must try to prove it, (mostly to themselves, I'm afraid).

Well, they have certainly proved something to me; this being that the Queen's Homophile Association is needed on campus. As long as there are people who refuse to understand, refuse to try to live in harmony with their neighbours, refuse to respect the eishes and needs of others, then organizations such as ours will be required.

I like to think that a majority of people on campus enjoy living and seeing others enjoy life. That is why I am signing my name. I'm not ashamed. Yet, if there are people who feel they must sign 'anonymous', can we blame them? As long as there are people like John Nebel (Journal, Nov. 7) around, 'anonymous' will be a most popular correspondent.

Eric Hughes

SQ semi-formal

Dear Editors,
I would like to thank Ms. Wilding for her letter to the Journal in the previous issue. She has brought to the forefront a very important issue – namely the extremely low numbers of students who were allowed to attend the recent Suzie-Q Semi-Formal. As Ms. Wilding says, "Queen's has an enrolment of almost ten thousand students and 195 tickets is not adequate."

I would like to point out, however, that the low number of tickets offered was in no way the choice of either the Suzie-Q Committee or ASUS. The capacity of each room on campus which can be used for a social function is limited by law (according to liquor licence regulations). Leonard Hall, in fact has a capacity of approximately 400 students, which is somewhat higher than almost all other areas on campus.

Furthermore, the committee and I approached other persons on campus to attempt to gain access to other on-campus locations as well as Leonard for the dance, including the two AMS pubs and Women's Residences. The persons in charge, the AMS and the Women's Residence Business Office, respectively, refused to allow the use of those facilities, for various reasons. I mention this to point out the fact that many of the areas on campus which might have been used to allow more people to attend the dance are under such strict control that they can't be used by students. While the reasons given by various persons as to why we couldn't use their facilities were quite valid in most cases (e.g. the AMS stated that they could not disrupt a 6-day per week, yearly service to the campus), at the same time it means that it has become close to impossible for any student to run an on-campus social event of the magnitude of Suzie-Q Week.

With respect to those students who waited in line for such a long time to get tickets for the various events (particularly the Semi-Formal), I agree that it is a poor method of organizing the ticket sales in many respects. It has been suggested that perhaps in the future a lottery system would be used (not only for Suzie-Q), i.e. all persons would put their names in a container and the number of tickets to be sold would be drawn randomly. This method might have some advantages and I would like to hear comments on the idea.

I would like to thank the organizers of the week for a job well done in the face of many adversities, particularly liquor license regulations. I think that a lot of ingenuity was shown, as people who attended the Mackintosh-Corry Street Dance, for example, know. As far as organizational improvement for next year's Suxie-Q Week, Jennifer, why don't you help out then?

Favourtism

Dear Editors,
I do not wish my name to appear at the end of this letter in the hopes that what I have to say will not be taken personally. I know that my views are shared by many, both those who were involved, and those who were not.

Last Wednesday, at 8:30am, I received a call from my girlfriend, imploring me to come down to the union and take shifts with her in the Susie-Q Semi-formal ticket line. Agreeing with her that she shouldn't skip all her classes or miss her midterm that morning, and not wanting her to suffer through a five hour wait on the cold floors of the Union halls, I went to relieve her.

I wasn't terribly shocked to see a few sleeping bags, but I was stunned to find out that the first people in line had been there since 4:45 am. I thought to myself 'Wow, there's either something very special or something pretty stupid about this lunch of kids. Whatever the verdict might have been, I sat down and tried to do a little work at our place in line (just a few paces from the no. 65 cut-off point).

At 11:00, the organizers showed up, ignoring the list that had already been passed around, and started a list of their own. Oddly enough, they stopped at 57. When asked why, they said that 'some one' (that omnipresent 'other guy' had oversold the day before, and that would either leave or else wait until 1:00 for the 'hope' (ha!) that someone would drop out (or, more likely, drop dead!).

I do not understand how this could stand there and say: "It's our prerogative as to how many tickets we sell. The advertising was supposed to say 'about 65 tickets a day'. Somebody made a mistake last night and sold too many". (Does that make sense to anybody?)

I do not understand why a sign could not have been put up Wednesday morning, stating that there had been a mistake made, an apology was due, but nothing could be done about it; there would have been some grumbling, but I don't think there would have been any hard feelings, as it was tempers flared.

I do not understand why friends of the organizers could be promised that tickets would be set aside for them.

I do not understand why the organizers felt that they had to go to the Susie-Q Semi "because of the forty of fifty hours we worked on it"; they fail to realize that there are many people who put that much time each week into extra-curricular activities. Why deny those people a chance to relax?

I do not understand why the girls had to be kept waiting until 1:00pm before the tickets could be sold; as soon as 65 people are in line, and as soon as practicable, the tickets should be sold.

Bitter? No. We said to heck with Queen's on Saturday, ventured out into the wilds of Kingston, and had a fantastic time! Confused? Yes. I simply do not understand.

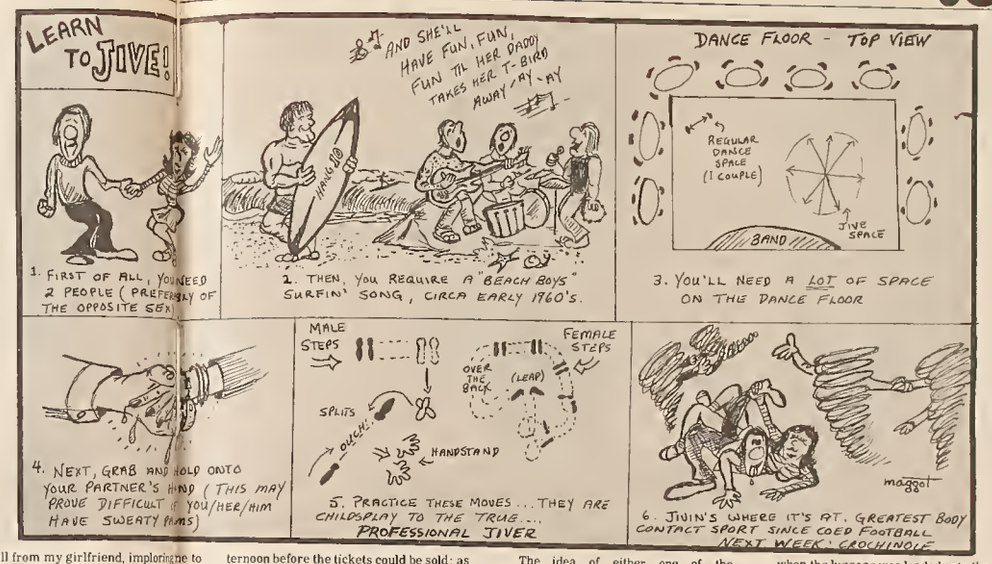
Revive social whirl



Dear Editors,
In the words of the AMS presidential staff, Queen's students on the whole are showing apathy towards the events put on at Queen's. I would like to present myself as a person who is not apathetic, not to defend myself, but there is becoming a greater lack of social events being put on.

Where can we lay the blame in this case? Immediately the blame falls on the university because it would like to see the debt of some $20,000.00 be paid back which is only proper, but why put a 50 percent tax before expenses on all events to be run. This was done because obviously the AMS is not prepared to offer any viable alternative.

I would like to propose one way in which this money might be collected and that would be to increase the Student Activity Fee by $2.00 for one year of $.50 for a period of four years, just as they have done to raise money to pay for the addition to the present Students Union. Or even to continue a $.50 - $1.00 fee indefinitely to help improve upon the facilities within the union, after the $20,000.00 debt has been paid.

The unfortunate part about trying to get this increase, it must be put through a refcrendum. To my disappointment Mr. Nordheimer VP of the AMS has been very emphatic about this point, NO WAY!! without even giving it a chance.

In that case I would like to propose a viable alternative. Why not put a $.25 levy upon entering either one of the present pubs. This could be done at no extra cost, as it could be done by one of the AMS constables who is already present on the doors. This idea of a fee has already been implemented by another Ontario University at twice the fee ($.50) and it does not seem to defer people from supporting the pub financially.

The idea of either one of the aforementioned ideas is not going to appeal to the students of Queen's, but at the present time Science '76 is preparing for a loss on their Science Formal and do not plan, at the present, to put on any other functions to help raise money to finance the formal, as they do not want to bear one loss upon another.

This is only one year of one faculty that is abandoning social functions for fear of receiving a loss. How many others are in the same predicament?

At this point I am willing to look into the future of social activities at Queen's and see them dying, or maybe almost, already dead.

My appeal then is to the AMS to use one of these alternatives or come up with an alternative of their own to help bring a revival back to the Social Functions that Queen's has been known for in the past

UTC has problems

Dear Editors,
I read with great interest Ross Bartlett's article, "All aboard the UTC", published in Tuesday's Journal and feel that I must compliment Mr. Bartlett on his objectivity, knowing that he too, has been a victim of the UTC's incompetence.

Initially, I was impressed by the convenience and economy which the University Travel Club offered. In my typically idealistic fashion, I felt I had discovered a system which would save me time, trouble, and money. The Toronto Football Weekend lived up to this image and I must agree with Mr. O'Shea that it did go "perfectly". However, I take strong exception to his other comments.

Having purchased a ticket for Toronto leaving the evening of Friday, October 10, I was dismayed to find that the bus arrived at Ellis Hall even later than the scheduled departure time from that point. My dismay changed to utter amazement when we on the bus learned that the driver had no idea of the route to Toronto, nor the stops he should make and, in addition, had no gas or money with which to obtain it. My misgivings were further intensified when the luggage was loaded onto the bus, completely blocking off the back emergency exit, an arrangement, I'm sure, which must be unlawful. Upon arrival in Toronto, the driver missed the Victoria Park stop and we were forced to retrace our path through a section of Scarborough unknown to all in the bus, including our driver. This wasted precious minutes valuable to those who were hoping to be on time for connections leaving Union Station.

In spite of my hopes, the return trip was no better. Departure time from Union Station on Monday, October 13 was scheduled to be 8:00 p.m. However, as before, the first bus again arrived past departure time, was filled, and then left Toronto, leaving two-thirds of the students still standing on Front Street. The last two buses reached Union Station well after 9:00 p.m. and our departure time was 9:30 p.m. 1½ hours late. We arrived at Queen's shortly before 1:00 a.m. and disembarked, not at the scheduled stop of Ellis Hall, but in front of the Student Union, forcing those of us living in the women's residences to walk at least twice as far as had been anticipated, very tired at that late hour and loaded down with luggage.

I am surprised that Mr. O'Shea should emphasize the insurance coverage of the bus service, although he seems to be confused, if quoted correctly in the article, which first claimed that the coverage is five million dollars "per person per bus" and then contradicted itself by explaining that the insurance paid is five million dollars per bus, regardless of the number of people filing claims. However, this issue of coverage ceases to be important when one considers the sobering thought that the money would be of no importance to the student who is burned or seriously injured in the wreckage of a bus and could not be reached because the exit was blocked by luggage. Melodramatic though this may sound, accidents do happen.

Perhaps the poor service was the fault of the company from whom the buses were leased. In that case, the UTC should definitely consider selecting another company with which to do business. However, my contract was with the UTC which did not provide the services promised and I expect adequate compensation for this or, at the very least, an explanation, neither of which I, nor to my knowledge any of the other passengers, received. Perhaps this was just an oversight which may yet be rectified. Regardless, nothing can compensate for wasted time and frustration. Therefore, in the future I will seek more reliable (and much more comfortable) means of transportation to and from Queen's and I suggest to you, Murray O'Shea, that your problems aren't "all behind you now".

Mac-Corry dance

Dear Editors,
Hey, did I ever have a great time at the Mac-Corry Dance! Why haven't people thought of holding dances there before? It's a perfect spot – you can dance around the quad, relax in the lounge areas and hit the vending machines. Riding the elevator to the bar on the fourth floor was kind of neat. Compared to Grant Hall the atmosphere was terrific! The ceilings were low, and it wasn't just one big box. You could circulate a lot easier.

I heard the semi-formal was crowded - - why didn't they hold it in Mac-Corry? I think every organization on campus should consider Mac-Corry as a place to hold dances.

T.G.I.F.??

Dear Editors,
Regarding the advertisement which appeared in the Journal on page 8 of the November fourth edition titled "Thank God It's Friday"

We would like to thank whatever powers there may be beyond the Administration for sparing us the weekly gross out at 157 King East.

This should not be taken as a left-handed compliment to the Administration.

It may be taken as a comment on the habit of those who frequented the city's most dependable downer

Yours truly,
Alan Gummo and others

Vandalism

Dear Editors,
In the "Gray Affair", the Journal opposed "situational ethics" This is all very fine. In the "Pollution Affair", it supports them. This is not so fine.

What happened to the 'Pollution' sculpture is an act of vandalism, pure and simple. It is a classier, albeit cuter form of taking a hammer to the Pieta. Its only good point is that the damage done can be undone fairly easily.

The sculpture was meant to be ugly, not funny, and no-one has the right to deface an artist's work in the way that "Pollution" was.

British film society honours Satyajit Ray

THE MUSIC ROOM

Satyajit Ray's mistful feelings for the old ways of life in India, for the troubled souls of a sensitive people confronted with great social change are revealed again in another of his slow, sad and lovely Indian films, "the Music Room." Here he is augustly concerned with the tragic decay of a great landowner who cannot adjust to change. It is in and around this richly ornamented music room of his great crumbling palace that the whole film serenely, slowly turns, never getting much farther from it than the broad terraces that face the empty fields. It is here that he has his last glorious musical. It is outside this room that he gets the cruel word of the death of his wife and son.

LONDON, October 10: Satyajit Ray, whose films have won international acclaim, has been chosen by the British federation of film society as the most distinguished world film director of the last half century.

The society, which celebrates its 50th anniversary this month, will honour Ray on October 25.

Comedy comes on strong

Alan Mann

The Queen's Drama Department has opened its 1975-76 season of three major productions with Peter Raby's adaptation of Nikolai Gogol's The Government Inspector under the direction of Brian Meeson. The play is the first comedy to be produced by the Drama Department since Rod Robertson's direction of As You Like It in the spring of 1973.

The play deals with the corrupt administration of a small provincial town in Russia and the panic that occurs at the arrival of a government inspector. Certain points of the play are outdated, but Meeson's contention that "the play is entirely about politics in 1975" (Queen's Journal, November 4, 1975) is quite accurate.

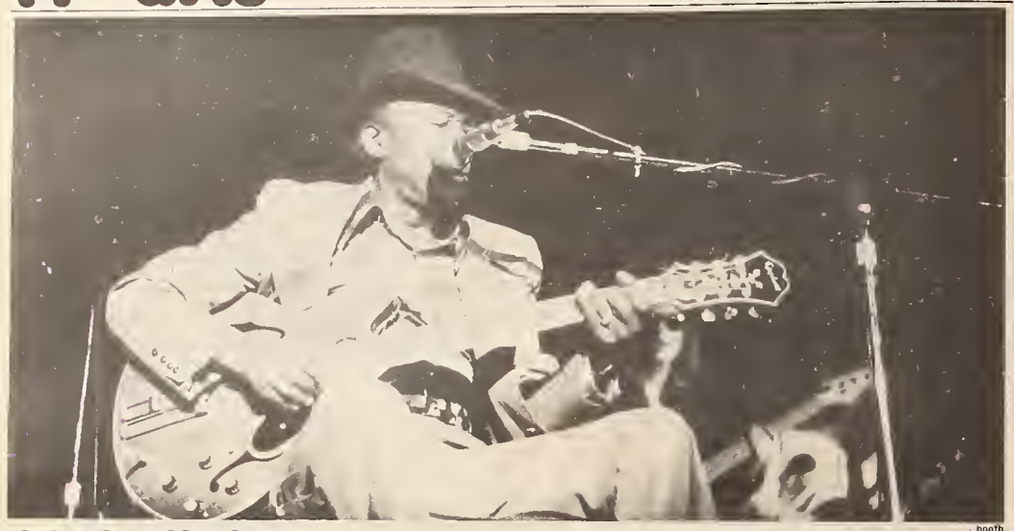
Although there is humour in the situation of the play, and a few good laughs in the writing, much of the humour stems from the characters themselves. Little energy, if any at all, went into "milking the play for whatever it's worth" and instead Meeson's actors worked on establishing Gogol's grotesque characters. For the most part, they were successful.

The Mayor, played by Mike Saver, and Klestakov, played by Bruce Kyle were complete, well-rounded characters. The work that went into creating these two characters was apparent, and they were far from being stereo-types. While the same can also be said of the minor characters and the bit roles, 22 in total, it is not so with the supporting actors. Most, with the exception of Brenda Finley and Vicki Saunders as Bobchinsky and Dobchinsky, were one dimensional. For some this was due to problems stemming from opening night jitters, yet for others it was due to lack of characterization.

Tony Abram's set, with its many doors and forced perspective, worked quite well when used properly, however there were times when the effects of the forced perspective were overlooked and minor characters appeared to be too strong or a character's strength seemed to change for no particular reason. Although not overly serious, the resulting effects were disturbing.

Meeson's use of a tableau to open the play and a series of tableaux to close the play would have worked if it were not for movements in the background. The most memorable of these was during the Mayor's final speech when Marya, the Mayor's daughter played by Nora Poole, constantly wrung her hands while the rest of the cast remained frozen. Although her positioning at that particular moment of the play might justify her movement, it in no way explains it.

Apart from the two principal roles of the Mayor and Klestkov, worthy of an honourable mention are Morrie Sinkins as Avdotya, the old maid; Dr. William Angus as the mumbling Dr. Gibner; Glen Piper as Klestakov's realistic manservant, Osip; and Phil Tarrant as the every-ready Sgt. Derzimorda.



Meeson's direction of the play is a worthwhile investment and a pleasing pastime. His prediction that The Government Inspector would be a "strong performance" was not an exaggeration.

The play continues this Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights in Convocation Hall in the Theology Building. Tickets are available at the door, or can be reserved by calling 547-6291.

Festival Ensemble coming to Queen's

The Performing Arts Office in conjunction with the Stratford Festival and the Kitchener-Waterloo Symphony Orchestra Association Inc. is presenting, on Wednesday November 12, the Stratford Festival Ensemble, in Grant Hall. The Stratford Festival Ensemble is a new Canadian group that was formed under the sponsorship of the Stratford Festival and the Kitchener-Waterloo Symphony Orchestra Association Inc. in 1975. The Ensemble brings together a group of highly talented musicians, many of whom have already earned renown in music circles both in America and Europe. All the members of the Ensemble are principal players in the Kitchener-Waterloo Symphony Orchestra.

This fifteen member ensemble of strings, brass, and winds is the resident musical group at the Stratford Festival. The size and versatility in instruments permits the performance of a vast repertoire of chamber music, demanding from soloists to the full fifteen.

Included in the programme will be works by various artists from Joplin to Bach. The general admission rate is $3 and $4 with a $1. discount for students and senior citizens. For further information, contact the Performing Arts Office at 547-5786.

Grass at the Grounds

Cynthia Davie

Where were you when the lights went out? People sitting by candlelight in the comfortable atmosphere of the Bitter Grounds coffee house were enjoying the music of the Dixie Flyers. This five-man group promised "bluegrass as it should be played" and nobody present disagreed. 'Twas a night of homespun, hand-clappin', foot-stompin' fun.

Songs like "Send me your address from Heaven", or the instrumental piece "Five foot two", ("We used to sing this but the results were disasterous") characterized the band's easy-going style which the audience loved. One of the hits of the evening was "Foggy Mountain Breakdown" from the movie Bonnie and Clyde. Lester Flatt and Jimmie Martin tunes as well as some original material provided solo work for individual members. Denis Le Page's banjo picking was incredible, and at the leader's invitation we watched Dave Finlay go wild on the upright bass, playing below the bridge of the instrument and using it as a percussion section in a unique version of Grandfather's Clock. But as a group, their music was smooth and tight, blended with an expertise surprising for a band that has been together only one and a half years.

The Flyer's home base is London, Ont., but three of its members come from Toronto. Bob Baumbach, leader and guitarist, is "the best bluegrass player in Canada", according to the others, but the entire group is composed of excellent musicians. Each one carefully studied other musicians in his file and adapted different techniques to create an original style. The band's music is 90 percent bluegrass and 10 percent newgrass, with its American jazz and blues background. The Dixie Flyers is the only group in Ontario which plays traditional bluegrass. As a result, other artists such as Willie P Bennett, who played at Bitter Grounds last weekend, occasionally work with them. Marcel Ducette was imported from Cheticamp N.S. for the evening to supplement the fine fiddle playing of Bernie Jaffe.

The Flyers have travelled throughout the States and Canada and have attended various folk and bluegrass festivals. They enjoy being on the road because they meet a lot of great people, and they obviously love their music.

Baumbach remarked, near the beginning of the show, "Don't worry folks, the jokes get better and so does the music." How right he was!

with Flood on the way...

Laurie Flood was 12 years old at the time of her musical debut. She began as a pianist and cellist, and did exceptionally well with both. Soon after, she picked up the guitar and eventually started singing in stage performances and coffee houses. She has developed quite a name in her home town in Syracuse, N.Y. Her style is unique. One might quite justly compare it to Joni Mitchel one moment, and Bonnie Raite the next. She plays folk, blues, and good-driving-beat tunes. Her original tunes are nothing short of thought provoking and very creative. But to hear her sing them is to truly appreciate them. The mood created by the warm feelings and empathy she radiates adds another dimension to the audiences listening enjoyment. All for you on Nov. 15 at Bitter Grounds.

The recipe for an Adamant Eve

Donald Rayko

Go to the corpus of women's writings and extract snippets of letters, morsels of diaries and chunks of biographies. Season these with original poems. Mix well, dramatize and serve, garnished with music.

That is what Theatre 5 is serving up these days, theatre-in-the-round style, at the Brewery Lane Theatre. The three cast members, Diane Gordon, Valerie Robertson and Theresa Sears, are doing a technically professional job of it, together with guitarist Thomas Handy. Even if their occasional outbursts of song are ragged, they do trot out and exercise a wide range of energetic and varied faces, movements and postures, as they travel from vignette to vignette. Everyone is obviously trying hard and doing her best. For that alone the show is worth seeing.

The dissatisfactions that I have with Adamant Eve arise from the format itself. It is a collage, an anthology, a sampler of women's lives and works: it is a string of snippets. No episode lasts more than a few minutes. And with that constraint, no characterization is developed past two-dimensionality; they present only types. Gordon, Robertson and Sears have slick moves, but the breath of life is missing.

So where does one look for the essential sense of direction and the feeling of dramatic tension? They have to be found in the structural arrangement of the elements. Unfortunately they aren't. That the material was collected and directed by the entire cast may have something to do with it. Admittedly, the first episode devolves from a cloyingly precious juvenile diary and the last is an impressively underplayed demonstration of octogenerian attitudes toward that final stage of growth, death. But between these chronological anchors, vignette follows vignette without any apparent organization, intent, or dramatic direction. There is a sameness of pace and pitch that flirts with ennui.

Why have they done this show? Perhaps International Woman's Year has something to do with it. As an effort to demonstrate that women are valid subjects for art and viable creators of art, it makes good sexual political sense to mount a production that samples exclusively from women's works. But that is a political motivation, not an aesthetic one.

While Adamant Eve may be politically satisfying (—I found it so), and while individual sketches may be pleasing (—many were), before it becomes dramatically adequate the company of Adamant Eve must figure out their overall dramatic purpose, and shape their show accordingly. Without the benefit of a plot around which to organize their energies, specific attention will have to be paid to those abstract notions of pace, contrast, tension and dramatic direction.

The fragments are good, if only they can now make them into something

Hockey Gaels retain Dutch Cup

Tom Shand

Unfortunately for the fans, the first three games of the Dutch Cup Hockey Tournament at Jock Harty Arena this weekend were obvious mismatches which resulted in lopsided scores and somewhat boring games. However the championship game between the Ottawa Gee-Gees and the Queen's Golden Gaels more than compensated for the shortcomings of the previous matches as they treated the small crowd to a superb exhibition of hockey at its best. Gaels fought back from a two goal defieit in the third period to force the game into overtime where Kevin Treacy's goal after only 49 seconds gave the Gaels a hard fought 4-3 victory.

Ottawa and Queen's advanced to the championship by virtue of their 8-1 and 10-2 vietories on Friday night over R.M.C. and Laval respectively. In the consolation match preceding the final on Saturday afternoon Laval, still smarting from the shellacking they absorbed the previous night (which actually extended 45 minutes into Saturday morning), found a vent for their collective frustration in the hapless R.M.C. Redmen who fell victim to the Red and Golds by a 10-3 count.

With both teams emotionally charged up and characteristically chippy by nature it was feared and anticipated by many that the championship could provide more ammunition for William McMurty in his battle to combat violence in hockey. Although each team collected 20 minutes in penalties this did not detract whatsoever from the tremendous pace maintained for the full 60 minutes and 49 seconds by both teams. Goaltenders Clyde Harris of the Gaels and Jacques Richard of the Gee-Gees played exceptionally well in stopping 31 and 40 shots respectively.

Ottawa opened the scoring late in the first period when Joe Rieard finished off a classic 2 on 1 break by drilling a low shot past Harris. Pierre Guindon scored on a similar play with the Gaels shorthanded to give the Gee-Gees a 2-0 lead midway through the second frame. Bill Van Camp then struck back for the Gaels at the 15:14 mark of the second as he caught the Gee-Gees napping. While on penalty killing duty for the Gaels, Van Camp won a faceoff to the left of Richard and faked going around the net and with the Gee-Gees power play unit frozen in their tracks, he came in front and tucked the puck through Richard's legs.

Gee-Gees regained their two goal lead at the 6:51 mark in the third period on a hotly disputed goal which deflected off Gary Mahon's skate past the enraged Clyde Harris. Two minutes later Gaels received successive minor penalties against Arnoldi and Aubrey, giving the Gee-Gees a two man advantage. Aggressive forechecking kept Ottawa hemmed in their own end and forced the mistake which turned the game around as Bill White scored Queen's second shorthanded goal with Aburey still in the box. As White was allowed to move right in front of the surprised Jacques Richard who once again was victimized by his teammates careless defensive play.

At 18:27 of the third period the Gaels scored a picture goal as Doug Grills backhanded the puck from the faceoff directly onto the stick of Mike Haramis who wasted no time in tying the score with a quick shot over the glove hand of Jacques Richard.

It was Queen's success in the faceoff circle which directly and indirectly accounted for their victory. In attempting to thwart Gaels' centreman Bill Van Camp on a faceoff in deep Gee-Gee territory Gary Mahon interfered with him and was penalized 15 seconds prior to the expiration of play in the third period. It was that same Bill Van Camp who set up Treacy for the game winner in overtime on a play identical to Haramis' tying goal.

It was a thrilling, well-played game from start to finish. The Gaels 1975-76 promises to be the best team we've had in several years and hopefully will seriously challenge York and Toronto for the top spots in the east.

Speed Swim-good start

Men's

John Ireland

After initial doubt as to whether the meet would be held - the chlorinator in the pool was malfunctioning - the meet Friday night against Laval U. proved, despite a late come-back by the French team, to be their "Waterloo' as a strong Queen's squad and some superb individual performances showed themselves ultimately to be insurmountable. Rookie star Tim Dennis said his official "hullo" to university swimming as he coolly shattered 3 Queen's Team records in his first inter-collegiate meet ever. The two backstroke records, both of which have stood for over five years, vanished in the wash of the tidal wave he established and the three-year old 200 Individual Medley record fared little better as it too found itself clipped by a full five seconds.

To start off the meet and swimming an unaccustomed 200 Medley Relay, the Gael team of Ripley, Dennis, Pearson and Fugan nevertheless demolished their rivals and look certain to become Queen's best medley relay squad ever. In the 200 freestyle Joe Schnittker, behind Laval's top swimmer, added valuable second-place points. This was followed by the gruelling 200 butterfly, an event which found only one taker, veteran John Ireland who swam against the clock and with a highly respectable 2:06.6, finished five seconds under the CIAU qualifying time. This solo effort was however almost eclipsed by the race that followed as Tim Dennis demolished the 200 backstroke record by 8 full seconds. Grudgingly ceding first-place points John Rundle and John Scheulderman finished second and third in the 200 breaststroke whereupon, after only 3 events rest, Dennis came back to wipe out the 200 I.M. record, finishing 10 seconds ahead of his closest rival.

In the 100 freestyle Drew Fugan and Leo Hwozdyk were forced by a fine Laval swim to settle for second and third respectively. Queen's butterfly depth was evident in the 100 fly where the Gaels' premier "human fly" John Pearson blasted out an inspired 56.0 to finish ahead of rookie Bruce Ripley who in a fine swim, touched out John Ireland for second place. The Gaels swept the event and look to have real potential in this domain. In the race that followed, Dennis was once again the centre of attention, breaking his third record of the evening in the 100 backstroke for his fourth 1st place finish.

At this point, having the meet locked up, the Gaels relaxed on their strategy to let Laval close up considerably as they swept the 100 breast stroke and took the final relay. Thus the final score was a misleadingly narrow 47-42 victory for the Gaels. In any case, the meet was valuable experience since the Queen's team faces really tough competition next week in the shape of E.M.A.C. from Toronto, one of the two strongest clubs in the East and a host of other top clubs, including the Kingfish from Ottawa. Coach Curran and famous Diving Coach Nelson H. Freedman, two of whose proteges Fred Kallin and Rob Laing showed us some of their form, diving exhibition at the meet, feel that Queen's has some rude surprises in store for E.M.A.C. & Co. The action takes place in the pool all day Saturday and the calibre of swimming promises to be really high, so drop by and check it out.

Women's

Pat Matheson

Last Friday, the Queen's Swimming Gals participated with the men's team in a dual meet against Laval University. This was an introductory, exhibition meet, designed to provide some competitive experience for the newer swimmers and to get an idea of times in various events.

Queen's was fortunate this year in picking up several good new swimmers (Peggy Graham, Pat Kavanagh, Liane Benoit, Cindy Whitley, Kate Whitaker, Carol Kennedy, and Pam Skene), and they fit in well with the six returnees from last year. Queen's managed to fill virtually every event, and this depth at this early point in the season is a very good sign for the future Ontario Championships in February. There were several good performances and team records being broken as Queen's beat Laval.

Next Saturday, the Queen's women will again get together with the men to host the annual Queen's Invitational Club Meet. This meet will involve a somewhat fuller schedule of events and Queen's chances are very promising.

Queen's Waterpolo Gaels

Queen's lost 3 out of four games this past weekend at a McMaster tournament this past weekend.

berller

Queen's men's waterpolo team attended a three day tournament in Hamilton this past weekend. The University Challenge Cup tournament, hosted by McMaster University, is the most distinguished waterpolo event in Canada and it subsequently attracts some of the highest calibre players in the country.

The Queen's team emerged with bowed heads, having lost three of four games. First game was Queen's vs. the University of Windsor and ended in a 12-10 victory for Windsor Queen's second game ended on a happier note, Queen's soundly beating University of Ottawa 13-5. Saturday morning, Queen's lost to the University of Calgary 14-3 and Sunday morning the University of Western Ontario beat Queen's 10-6.

High scorer for the Queen's team was Peter Trebuss who scored 8 goals on the weekend. Mike Fox netted 7 goals; Bob Brisbois and Paul Nolan each scored 4 times; Dave Ardell, Bruce Hopkins and Chris Whately accounted for 3 goals each.

The Queen's team although beaten, gained valuable experience in playing against such intense competition. November 15 will see Queen's University at the University of Toronto for a regular OUAA east division tournament.

Queen's Basketball Gals lost to Ottawa University last Wednesday night by a score of 45-39. The game was slow and a poor representation of the teams true ability. Here Laura Martson, an import from Laurentian drives in for two points. The Gals are travelling to London for the first two games of their league schedule this weekend.

Students vs non-student

The "John Gray Affair" has been put to rest. What started as a constitutional issue and acquired emotional overtones, was finally settled at the General Meeting on Saturday, when students voted against having a non-student President.

All individuals who hold AMS elected positions should be students. In all systems of democratic government, an elected representative is required to be a member of his constituent group. Queen's student government is very political, representing students on a number of current issues such as student aid, cutbacks in government funding of universities, and employment opportunities. A non-student politician could not fairly represent students because he would necessarily have the values, concerns and interests of a politician, not those of a student. Currently, the demands of a full course load can hinder a student politician - particularly an Executive member - from doing a great job on the AMS. More significantly, the demands of a major AMS post can harm a student's chances of excelling academically.

The apparently logical compromise would involve the student taking only two or three courses instead of a full course load. The problems with this plan are the serious financial demands of a student. If he chose to take three courses in order to carry out an AMS Executive job, a student would have to attend summer school to pick up two courses. During this time, he would be unable to work at a paying job.

Current honoraria levels for AMS Executive members in no way compensate them for the earnings they lost because their extra-curricular commitments prohibited them from having a part-time job during the school year and a full-time job during all four summer months.

If students were paid so that they could afford to reduce their academic loads during the year, both the academic and financial demands could be met. The AMS might be run more efficiently as a result. Most significantly, more students would be able to afford to run for the Executive positions; greater interest in the student government would be generated.

Gray's exit has drawn attention to the issue of the nature of student involvement in student government at Queen's. The demands and constraints of students holding Executive positions have been recognized as a problem. The solution is clear: students must be willing to pay fellow students for their work.

What a revelation!

It has been a long time since we have had an election. The AMS General meeting on Saturday decided that we wouldn't have to worry about one for a while.

Some said it was for the reason of expedience, others just thought no one would run anyway and we had better hold on to those who we have.

Last spring we had an acclamation. This fall we lost our AMS President. The AMS Court said we should call an election. But wait...we could change the constitution and we wouldn't have to call an election. What a revelational idea-we could allow the existing AMS Executive members to appoint a President and allow Outer Council to approve it.

Elections are such a bother. What with running a campaign or listening to one and voting, enduring the producion time lag and even changing the name plates on the door, it adds up to a lot of headaches.

But wait...another revelational idea-we could change the constitution in February. We may never have to have another election!

Editorial not far enough

Dear Editors:
In a recent editorial ("Speak up You Dozers", Nov. 4) the Journal editors were bold enough to suggest that some professors may be doing a less than magnificent job of teaching. While this defiant attitude towards the establishment is to be commended, I suspect that, even before they read this inflammatory editorial, most students were only too aware of professors' laziness and incompetence. The real question of interest is: "What sort of organization leaves the proper execution of its employees' duties as a matter of individual conscience?" or more precisely: "Does Queen's exist to serve the interests of its students or those of a privileged fraction of its employees, i.e the faculty?"

Since I think that by helping its readers to arrive at answers to such questions the Journal might be transformed from its present state (i.e. a kind of campus bulletin board) into a real student newspaper, I will offer the following as a starting point for an investigation that the Journal might pursue:
1. How does a professor get tenure? Is there any student participation in the renewal of contracts for untenured faculty?
2. What is the university's policy on faculty teaching loads? Are some departments overstaffed? Is it desirable or necessary to have graduate students and post-docs teaching courses?
3. What is the university's policy on sabbatical leave? Can a case be made for restricting sabbaticals to those who are doing truly outstanding research?
4. Are the large number of courses offered by many departments really useful to students or are they simply a way of creating faculty positions?
5. How far will the administration cut student services before they lay off tenured faculty?
6. Have expensive instruments in undergraduate labs been purchased because of their value in faculty members' research rather than for their instructional value?

Investigations of and debate on such questions could only produce interesting results.

Rat research who is it for?

Dear Editors:
There can be nothing more de-humanizing than taking Psychology 205. For those who don't know, Psychology 205 deals with rats. Electrocuting rats, cutting out pieces of their flesh, stuffing them with food, depriving them of food, etc., etc. The course is called 'the Psychology of Learning Well, I'm not learning anything, so I turn to my book entitled "Learning Theory" and after reading two hours of Hullian Theory of Learning, I'm presented with the following conclusion, taken from the text it reads: "Virtually every behavioral conjecture that Hull made has been shown to be wrong. But that is not important; what is important is that because of Hull, we now know a great deal more about the hungry rat than we did just a few years ago." I sit and watch chiney, 1950 films trying to justify the hundreds of thousands of dollars spent on rat research and the thousands of hours spent watching them run through mazes. How many thousands of hours have people spent being lonely, not knowing what a warm relationship is or not even understanding it. Could those hours that we spend mutilating rats have been spent relating to people, helping them to understand themselves, being warm, being friendly? That's the dehumanizing thing about Psychology 205; thinking that we can understand people, know people, love people by watching "Herman", my rat, do his tricks in a controlled environment. Please spare me! I'd rather sit in the cafeteria having a good conversation with a friend over a cup of coffee. What would I be learning? That "Herman", my pet rat, just hasn't got a chance against what happens naturally between people.

Non-smokers vs smokers

Dear Editors:
I am in complete agreement with the comments of S.D. Clarke regarding the rights of non-smokers. Anyone afflicted with a lung disease is quite familiar with the endless search for breathable air. I would like to reserve a place in Hell for the boorish smokers who restrict my enjoyment of public events and endanger my health; an especially fiery spot should be set aside for pipe and cigar smokers.

I commend the establishment of a committee to regulate smoking on the Carleton University campus and hope that this concern will spread to Queen's. The elimination of smoking in many areas would reduce cleaning and insurance costs - an important consideration in this era of "financcial constraint". Such offensive habits as smoking belong in private amongst consenting adults. If smokers are so insecure that they must suck something in public, I suggest lollipops.

Marijuana seriously

Dear Editors,
I am writing to express my displeasure with the student attitude shown at the Dunning Hall Movies, Thursday last. (i.e. "High on the Range" and "Cocaine Fiends").

It was Susie-Q week, when boys are asked out, so I asked a young man that I simply adore to the show.

At Dunning, we were shocked and amazed and my date was quite frightened. People were actually laughing at these serious social commentaries and there was a very suspicious smell in the air for most of the movie. People laughed even more when I began to cry during "Cocaine Fiends". How can people be so hard and cruel?

It is high time that people realized that dope is a plague that infects the minds of our young people. One boy on our block back home smoked some marijuana cigarettes one night and blew his head off with his father's shotgun. Examples like this are endless and I hope that my fellow students will soon take a more serious attitude towards this social illness.

Pregnancy research may shed light on cancer, transplants

Barb Nyland
Despite the length of time pregnancy has been with us it has aspects which are still a mystery to mankind.

Pregnancy is now looked upon by immunologists as a grafting procedure similar to an organ transplant. Yet the foetus is an extraordinary graft because unlike transplants or skin grafts no drugs are necessary to stop the host, in this case the mother, from automatically rejecting the foreign body. Surgical grafts can only be expected to be retained by the recipient for two weeks but most pregnancies are uneventful for the full nine months.

Dr. Malcolm Baines of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology is attempting to discover how the immune system can control the invasion of foreign bodies. Placental tissue can exist in extensive contact with the host without any signs of rejection but antigens, substances foreign to the system are usually attacked immediately.

This study might provide the clue to the mechanisms by which some types of cancer grows. Just as the foetus is not attacked by the immune system during pregnancy the invading tumor is not being destroyed. Baines hypothesizes that there is possibly a mechanism within the immune system which allows a specific response to be turned on or off when necessary. "To discover this could allow the patient to rid himself of a tumor with minimal surgery or at least without hazardous chemotherapy or radiation treatment" says Dr. Baines.

If this study were successful it could also allow transplants to be performed without massive dosages of drugs which suppress the entire immune system. Many transplant patients now die not from malfunction of a new organ but from pneumonia or an otherwise minor disease which the body cannot combat.

This research may also shed some light on certain problems in pregnancy which according to Dr. Baines have never been adequately explained. Fetal growth retardation within the uterus is usually explained as being due to an insufficient nutrient supply from the placenta. Baines feels that there is a possibility that in some cases the defect is caused by the activation of an immune response at the wrong time. This could also be the cause of some spontaneous abortions.

It is not a new idea to consider the embryo as a transplant but only recently has the technology been sophisticated enough to allow scientists to see the minute differences within the cells on which they are basing their study.

Dr. Baines was recently awarded a grant of up to $19,425 by the Rockefeller Foundation, an American association which supports scientific research.

Nordheimer takes top spot

Giles Gherson and Sarah Yarnell
Students gained a new President and Vice-President last night, when Outer Council approved Ian Nordheimer as AMS President, and Paul Steep, former Internal Affairs Commissioner, as Vice-President (Operations).

Ian Nordheimer

The nominations were made by Nordheimer as Acting President and by Vice-President (University Affairs) John Wilson.

Students at last Saturday's General meeting gave Outer Council the authority to approve nominations for President and Vice-Presidents, given a vacancy in these positions.

The AMS Court declared November 3 that the position of President was vacant when they ruled that John Gray was no longer eligible to hold the position because of his non-student status

Before the constitution was changed at the General Meeting, the President had to be chosen by campus-wide election.

Nordheimer said that a successor to Gray was appointed "to minimize the disruptive effect" of allowing the AMS to be without a President. If an election had been called, he said, the communications between the University administration and the AMS would have been jeopardized until the new Executive took office. As well, an entirely new Executive would take a great deal of time to acquaint themselves with the job, he said.

Nordheimer's promotion may have been predictable, but Steep's "Meteoric rise" - as referred to by John Wilson - was surprising. Steep was a Journal reporter last year, and has been involved with AMS student government as Internal Affairs Commissioner since September 25.

Nordheimer praised Steep's "ability to pick things up quickly, to analyze and to come up with reasonable, responsible opinion".

"I feel I can handle it," Steep said. "I'm not entirely ignorant of the problem - I have had past experience, and I would hope no one would pass judgement on me till I had a chance. I feel I could learn what I don't know."

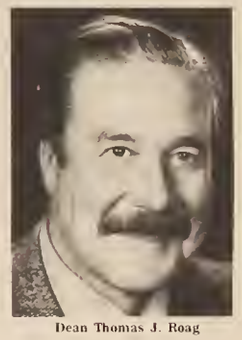
Hockey: assault charged

Detroit Red Wings hockey player Dan Maloney was charged with assault causing bodily harm in an incident at Maple Leaf Gardens, on Nov. 5. As a result of the altercation Leaf's defenceman Brian Glennie was taken to hospital for observation. The charge would seem to be a result of Attorney-General Roy McMurty's avowed crackdown on hockey violence. An investigation into the affair is being conducted by certain "senior officials", according to McMurty's statement before the House last Thursday.

Trudeau supported

Despite the efforts of Prime Minister Trudeau, one out of every five delegates to the National Liberal Convention voted to review his leadership of the party. The percentage of delegates who votes to review the leadership of Mr. Trudeau was almost double that of the 1973 convention. Evidently the review vote could have been higher if not for Mr. Trudeau's performance during the Friday accountability session. At that session Mr. Trudeau stated, "I'm standing in front of one of the great political parties of modern democracy." Mr. Trudeau's 'pep talk' to the party was contrasted with a philosophical lecture on the evils of inflation. A political scientist from the University of Toronto remarked that Mr. Trudeau's call for a new set of values, "probably went over the heads of 60 percent of the delegates."

Condemned to live



A Superior Court judge in Morristown N.J., ruled Monday that Karen Anne Quinlan must be kept alive with a mechanical life-support system because, "there is no constitutional right to die." This decision means that doctors cannot unhook a life sustainning respirator from the 21 year old Karen who has been in a coma for seven months. After seven months her body weight has dropped from 120 pounds to 60 pounds and her condition is described as "chronic vegetative state." Through the trial her father, Joseph Quinlan, was requesting that his daughter be allowed to "die with dignity."

UFO strikes man

Last week in Navajo county, Arizona, seven lumberjacks were riding home from work in a pick-up truck when they spotted a large orange saucer, about 15 feet above the ground, off the side of the road. One of the men, Walton, jumped out of the truck and ran underneath the UFD. In response, a blue ray emanated from it and knocked Walton about 10 feet back. At this point, the men in the truck took off and stopped about a quarter of a mile down the road. When they came back to get Walton, he had disappeared.

Investigation by the county sheriff has revealed no footprints and no burnmarks anywhere near the spot indicated by the other six lumberjacks. All the six men have taken lie detector tests and these all proved that they are not lying. On, As It Happens, the CBC radio news programme, one of the members of the group described Walton as well-liked, possessing a genius IQ, and wishing to make contact with a UFD if he had the chance.

Meds' Faculty gets new Dean

Dean Thomas J. Boag

The appointment of Dr. Thomas J. Boag as Dean of the Faculty of Medicine at Queen's University has been announced by Principal Ronald L. Watts. Dr. Boag, who is at present Head of the Department of Psychiatry, will assume office on December 1, 1975, for a term running until June 30, 1982.

In appointing Dr. Boag, the Principal commented on the strong support which was expressed by the Advisory Committee on the Deanship of Medicine as well as in the Faculty and the University for Dr. Boag's candidacy. Principal Watts added his own personal pleasure that Dr. Boag had accepted the appointment and expressed his confidence that Dr. Boag would provide the leadership appropriate to the time of challenge and opportunity facing the Faculty of Medicine.

Dr. Boag has been at Queen's since 1967, when he took up his present position as Head of the Department of Psychiatry and Psychiatrist-in-Chief of the Kingston General Hospital. During that period he has also served as consultant at the other hospitals in the Queen's and Kingston Health Sciences Complex.

Born in Liverpool, England, Dr. Boag graduated in Medicine from the University of Liverpool. After three years in the Royal Army Medical Corps in which he was a captain and some time at the Liverpool Royal Infirmary, he came to Canada in 1948 where he spent his first year on the house staff at the Kingston General Hospital. He then went to McGill to pursue postgraduate training and subsequently psychoanalytic training on the faculty of the McGill University Department of Psychiatry and on the staff of the Allen Memorial Institute of Psychiatry of the Royal Victoria Hospital.

In 1961, he went to Burlington, Vermont as professor of Psychiatry and chairman of the department in order to establish the Department of Psychiatry in the University of Vermont College of Medicine. While there he established psychiatric departments in the two teaching hospitals in Burlington, Vermont and was the first Chief of Psychiatry in both hospitals.

He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Royal College of Psychiatrists, and the American Psychiatric Association. He is also a member of numerous medical and psychiatric organizations and has published a considerable number of professional papers in his field.

Since coming to Queen's, Dr. Boag has held membership in many committees of the Faculty of Medicine and of the Kingston General Hospital. He has also been a member of the Senate of Queen's University and of a number of Senate Committees. He has chaired the Senate Committee on Operations Review, the Senate Nominating Committee, and the University Health Council. Earlier this year he was a member of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint.

Dr. Boag has served since 1967 on a number of provincial committees dealing with health research. He is currently chairman of the Advisory Board of the Ontario Mental Health Foundation, and chairman of the Specialty Committee in Psychiatry of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada.

Dr. Boag is married and has four children. His wife is child psychiatrist in the Regional Children's Centre, Kingston Psychiatric Hospital, and assistant professor in the Department of Psychiatry. His eldest son is a graduate of Queen's and another son is in second year.

From the john

"Why don't we just fire every civil servant we got, firemen, police, hospitals, the works. And then steal their pensions."

"That might work", mused the mayor, "but I don't think it will be enough. We need big money."

We should kidnap someone, like Rockefeller for instance. He's got money, he's got Ford under his thumb, and he's on our side: he'd cooperate!"

"Perfect!" beamed Beame.

They did. The news media were astounded.

"We're astounded," said the media. President Ford was on the Hot Line to Russia immediately.

"Listen," he said, "You've got to do me a favor. Threaten to bomb New York unless Rocky is returned."

"You vill send more wheatsky?"

"Of course."

The media were amazed when the news broke that Russia was going to bomb New York.

"We're amazed!" they chorused.

The crisis was at hand. More developments next week.

There was a meeting last week in Gracie Mansion, the Mayor's home in New York City, to figure a way out of New York's upcoming bankruptcy. Mayor Abe Beame called the meeting to order in a state of desperation.

"Men, we're in trouble. We got no money, we got no way to get no money, we got nuthin'. We ain't even got rhythm. What do we do?

"Why don't we get rid of the featherbedders, clean up welfare cheaters, and get an efficient government going?" I suggested.

"What are you, some kinda nut or sumpthin'? We'd all be out of our jobs. We got to think of sumpthin' safer." Squeaked Beame in a near faint.

A high ranking aide spoke up. "Da solut' is easy. Trow Ford in da river, and all's well wid da world."

No, no, no," pouted Abie. "You just don't do that any more. Besides, we already sent that Squeaky woman, and she blew it. Now they're on their guard."

Longer life span ups incidence of cancer

Cancer is a major killer in our society, yet many advances have been made in its treatment recently and the future promises even greater progress. The clinical aspects of the treatment of cancer patients was the subject of the first lecture in the Health Science lecture series held last Thursday

The higher incidence of cancer today is a result of the increased presence of cancer causing substances such as smoke and pollution and to the fact that with a longer life expectancy we have a greater chance of coming in contact with these substances stated John Howard a third year Meds student.

Fred Moffat also a third year medical student explained the three major methods of cancer treatment: chemical therapy, radiation treatment and surgery.

Nursing student Janice Lindsay spoke of the role of a nurse in the care of cancer patients. She emphasized the importance of seeing that the patient doesn't acquire a feeling of abandonment after confirmation of his terminal illness.

Some conventional methods of physiotherapy might cause cancers to spread. For this reason the physiotherapist is primarily interested in helping the patient maintain the strength to live said Mary Bradford a physiotherapy student Occupational therapists help the cancer patient and those around him adjust to this factor stressed Carol Harwood from the occupational therapy department

The next lecture in this series will be concerned with heart disease. It will be held on Thursday Novvember 20 at 7:30 p.m. in Etherington Hall at KGH.

Everyone is welcome to attend. It is being organized by Health Science students for the information of the student body and the general public.

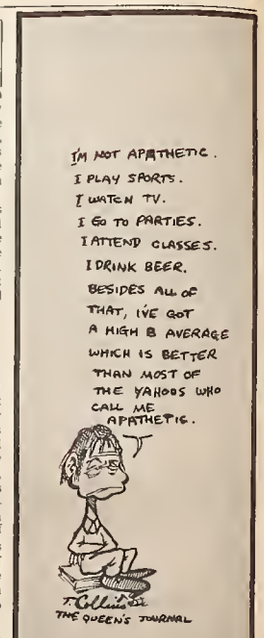
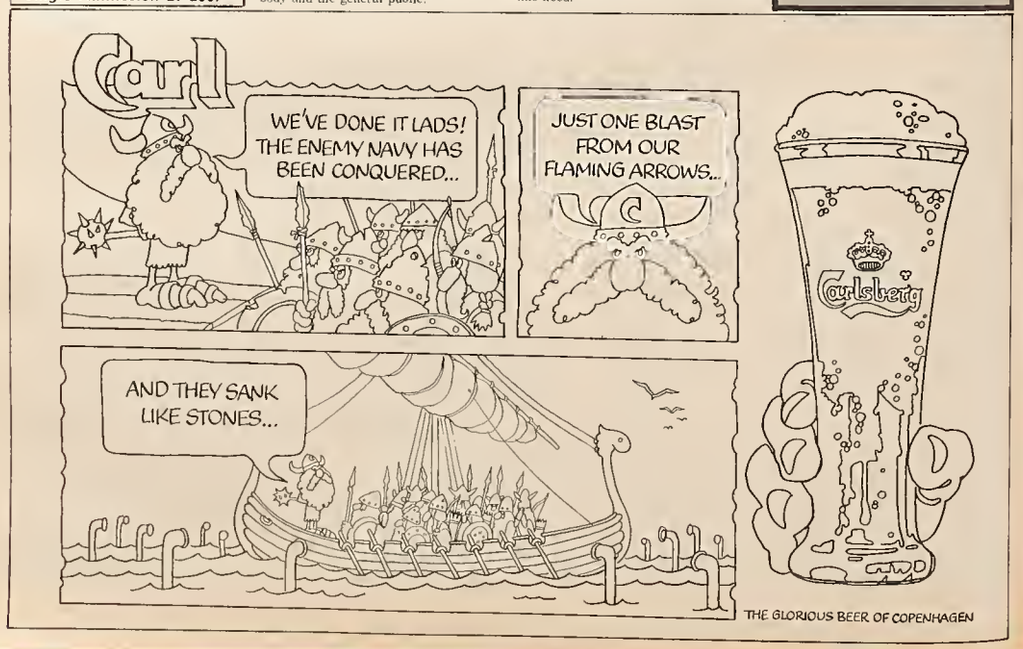
French terror



The Reign of Terror of the French Revolution will be recreated in the History display at Open House tomorrow. The theme of the display is recreating the past, featuring debates, decrees, newspapers and posters. This display will be in the Rotunda on the second floor of Watson Hall.



In Room 217 the reign of terror comes to life with music shown as an idcological weapon. As revolutionary songs are played, the French words appear on one screen and the English words on another. This audiovisual program is to be shown at 10 a.m., 11 a.m., 1 p.m., 2 p.m., 3 p.m., and 4 p.m

Newest paper

Kingston's senior citizens may have a newspaper to themselves as early as next year. This was the outcome of a two hour meeting between three of the co workers on the Local Initiatives Project HURRAH and the district head of the Federal New Horizons Program. Project HURRAY, initiated by a group of Queen's students this past summer and funded by Opportunities for Youth has been given a $15,000 LIP grant to continue the work of facilitating activities inside Kingston's Homes for the Aged. This new objective of co-ordinating interest in a newspaper to be run for and by seniors in the homes and in the community could be met by the group during working hours.

According to the project sponsor, Terry Collins, "there is a tremendous need to educate the senior citizens as to what services and benefits are available to them and to improve the liaison between the community and the retired. I think that a newspaper would be a lot of fun for them and would go a long way towards meeting this need."

Reality:

The common denominator of James Stewart, his six foot rabbit Harvey and Mao Tse-Tung

Bob Gauthier

What do film favorite James Stewart, his 'imaginary' six-foot rabbit Harvey, and Mao Tse-tung have in common?

Reality.

As Stewart says in the decades-old film classic, "Harvey", in response to a well-meaning psychiatrist who wants to put him away for being 'unrealistic' and talking to the rabbit:

'Doctor, I've fought reality for 35 years and I'm glad to say I've finally won.'

McGill University professor Paul Lin described a key concept of Mao's thought in much the same way to a Watson Hall gathering Wednesday afternoon.

"The capacity of human beings to transform reality by their own efforts," is central to Maoist thought, he said. "A person's environment determines ideas...and once ideas are developed they can also react on reality."

Lin said the Chinese strategy of development and change is different from the common Western social science concepts of growth based on such economic factors as per capita income.

"Change is not judged by one indicator alone -- that is, not just by measuring economic growth. Change is multi-dimensional and the Chinese position emphasizes individual change first and foremost – individual change in terms of spiritual and cultural growth.

"Economic growth is then combined with this to build up a fullness of life in which humans can live to their full human stature.

"The unidimensional-economic growth concept to development creates a warped society -- for example, the society that places great emphasis on technological change without a corresponding reassessment of values."

Lin said the Chinese developed a transition into socialism that came out of a society based on half-destroyed feudalism and half-nourished capitalism.

"Examining their own society in the light of a theoretical formulation of history, the Chinese then tried to form a society based on the non-exploitation of human beings and a qualified exploitation of physical resources.

"As those here today who have read Marxist literature will realize," he said, "all states are dictatorships as well as democracies."

"While there is no such thing as absolute progress, the Chinese position says we have to get people to be aware of the progressive forces in society and we have to constantly be aware of the thoughts entering into our own minds and their origins."

And, contrary to many European Marxists who have contempt for the peasantry, Lin said, the Maoist idea of "forging a strong sustaining hegemony of power in the revolution" is based upon an alliance of workers and peasants. Earlier, Lin said the Chinese model would be useful for the Third World.

Copeland

Brian Copeland

There is to my knowledge, no theological basis in the Christian faith for premarital sex. This leaves the single theolog (a student of theology) with only two alternatives; remain celibate or get married. This accounts for the fact that there are a lot of married theologs who also have a lot of children. After all, the command is 'to be fruitful and multiply.'

But as one professor, who was a single theolog in his university days, notes, 'I followed the faith's command and remained a virgin all through university'. He then added, 'Damn it!' What a nasty word, virgin. Virginity is unhip, square, not where its at.

One must question, however, if there is a relationship between the fact that all this premarital sex is affecting marital life. The divorce rate has never been higher. And no wonder, when we socially pressure people into believing that premarital sex is hip, then sex becomes all-important. This attitude then carries over into married life, and if you're not a good sex partner, forget it baby. Sex, on one hand, has lost its sanctity, and on the other has become so encompassing in married life that relations are now built on your degree of proficiency under the covers, and not on a genuine love between two people.

Most theologians have realized that premarital sex is one moral choice that people are deciding for themselves, without reference to the church or their parent's value standards. A former United Church Moderator, when asked for his opinion on premarital sex, replied, "What good will it do to answer, when people aren't listening to the church's stance on premarital sex, anyway?"

The vulgarity of the sexual revolution is that we regard people more as sex objects than as human beings with a variety of needs including a sexual need. This is evidenced best in the Penthouse Forum, where recently, a woman wrote in to say that she wouldn't screw a guy who had under eight inches. The implication is clearly that, even if you have a tremendous personality, unless you are well hung, or, if you are a woman, have large tits, don't expect to find someone who wants to have a 'meaningful relationship'.

Granted, we have oversimplified what is a complex social question. We are suggesting, however, that there is a need for love and understanding to be put back into the human experience, and that sex is but a small part of our total life here on earth. That's what the sexual revolution was all about: taking sex from the bounds of impropriety and letting people choose, on the basis of their own values, to have or not have premarital sex. The pendulum has now swung to the other extreme, and still we truly do not have sexual freedom. The balance can only be found when we begin to respect people for whatever their sexual choice; and especially in this time of culturally attuned premarital sex, we begin to respect the choice of no sex, as chosen by the single theolog.

Emotional, creative and social learning added

The old limestone building at Clergy and Barrie houses a public school as well as the Kingston Community School. There, twenty students between the ages of four and eight are encouraged to develop in a new and creative way.

The school is registered with the Ministry of Education and is incorporated as a non-profit charitable organization. A child's tuition is determined by what his parents can afford to pay, and is based on a sliding scale from $75 to no charge at all. Though the flexibility of the tuition has never been abused by the parents, Meri MacLeod, one of 2 teachers, said that the school is undergoing a financial struggle for survival. The monthly tuition covers rent and minimal operation costs, but does not allow for salaries.

This Friday, and Saturday, an arts and crafts display and sale will be held at 370 King St. W., to raise money to keep Kingston Community School functioning.

The teaching philosophy of the school marks it as a distinct alternative to the public education system. The school uses the integrated learning approach, by which subjects are interwoven into a unified, wholistic program. A trip to Stevenson's apiary thus led to lessons on the honey bee, candle-making from bee's wax, and making uncooked honey icing. The importance of the honey bee to apple orchards led to a field trip to an orchard. Subsequent discussions centred on apples, and in a mathematics lesson, fractions were demonstrated by cutting up apples.

In another classroom, the children aged four to six were sewing. The holes made in the cloth by the needle prompted discussions of the hole in the needle, holes in the environment and holes in the body. The ears then became a subject of interest. "Sound walks" were taken to listen to the sounds of the environment. The children are now undertaking to write books entitled What Can Make A Sound?

Nancy Maddams, the other teacher, stressed that the learning is "not just intellectual, but emotional and social and creative, as well." In daily Transactional Analysis groups, the student learns to deal with his feelings in a way that will hurt neither himself nor his friends

The many people who have worked five years to provide this creative learning centre invite everyone to this weekend's craft display to support the Kingston Community School Children enjoy the activities at the Kingston Community School.

McArthur Student Council activities

Kathie Graham

For those of you who read the Letters section of the Journal, you will already be familiar with two rather vehement letters by OUR PRESIDENT, Michael Roberts. In general these letters spoke of the alientation of McArthur from the main student body. To help bridge the gap are the following pieces of info:

The Student council was elected by acclamation, a few students responded to posters re. the election of a council. It seems strange, that in an institution where response is part of the training, the enthusiasm was so slight. However, it seems that McArthur now has a lot of enthusiasm in the form of the council, and is putting it to use in the biweekly meetings (12:30 Wednesday in the Reserved Dining Room) Any students wishing to join these meetings for any reason are invited to do so.

On Monday, the 3rd of November, we were all sitting around the dining room. As a unit, the council tried to outline their objectives for the year. They are as follows: the council will try to represent the McArthur student body (although this is near to an impossible feat). It will try to encourage both communication among those in the student body and community at large, and various types of education.

Objectives are a very important facet of McArthur. In order to meet them, the council felt the budget had to be divided, in terms of ceiling values, to the following priorities:

Office Supplies: Did you students out there realize that there is not even a pen machine at McArthur, not a grocery store easily accessible if one needs paper? Perhaps this is a scheme amongst those in charge to encourage a "always be prepared" motivation, however the council feels that McArthur would benefit by having some supplies available to students right in the building. They also would like to have a box office available, where students can get tickets for events at the main campus and in the town.

Conference on Deschooling: Indepth information on this topic will be reported on shortly. This conference will hopefully be of benefit not only to students at McArthur but also those on the main campus, as well as any professors, teachers or residents of the Kingston community.

Christmas Party: For the staff and students at McArthur. This is tentatively to be held the last Wednesday of term. Unfortunately, students in the double elementary option perhaps will be unable to attend ..(speak up you people, demand justice) as well as those who feel they would gain more by being at home or away than by going to "classes that are so unstimulating". It was suggested that the party take another form and be held after Christmas...this may be a better time to celebrate. The party is planned to take place in the dining room, all will be encouraged to debauch and make merry with wine and cheese...unless the liquor laws keep tightening. In that case maybe cider will do.

Children's Party: The council would like to have the resident classes come to McArthur to party for a while. If you asked them, they might say that anytime they come they're partying, but at this time the students interested will try to provide them with an interesting couple of hours.

Education: A proportion of the budget is designed to subsidize a visit from guest speakers. The speakers are yet to be decided, a subsidy from the AMS may help determine them.

Formal: The plannings of a formal are in their embryonic stages, for those of you who wish it to develop and not be aborted, contact the student council at your convenience. Last year, the cost of the band, speaker, invitations etc., ad nauseum was about $2500.

Film Series: This may be the only way the student council will have to bring profitable entertainment into the walls of McArthur. The theme of the series and its contents are yet being formed.

The remaing finances are planned to go towards a student orientation handbook and a handbook which subjectively evaluates the courses offered at McArthur. Another interesting proposal is that spontaneity awards be offered for various tasks. These will include keeping your nose in the groove, marble rolling contests, crash helmets will be supplied, a roller skating derby and other events which will not be posted.

The spontaneity award is indicative of the theme of the council...before you jump to conclusions the theme is this: being a teacher is being a human and being responsive as well as spontaneous. It is hoped that some, if not all of the council's objectives will augment this theme.

Five workshops

University & woman

Gaye Clemson

In tribute to International Women's Year the subject of AUCC's (Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada) annual conference and business meeting was 'Women in University Affairs'.

The actual conference (Oct. 28-30) itself was composed of five workshops concerning various aspects of women in universities and a plenary session where recommendations resulting from any of the workshops were presented and discussed. The topics of the workshops included 1) women students, 2) women in faculty, 3) women in support staff, 4) women's studies, and 5) women and university research.

Unfortunately the workshops were far too large (up to 100 persons in many) and the topics far too broad. As a result, though the discussions were often lively, concrete recommendations were not forthcoming. Many of us left feeling quite frustrated.

As well, the student delegates got together a number of times to discuss among other things their own role in AUCC and the type of input appropriate, given that the major participants were University faculty and administrators. Most of the student delegates were women politicians who were very much in the minority on their own campuses. Many were also finding it difficult to interest fellow women students in student affairs.

A number of valuable publications were distributed which included:

1) A survey of available day care centres at Canadian universities
2) STATSCAN report on numbers of women enrolled and graduating from various academic programs
3) A comprehensive list of women's studies courses and current research work on women.

All of these are available in the A.M.S. office.

Little responsibility

Child care deplorable

OTTAWA (CUP)--Universities have been doing a deplorable job of providing child-care services for the university community, according to a report on Child Care Service at Canadian Universities released October 29.

The report, presented to the annual meeting of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada (AUCC), says "child-care is dealt with on an ad hoc crisis oriented basis" by Canadian universities.

"Child-Care is not perceived as a service program nor as an accepted activity of the university community" it states.

According to the report, the major problem is that universities assume little responsibility for planning, development or financing of child-care facilities.

But, "given current trends in university student population and the increasing number of two-parent working families, the need for long-term university-based child care is evident."

Demographic data which could be used to estimate the need for child care services on university campuses is totally lacking, according to the study.

An example cited, however, showed that for one Canadian university with an enrollment of 10,000 students, the total number of children involved was about 670 preschoolers and 400 6-12 year olds.

If this ratio of children-enrolment were accurate for the whole university system, it would indicate that there are presently about 20 thousand preschoolers and 12 thousand 6-12 year olds who potentially could use some kind of child care facilities.

Currently, campus child care services across Canada provides space for a total of 1850 preschoolers and services for 50 6-12 year olds.

The author of the study, Elaine McLeod, told the conference that her survey of existing campus child care facilities showed that not only were universities unwilling to become involved in child care, they refuse to even acknowledge the existence of such facilities as are set up.

Project initiation, financial planning, and program development are all left up to those least able to cope with the task - parents who need child-care - while in most cases "no working relationship of any kind" exists between them and the university.

Where a relationship was found to exist, she reports, "it was restricted to use of physical and administrative university facilities such as recreation programs or duplicating machines."

The academic community also provides little help in terms of providing expertise for planning or operating child care services, except when they use child care facilities for student practicum or observation purposes.

Failure dramatized

OTTAWA (CUP)-- Elaine McLeod had a problem when she was invited to attend a meeting of the A.U.C.C.

Whe was to present her report "Child Care Services at Canadian Universities" as part of the AUCC's "Role of Women in Canadian Universities" theme for this year's meeting.

But McLeod is nursing a 17 month old baby, and no child care services were provided for the delegates.

So, after being introduced at the podium, McLeod handed the child over to the embarrassed AUCC president, Michael Oliver.

As Oliver and the baby sat it out amidst popping flashbulbs, McLeod delivered a speech regarding the failure of universities to assume responsibility for child care services.

Graduating Students - All Faculties

M.B.A. Information Meeting

For any Queen's undergraduates considering an MBA, an informal meeting has been arranged for the purpose of providing information with respect to the Queen's MBA Program.

Faculty and current MBA students will be on hand to talk briefly about the program - its purpose, philosophy, structure, curriculum and teaching methodologies - and to answer questions with respect to such subjects as admissions standards and procedures, labour market demand for MBA's, the comparison between the Queen's MBA program and those of other graduate business schools, etc.

Questions of concern to specific individuals may be put to faculty or MBA students over coffee and refreshments after the general session.

Social injustice and gay rights

Dear Editors:
What's with some of the 'people' at this University? Why the existent persecution of gays? Do you get maligned because you prefer redheads? Blue bikes? German Shepherds? Pistachio ice cream?

No!???

Well...Then why do the homophiles get bothered?

One of the usual comments from Joe or Jane 'Normal' is..."It's unnatural. Sex was meant for reproduction." Later we see Joe or Jane (or Joe and Jane) balling the bejesus out of his or her sexmate. Not for reproduction mind you.....just for the attainment of that magical moment, orgasm.

The logic against homophiles comes from the same cesspool that informs eleven-year-olds that masturbation will put hair on their eye-balls. There is an individual (actually, I'm sure there are several) on campus who wants to start an anti-gay movement. This person is worried about the 25 cents paid by each student to the Homophile Association. I presume the QHA desires this money in order to set up a phone-in centre and to educate us about the realities of the Homophile Association. I guess this concerned person takes the Financial Constraint Issue to the limits.

Well...if you believe in calling a spade a spade, this person is a total no-holds-barred, right-on-the-gunwhales asshole.

The Homophile Association needs the support of the humane thinkers of Queen's. They graciously decline the idiocy that runs rampant among so many of us.

You aren't required or asked to become a homophile.

Just understand and respect them!

You really have to wonder about the thought processes of people like John Nebel and the aforementioned individuals. These peoples' heads are located somewhere between their large and small intestines, having been inserted through the lower digestive tract orifice. Their thought processes resemble a four-year-old's master game plan for Snakes and Ladders.

Understanding is all anyone wants.

Jamie Corbett

yet another example of how grad students at Queen's are treated as second class citizens. After all, we are full-time students too.

Which brings me to another point concerning Mr. Gummo's ridiculous letter re: TGIF in Tuesday's (Nov. 11) Journal. To myself and my friends, TGIF was something we looked forward to every week as it was a time to meet and chat with grad students from other departments, and certainly, it was beneficial both intellectually and socially for all concerned. In addition, Grad. House provided an excellent place for other functions, eg. smokers, and was especially important in welcoming new grad. students. Its loss is felt by many.

Jennifer Harker
Biology

Dear Editors:
Being a third year grad student, I have the option of not paying student interest fees. This means paying extra for such things as concerts, use of the gym, etc. However, it would be nice to be able to have the chance to buy a few of the benefits that other students have, i.e. Who's Where and Tricolor.

Yesterday, I went to the Who's Where depot and offered to pay for a copy. However, the gentleman in charge said that I could not do this. I asked about other people such as professors and administration staff who also usually like to have a copy but who don't pay student fees, and he replied that they are allowed to purchase them through the university.

This seems grossly unfair to me, and is

Dear Editors,
On the campus there are homosexuals, bisexuals, and I hope some heterosexuals. (Maybe some necropheliacs and quadrosexuals?)

An individual has the choice of being one of the above. All but the homos feel that it's their business what they are and their sexual behavior is their own privacy. Why do the homophiles need a club? Why do we have to give money to a club that is formed for people with a common interest - their homosexual desires?

By forming a homosexual club, all they are asking for is attention. If you are a homophile do us all a favour, and keep it to yourself and your close friends.

Do not pollute rights of artist

Dear Editors,
What has been done to 'Pollution' is vandalism, and cannot be viewed in any other way. If we have a right to decide the fate of works of art, then people who are offended by nudity have the right to stick fig leaves indiscriminately over paintings and statues. The artist is the only one who has the right to change a work of art.

Arlo Schwartz

Can't hear myself think

Dear Editors,
Whenever I go into the Queen's Pub (Wallace Hall or House of Lords), the first thing that usually hits me is how uncomfortably loud the taped music is being played. And every time that I notice it (which is almost always), I think how unnecessary it is and how 'dumb' the people are who run the pub not to notice the problem.

The Queen's Pub is not a discotheque. There is no adequate dance floor, there is no disco atmosphere, and people just don't dance there unless there's a live band. So let's accept that and assume that unless there's a live band playing, there won't be much dancing, and people will go to the pub mainly to relax, sit and chat with friends, or try to meet new people. I think this is especially true during the week, for me anyway, when after studying for some hours, I just want to come to the pub, have a cold beer and sit and unwind.

The high volume of the music frequently makes this difficult. It tends to create a high-strung, energetic atmosphere. The music is sometimes so loud in Wallace that one has to speak loudly even when sitting at the other end of the pub where the speakers are not present. This situation is very annoying.

I think the A.M.S. and the Queen's pub staff should reassess what sort of atmosphere they want to create in their pubs. Right now, it seems to be a strange mix of part disco (volume-wise on the music) and part quiet pub (since the dance floors are inadequate), and this sort of mixed atmosphere seems to take place in both pubs.

I think a little variety is in order. Why not designate one pub as a discotheque and the other as a 'quiet pub', and actively work at creating the proper atmosphere for each pub.

In the short run, let'a at least get the volume turned down.

Steve Gareau

Concerning two matters

Dear Editors:
It is ironic in retrospect that we should all thank John Nebel for provoking two of the most worthwhile letters seen in the Journal this year. I refer, of course, to the letters of Eric Hughes and even more particularly, of Jayne Coulter.

Here at last, Queen's students are forced to face the issue of blatant social injustice, in this instance, sexual discrimination. I am no more (and no less) concerned with homosexuality than with any other form of social oppression, but the fact that the sickening, reactionary ideology of a 'right-thinking' dominant class can make a member of a minority group afraid to write the letter that five thousand people (I hope) read on Tuesday, means that some of us must take a stand. Her fear is our shame. In the face of not just an 'extremely depressing' letter (to quote Alan Dolan) - the fascist overtones of Nebel's diseased letter were unmistakeable - Jayne Coulter took the stand with all our hang-ups on her shoulders, answered for her minority group, and signed her name. I for one salute her and wish her well at Antioch College and everywhere.

Newswriting: the myth of objectivity

Adapted from the chevron, Waterloo

North America's daily press says its news coverage is objective.

But Robert Chodos, a staff writer with Last Post magazine, challenges this claim to objectivity by analyzing the differences in press coverage of the same event by the Associated Press (AP) – an American news agency – and Agence France Presse (AFP) – France's news agency.

AP presented a story containing less information than AFP and the reason for this discrepancy, Chodos says, is because AP uses "pyramid" news style (which newspapers say provides 'objectivity'), while AFP allows its writers to write in a looser, more interpretive style which often results in a more meaningful story.

When I first joined the McGill Daily (the McGill University student newspaper) in 1963, I was taught a set of extraordinarily rigid rules.

Paragraphs, I was told, are between three and four typewritten lines long. They generally consist of one sentence; at most they consist of two. The first paragraph of a story is invariably one sentence, of no more than 30 words. Elsewhere sentences are as short as they can be made. Subordinate clauses are frowned upon; the passive voice is banned outright.

Adjectives and adverbs are used only when absolutely necessary. Short words, like short sentences and short paragraphs, are preferred to long ones.

The first paragraph of a story contains the most important fact in the story. The second paragraph contains the second most important fact, the third, the third most important fact, and so on down the line. This is without regard to chronology, continuity and similar conditions.

This arrangement of information was compared to an inverted pyramid, becoming steadily narrower and less significant as it goes down. From this image came the term for the whole style of writing: pyramid.

The first paragraph, known as the lead, should answer three of the five W's: who, what, when, where, why. If it answers fewer than three, it will not have provided the reader with enough information; if it answers more, it is likely to be too long and cluttered.

The reporter writing in pyramid style keeps himself so far in the background as to be invisible.

A story written by one Canadian Press (CP) reporter should read very much like a story covering the same event by another one.

For example ...

Santa Clara, Calif. (AP) -- A woman gave birth to seven babies Friday, a doctor said. Two of the infants born two and one half-months prematurely were still born.

Dr. Anthony Damore said he delivered the babies, four girls and three boys, between 2:04 and 2:12 p.m. Friday.

Two of the surviving infants, he said, were taken to the Stanford University Medical Centre in Palo Alto, about 20 miles north of Santa Clara.

Three babies remained at Santa Clara hospital in critical condition.

The infants, considered by Damora to have the best chance of survival, were the two girls taken to Stanford.

There was no immediate comment from officials on whether the woman had been taking fertility drugs.

and ...

London (Reuter) – A Labour MP Thursday night advocated the reprisal execution of outlawed Irish Republican Army officers for every person killed by a bomb or sniper in Northern Ireland.

Reginald Paget, who was a Labour Party spokesperson on the army from 1961 to 1964, said in a Commons debate there were several hundred IRA men who were acknowledged officers.

"I would say that for each person who is killed by a bomb or sniper, then, within 72 hours, one of these men is going to be executed unless the guilty party is surrendered," he said.

Paget suggested there should be a list of those to be executed in order.

Milan, Italy (AP) – A terrorist trying to halt Milan's streetcar system and black out its streets was killed by the premature explosion of his own dynamite, police reported yesterday.

The man, about 45, was blown apart as he attached more than 15 pounds of explosives to a 50-foot pylon supporting the powerlines for streetlighting and transit in this city of two million, officers said.

There are several things to be noticed about these stories. The first is that almost every one of the rules mentioned above is violated at least once. The lead of the septuplets story has two sentences. In its fourth paragraph it uses the passive voice. The story of the Milan bomber is replete with subordinate clauses.

Nevertheless, all three perform the basic functions of the pyramid story. In each, the reader is presented with the essential information, in a form in which he can absorb it over the breakfast table or as he travels home on the bus. If he is only moderately interested in the birth of the septuplets, he can read only the first three or four paragraphs of that story and still get the important details (this particular feature of pyramid style makes it especially useful to editors, who may be faced with a deadline. If the story is written in true pyramid style, the editor can "cut from the bottom" secure in the knowledge that he is eliminating the least essential part of the story).

Second, the writers of these stories are very careful not to say anything on their own authority; they merely report what others say. It is not the reporter saying IRA officials should be killed; it is the Labor MP. The details of the Milan incidents are all attributed to the police.

Even so straightforward a matter as that "a woman gave birth to seven babies Friday," is not stated flatly; it is reported that "a doctor said," she gave birth to the babies.

Third, pyramid style is as specialized and artificial a language as that used by seamen, jazz and rock musicians, or political science professors.

It has its own peculiar phrases and sentence structures – "no immediate comment from officials" being an example of the first and the use of a "a doctor said" or "police reported yesterday" at the end of a sentence being an example of the second.

But unlike the specialized jargon of most professions, pyramid style is read by everyone. Despite its artificiality it passes right by people, and they take it for granted. Whatever purpose it serves, it serves quietly, subtly, and hence effectively.

The myth

Pyramid style is closely linked with the myth of objectivity, pyramid stories are often called 'objective stories'.

According to the myth, news stories are supposed to be totally free of any bias or value judgment. The reporter's only function is to record the facts as he sees them; the only judgment he is allowed to make is what is important and what is not.

The news pages of a newspaper do not depend on whatever political alignment the paper might have. The paper expresses its corporate opinion on the editorial page and individual writers express their individual opinions on the oped pages. To varying degrees, objectivity is accepted as a standard by all English-language North American metropolitan daily newspapers

It is not accepted by most European newspapers or by the French-language North American (Quebec) press.

The following is part of a story that appeared in Le Devoir, March 17, 1972:

Milan (AFP) -- The tension suddenly mounted in extra-parliamentary extreme-left circles, and also in the Italian Communist Party. The horribly mutilated body of Milanese leftist publisher Giangiacomo Feltrinelli was discovered at the foot of a high tension pylon, at Segrate, at the gates of Milan.

He was dressed in a military-looking outfit and was wearing paratroopers' boots. Two charges of 15 sticks of dynamite had been placed on one of the four cement bases of the pylon. Near the body could be found three haversacks containing 13 sticks of dynamite.

While investigators, before having even identified the body, supposed that the man must have committed a fatal error in handling the explosives, Mr Feltrinelli's colleagues for their part, are explicit: the publisher was the victim of a "monstrous assassination" for which they held responsible "international reaction and the right."

That is how high-pitched the emotion is in political circles, particularly in the extra-parliamentary groups of the extreme left...

The story goes on to discuss recent demonstrations organized by the extra-parliamentary left and the current situation of the Italian Communist Party, and speculates on the effect "L'affaire Feltrinelli" might have on both groups. A sidebar article describes Feltrinelli as "un intellectual engage"– a committed intellectual.

It is perhaps not immediately obvious that Feltrinelli is the nameless "terrorist" of the AP "own dynamite kills bomber" story

If the two stories are vastly different, it is because the one reported for AFP (Agence France Presse) spoke to "extra-parliamentary of the extreme left", and understandably did not receive the same information as the AP reporter, who spoke to the police (The discrepancy can't be accounted for by saying that the AFP reporter may have had more time to gather information. The stories appeared on the same day.)

But is not only the content of the AFP story that is different; the story is not written in anything remotely approaching pyramid style. The AFP story begins with tension mounting suddenly -- more the technique of the short story writer rather than a pyramid reporter.

There is no inherent reason why a person can't be at once a "terrorist" and a "committed intellectural". However, most of us look favorably on the latter, and few of us look favorably on the former.

This is not to suggest that either Le Devoir or AFP is especially sympathetic to the extreme left of which Feltrinelli was a part. Le Devoir is the voice of a group of conservative nationalist Quebec intellectuals, AFP a thoroughly established news agency in a position similar to that of AP in the United States or CP in this country.

It is to suggest only that in approaching his subject matter in an anlaytical and non-objective way, the AFP reporter has written a fairer story than his AP counterpart. By not pretending to be objective, he has given his readers a more accurate picture of objective reality.

The group

And yet the myth that North American news writing is objective still survives, and the use of the pyramid style helps foster it.

The reason it survives is that it is useful to the newspaper owners. For North America differs from Europe in that all its major newspapers are owned by one section of society. In Europe, the newspapers are frankly a political tool. There are newspapers representing communist parties, socialist parties, liberal parties and conservative parties. There is even a business-backed press and a labor-backed press.

The Beaverbrook papers in Britain are as reactionary as anything in Canada or the United States. But the Labour Party's Daily Mirror could run a photo of the American moon landing, in 1969, with the caption "From the people who brought you Vietnam...." And the British Communist Party publishes a highly respected daily newspaper, Morning Star.

There is no such variety on this continent. Our English language daily papers are divided between the Liberal and Conservative papers, but there is not one that supports the NDP. Not one.

In the United States even within that system it is consistently Republican, while the people stubbornly continue to elect Democratic Congresses and even, occasionally, Democratic presidents.

The main characteristics of the North American newspaper market is that there is a small number of sellers. It is what economists call an oligarchic market.

In addition, it is steadily becoming more of one, since the number of independent publishers is declining as some newspapers go bankrupt and others are bought out by the chains.

How oligarchies function is described by the economist Donald Eldon: "...A number of factors may lead commonly to the emergence of a 'group' relationship among sellers in an oligopolistic market...Oligopolies fail to act independently like sellers in a perfectly competitive market, and instead function more as a group in the sociological sense, with common aims and norms particular to that group." (Eldon, The Oligarchy Problem in Competition Policy, background study to the Interim Report on Competition Policy, Economic Council of Canada, 1970, pp. 10-12).

In the newspaper business, this has implications for more than just the publishers' commercail practices. It also has a direct bearing on the content of their newspapers. Often they will campaign with a vigorous and united voice on issues that directly affect their interests as newspaper publishers.

Perhaps the clearest example of this occurred a couple of years ago during a strike at the Ottawa Citizen the Ottawa Journal, although the strike was in its interests as a supposed competitor of the Citizen, published editorials denouncing the union and supporting the Citizen management.

Even more often, the content of their papers will be affected by their interests as members of a wider class of rich men. As A.J. Liebling wrote in his classical work The Press (Ballantine Books, New York, 1961):

"The 'taxpayer' is always 'overburdened', but it occurs to me as I write that he is always represented as a small, shabby man in underclothes and a barrel (the kind of fellow who, if he had a wife, two children, and no imagination, would be caught for an income tax of about eight dollars) and never be as an unmistakeably rich man, like, say, the proprietor of a large newspaper.

"The man in the barrel is always warned that a frivolous project like medical care for his aged parents is likely to double his already crushing tax burden. The implication of this is that the newspaper is above worrying about his parents, and of course, he is -- because the old man left him the paper." (Liebling, op cit., pp. 75-76)

Objective?

This is the press we are told is objective in its news pages. If the press were openly biased, and a means of expressing a point of view, then it would be clearly unfair that the entire press should express only one viewpoint, or at best, a narrow range of viewpoints. Therefore we can't admit that it is biased. We must say it is owned by the Communist Party, the Canadian Labour of Congress, or Lord Thompson of Fleet.

It is 'objective' to write a story on a death with political overtones using only police sources. It is 'objective' to report at face value the ranting of an MP--all the while knowing that public figures in general, and MP's in particular, say everything they say with the next edition or hourly newscast in mind.

The reporter simply lets the events pass through him onto the pages of the newspaper; he is a sieve. Jack Cahill, Ottawa bureau chief of the Toronto Star and an unshakeable exponent of the reporter as sieve theory, has said: "I have no opinions."

But of course, Cahill does have opinions; what he really means is that his opinions can easily be reconciled with those of Beland Honderich, who owns the newspaper he works for. Other reporters have opinions too, and not all of them are in the same happy position of Cahill. Some of them disagree with their publishers, and come to realize that in writing pyramid style and objective news they are helping to perpetuate something in which they can't believe.

People working on alternative and student newspapers tend to be particularly critical of the pyramid style and objectivity. This attitude is well-founded, but there is a caveat to be noted here.

The pyramid is so dangerous precisely because it is so extremely effective. It can be used by others besides the large newspapers and their allies. To believe in the pyramid as an ideal is self-delusion, but to reject it as a tool is self-indulgence. If the goal is to communicate information, both are to be avoided.

Touchstone: a new magazine

Ever since Quarry was transformed into a national magazine there has been a vacuum in the arts at Queen's. Students and staff attempting to produce creative works have lacked a suitable forum for their efforts. Several members of the Queen's community recognizing the need for a literary magazine are taking steps to publish such a periodical. The Magazine, to be called Touchstone, will make its first appearance next term.

Touchstone's editor, Dave Colburn, told the Journal that the magazine will contain: "fiction, poetry, short plays, graphics, and photographs."

The intention of Touchstone is to offer creative persons and their work an outlet for publication, discussion, and improvement. At the same time Touchstone will be offering the reading public a publication containing works of talent and value. The staff hopes to be able to produce a periodical that will be credible and attractive to prospective contributors and readers alike. Touchstone will be a popular medium offering people a chance to get started in the creative arts.

One of the problems facing the establishment of the magazine is financing. Printing costs, like everything, have risen enormously in the last while. Presentations will be made in the near future to the various Faculty and Year Societies, the Alumni Association, several departments and interested private and public concerns. To help offset the costs the magazine will be sold to the general public for 75c.

Colburn stated: "It is a sad fact of our day and age that magazines must depend on massive advertising, with a subsequent de-emphasis on the material, or rely on public funding. We cannot be self-financing. However, we should have most of our financial problems solved before Christmas." There should be funds available to Touchstone which will allow it to hold several competitions judged by the editors members of the appropriate departments. The first will consist of small monetary prizes for the best and-or most promising works of fiction and poetry; the second will be a contest for the cover of the first issue of the magazine. The winner of the cover contest will receive a monetary prize and have their cover design turned into a poster.

These contests are not meant to denigrate the artistic integrity of contributions, but instead are intended to give several of the contributers some material reward for their work. The would like to recognize all contributers, but our budget must necessarily be limited, someday, perhaps, everyone will be able to receive some sort of remuneration.

Touchstone is looking for original submissions from all interested persons, but at the same time is eager to find people with an interest in the business and mechanical aspects of magazine production. Anyone with an interest in the publication is invited to write or phone Dave Colburn at: 131 College St., 549-1529.

The physcial size of the magazine will be quite different from the various magazines which have appeared and disappeared in the last few years (sweven, third eye, escorial). It will be approximately 7" x 10" in size and consist of at least thirty-two pages, typeset, and printed on bookstock paper. Touchstone is still searching for a reliable, economical printer, however, there are several Kingston firms with the capability to fill the needs of the magazine.

Catch 22: A macabre comedy of characters

Tom MacGregor

Catch-22 is about a man caught on a catch, Catch-22, which says that the only reason for dismissal from the air force is insanity but anyone wanting out can't be insane therefore can't be dismissed. This is the kind of sophistry that makes up the macabre comedy of warped characters seen at Dunning this week. Joseph Heller's novel works from a confused, absurd energy which Mike Nichols has made an admirable attempt to translate into film.

The film is structured around a scene of inevitable horror. Against a clear background, we see our hero, Yossarian (Alan Arkin), confused by a silence broken only by a radio saying, "Help the bombadier! Help the bombadier!" "I am the bombadier" Yossarian replies. Each time this scene returns we see a little more and come to understand why Yossarian wants out and why he is sitting naked in a tree during a funeral.

If you find the plot confusing, wait till you meet the characters! We have Milo Minderbender (Jon Voight) whose enterprises on behalf of the base include bombing and defending it at the same time. Colonel Cathcart runs his base with the highest number of required missions in order to get his picture into Life Magazine. We also have a computer with a sense of humour which promotes Corporal Major (Bob Newhart) to the rank of major. The list and cast is practically endless but certainly Alan Arkin's performance rounds it all off well.

A two hour film couldn't hope to carry all the subplots to their natural end and their confused status anyway must make the film hard for those unfamiliar with the book. However for those who have read the book, or whose mind works this way anyway, Catch-22 makes its defiant message hilariously well.

On the road again

Great Canadian Rock Tours is announcing two more incredible shows. The first show is an unbelievable double header with Bob Dylan playing back-to-back with Joan Baez. This concert is at the new Convention Centre in Niagara Falls, New York this Saturday, the 15th. The show starts at 4:00 p.m. so to get there on time, the buses are leaving the Jock Harty Arena at 9:00a.m. The seats are the consistently good seats, and the price for the return trip and tickets is $30.00.

Then on December 11, Great Canadian Rock Tours is presenting the concert of the year. Maple Leaf Gardens is hosting Peter Townshend, Roger Daltrey, Keith Moon and John Entwhistle collectively known as The Who. Cost for this show, including return coach is only $30.00.

For ticket reservations call 544-9213.

Another Mel Brooks comedy

The Producers

Sandra Bernstein

Everyone knows Mel Brooks for his records of comic routines and for his movies, lately Blazing Saddles and Young Frankenstein. Many of you may have heard his interview on CBC last summer, when he declared that "Canadians all sound like Randolph Scott." This Friday, the Graduate Student Society brings you his first film, The Producers (1968), in Dunning Auditorium at 8:00 P.M.

Brooks wrote the screenplay, directed the film, and made a brilliant casting coup by coupling Zero Mostel and Gene Wilder. Mostel plays an aging theatrical producer who is reduced to seducing old widows so that they will back his productions. Wilder plays a timid accountant who mentions to Mostel his delight in a conceit of "creative accounting" by which a producer could make more money from a flop than a success, if he "overbacked" the show - that is, if he sold more shares in the show than exist.

The idea is illegal, of course, but Mostel convinces Wilder to become his partner. They sell 1000 percent of the shares in their new production, which will have to be the worst show ever put on.

Nobody could say the two don't try. They find a play by a demented ex-Nazi who feels the West doesn't appreciate what a terrific dancer the Fuehrer was. ("I revel," says Brooks, "in bad taste.") They hold auditions for the lead in the play, Springtime for Hitler, stressing that no experience is necessary. After a somewhat surreal sequence involving dozens of Hitler look-alikes, they cast in the lead role a freaked-out parolee who wanders into the theatre by mistake, his name escapes him, so they call him LSD. That's just the beginning.

Most of the humour in the film is verbal. Brooks hadn't learned, as he began to do with Frankenstein, to use the medium itself in a witty way. On the other hand, because the milieu of the movie is a theatrical one, his stagey mise-en-scene seems appropriate to his material. Some of the lines are awfully funny, and well-delivered by the principals. Wilder gives a delightful performance as a grown man so innocent that it embarrasses him to find he has inadvertently placed his hand on the posterior of a nude statue.

Mostel, too, is enjoyable in a well-conceived role. Brooks shows a keen sense of the obstacles to communicating to persuading people, in a world where everyone is absorbed in his or her private preoccupations and obsessions. Mostel here is the one who can break through these walls and reach each person on a level that has meaning in that person's world. Brooks always has time for pauses in the romp to marvel at the difficulties he faces. (Mostel: "Excuse me, madam..." Woman: "I'm not a madam, I'm a concierge.")

As usual in Brooks, there are touches of sexism, but the female roles are so small that this does not interfere with ones enjoyment of the rest of the movie.

The Producers is pure entertainment, and if that's what you're seeking on Friday night, I recommend it highly to you.

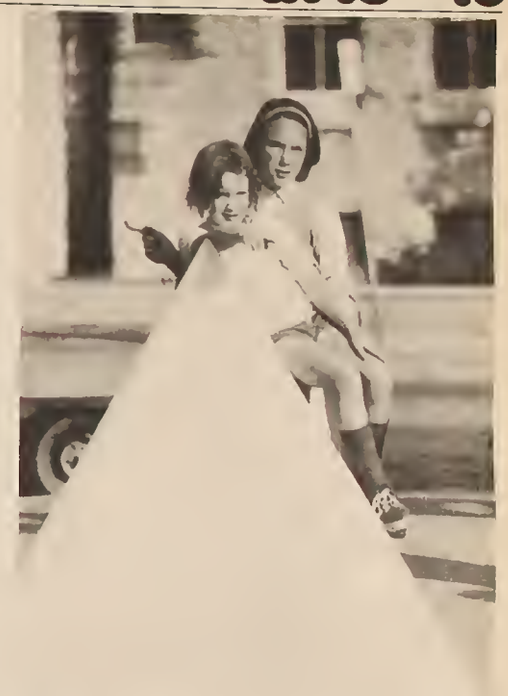
George Harlow White



The existence of one hundred pencil drawings by George Harlow White in the permanent collection of the Agnes Etherington Art Centre, charming studies of trees and forest in both England and Canada, motivated the search for further information about this artist and his work and has resulted in the present exhibition.

Harlow White spent a period of about six years in Canada, from 1871 to 1877, but his work was exhibited continually with the Ontario Society of Artists, the Royal Canadian Academy and the Art Association of Montreal, between 1873 and 1886. Catalogues of exhibitions in this period list a total of 158 works by him. He was born in England, the nephew of the notable portrait and historical painter George Henry Harlow, who died in 1819 in his thirty-second year. His British training, together with his style of painting and drawing put Harlow White squarely in the Victorian era as a painter of the 'picturesque' landscape.

In Canada, Harlow White has received the barest mention in art historical writing, even though about 300 drawings of Canadian subject matter are in the J. Ross Robertson Collection in the Metropolitan Toronto Central Library. Unfortunately, these drawings are not available for loan outside the library but some have been referred to by photographs in the catalogue and a group are on special display in the Metropolitan Library until December 1, 1975. Other works, mainly watercolours, have been found in public and private collections in Canada and a number of them are on loan for this exhibition, including two paintings in oil.

Documented evidence of Harlow White's life in Canada is still very sparse, and only one autograph letter has been found here. We base his considerable travels in Canada solely on his dated and inscribed drawings and watercolours. In 1880 he was elected 'Honorary non-resident academician' of the Canadian Academy of Arts, at its first meeting, Lucius O'Brian being the President. Both O'Brien and Harlow White had resided in Shanty Bay, Oro Township, near Barrie, and it must be assumed that they were acquainted with each other.

The exhibition has been prepared by Frances K. Smith, Curator, who has also written the fully illustrated catalogue and study of this artist, Occasional Paper No. 2, qhixh ia available at the art Centre, price $3.

Boccaccio's patient Griselda:

A heroine for the Renaissance

A public illustrated lecture by Dr. Paul Watson, Assistant Professor, Department of Art History, University of Pennsylvania will be held at Dupuis Hall on Thursday November 20, 1975 at 8:15 p.m.

This year is the six hundredth anniversary of the death of Boccassio (1313-1375) and as Paul Watson comments, "...our image of him is chiefly as a purveyor of bawdy tales. In the century after his death, however, Boccaccio was famed in great part as a moral author. The most popular of his stories was the patience of Griselda (Decameron, X, 10), widely circulated throughout Italy and the western world. This story was also the most frequently illustrated episode from the Decameron. During the fifteenth century is appeared as a favored theme of wedding furniture (Pesellino, Apollonio di Giovanni), decorative panels, and at least one extensive fresco cycle (Roccabianca, Parma). These works of art demonstrate that patient Griselda indeed became a heroine for the Renaissance and a model for wives. They further show how Renaissance painters altered Boccaccio's text to create a new pictorial type, "nude Griselda", at once an erotic figure and a shining instance of feminine humilityl." The theme of the lecture has a certain relevance as we examine the role of women in the twentieth century.

Paul F. Watson was born in Canada and received a BA from the University of Toronto in 1962, with a major in the History of Art. He received both the Governor General's Silver Medal and a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship that year and continued studies at Yale University, receiving an MA in 1964 and a Ph.D in 1970. He lectured on Renaissance Art at Queen's University Summer School in 1964 and 12965 and has been on the staff of the University of Pennsylvania, in the Department of Art History, since 1968.

He has a considerable number of Art Historieal publications, including "Boccaccio's Ninfale Fiesolano in Early Florentine Cassone Painting" (Journal of the Warburg and Courtaul Institutes, XXXIV, 1971, pp. 331-333) and, in press, "The Garden of Love in Tuscan Art of the Early Renaissance", to be published in 1976. He presented a paper on "Boccaccio and Medieval Italian Art" at the Tenth Conference on Medieval Studies, Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, Michigan, in May 1975 and is currently working on a study of Boccaccio's works as iconographic sources for Italian painting of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.

While in Kingston, Dr. Watson will also meet with staff and students of the Departments of Art and of Italian and Spanish.

House Alice built

Sandra Bernstein

Alice is a pudgy, thirty-five-year-old suburban matron who waits on her boorish husband and daydreams of Robert Redford. One day, hubby is killed in a car crash. Alice sells everything and hits the road with her precocious son and the family station wagon, in search of her childhood dream of fame as a singer. Her move out of her married identity gives a title to the film Alice Doesn't Live Here Any More, now showing at the Capital.

Alice's road leads through a lot of humiliating experiences and seems to stop with a job as a waitress in a Tucson truck stop called "Mel and Rube's". The place killed Rube fourteen years ago, but Mel survives. Alice is told that she'll make more tips if she undoes the top button of her uniform.

As she gets involved with a local rancher (Kris Kristofferson), Alice has to reconcile conflicting facets of her life: her past and present, her independence and the love she has to give, her longings and limited abilities, her dreams and her reality. Just when she has been learning to live without a man around, lover David enters to demand a choice between him and her career. Alice demands both.

Her problems, however, are given no simple solutions. The politics of the situation are nicely ambiguous, derived from personalities rather than feminist party line. Motivations, like ours, are not crystal-clear, but the characters seem real rather than being the fantasy-figures most films portray.

Ellen Burstyn, who plays the title role, conceived the movie, hired Martin Scorsese as director, and was involved with the script and production. Her aim was to help fill the desperate need many women feel for films about women, their lives, conflicts, and pressures. Alice is very rare in that it shows women as friends, not enemies, turning to each other for help when they are troubled and letting their friendship provide the only warmth in surroundings that are often bleak and empty.

Similarly, after innumerable road films and movies about cross-generational pairs, Alice is the first (since Harold and Maude, I guess) with a female as the senior partner. In many ways, it is reminiscent of Five Easy Pieces, both in genre and style of direction. Scorsese has a lot of Rafelson's idiosyncratic work with camera and sound track, and particularly his love of Kitsch and the absurd. Despite several weaknesses, I would say that Alice works better "filmically" than, say Diary of a Mad Housewife, (another film centring around a woman,) at least partly because of the strong personality behind it.

It succeeds also, however, because of the strong personality of its heroine, unique in recent film history for her warmth, maturity, and ambition. I hope all the Hollywood producers take a close look at the success of Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore, stop casting females as hookers and willing rape victims, and start making films that show people as they are today.

Queen's soccer Gaels end 'Golden' season

Gary Barnes

Sometime around 10:30 last Monday morning, a bus rolled up to the PEC, bringing with it the Queen's Golden Gaels soccer team, who were just returning from the CIAU National soccer playoffs held in Victoria BC. This competition brought to an end a very long and difficult season for the Gaels, but also the most successful season ever enjoyed by a Queen's soccer team. The players were molded into a real team by the hard work and guidance of coach John Walker. The Gaels distinguished themselves in B.C. with some fine play but unfortunately finished a disappointing fourth out of five teams.

Queen's received the most difficult draw for the tournament and would have to win three games in three days to capture the title. Their first opponents on Friday afternoon were the University of Manitoba Bisons, the Great Plains conference champions. The weather was cold, windy and rainy and continued as such for the next three days. The Gaels managed to open the scoring on a goal by Mark Bennett at the 9 minute mark. Horst Rabenick chipped a free kick into the Manitoba goal area where Mark headed it by the goalie for his seventh goal of the year. This goal turned out to be all the scoring the Gaels needed as the Queen's back line once again shut off any attacks by the opposing team. Manitoba had a very good midfield, but were never very dangerous in the goal area. In the second half, forward Jim Monaghan was pulled down by a Manitoba defender inside the penalty area and Tom Beeke converted the penalty shot for the Gaels. Down by a 2-0 score the Bisons, in their own frustration began to dispute the very strict officiating, and ended up by having two players ordered off the field. With a two man advantage the Gaels had the game practically sewn up and eased off for the last 20 minutes. Queen's third goal was scored by Gary Harvey, late in the game, on a goalmouth scramble.

Chris Clark, Captain of Queen's soccer club retires after this season.

With one victory under their belt, the Gaels now had to prepare for thesemi-final game the next day against Concordia of Montreal. Concordia (formerly Loyola and Sir George Williams) has made it to the National Final for the last four years and won it once. This may have had quite an effeel on the Gaels, as the first ten minutes of the game belonged entirely to a confident Concordia team. In this time, the Gaels were scored upon once, as Adel Bichelani broke through the middle on a good pass, and beat the Queen's goalie, Blair Hawkins, cleanly. After this, however, the Gaels began to settle down and started playing their own game. Queen's gradually began to control more and more of the game, until they were actually outplaying the strong Concordia side. Beginning the second half, the Gaels again controlled the play much more efficiently and were finally rewarded with a goal at the 11 minute mark of the second half Mark Bennett picked up the rebound from his own initial shot and promptly hit the ball into the corner. With this new life the Gaels appeared ready to take over the match, but this never materialized. They came close on a few occasions, and once Gary Harvey, who formerly played for Loyola, headed a high pass which bounced off the cross bar. Concordia continually played the long ball down the field, and rarely established any passing. Then with about 10 minutes remaining, the referee gave a very questionable free kick to Concordia from 20 yards out. Felix Bazzul wasted no time in putting a high hard shot behind the Queen's goalie for the winning goal. As the time gradually ticked away, the Gaels became offensive minded and were caught upfield when Cedomir Glusac scored Concordia's third goal on a breakaway. Queen's gave a last effort but failed to score again. The score does not give a true indication of the game as the Gaels could quite easily have been winners instead of losers. In the words of the University of Victoria coach, "Queen's was robbed".

In the final game Sunday, Victoria defeated Concordia 2-1. Queen's naturally suffered a letdown after Saturday's loss (their first in 14 games), and were slated to play Manitoba again in the consolatinn final. With only 12 healthy players, the Gaels played probably their best half of soccer all year, as the ball rarely entered their own half of the field. The only problem was that they forgot to score. The opportunities were numerous, but the ball never entered the Manitoba net. This trend continued into the second half, when all of a sudden Manitoba erupted for three goals within three minutes. The second one was on a questionable penalty shot. Queen's never recovered and went down to defeat 3-0, an exact reversal of Fridays game.

It was a very tough weekend for the Gaels, with their injuries and bad breaks, but nevertheless a worthwhile trip. After all, fourth best in Canada ain't bad!! Five players will be graduating (hopefully) and have played their last soccer game for Queen's. Captain Chris Clarke, Don Barager, Terry Lister, Jim Monaghan and David Prescott. Horst Rabaneick also will not return as he is studying at Queen's for one year on a West German government grant.

Coach John Walker will be on sabbatical next year and a successor has yet to be named. The rest of the team should be back to form the nucleus of next years team in search of another championship.

Rugby Gaels lose 13-9 to York firsts in OUAA finals

For the second consecutive season the Queen's Rugby Club fielded two teams in the Championship finals. At the end of league play the first team was tied with York for the top spot, the seconds were undefeated and faced the second place Western Mustangs in the finals. The Championship games were held at York, this past Saturday.

The seconds set a good example for our first team by thumping Western 20-4. The team played aggressive, exciting rugby and confirmed their position as the undisputed top team in their league. The seconds led 13-4 at the half despite the facl that they lost the services of Steve Wilson due to a head injury. In the second half the Queen's side was set back again by an injury, this time to their effective wing forward, Bill Buchanan. Bill suffered a broken cheek bone, which has since been repaired although the doctors were unable to do anything about the growth under his cheek. The Bermuda Buck was heard to mutter in his delirious state, "Thank God it was after Susie Q week". Don Johnston and an opponent did not see eye to eye on the rules of the game and the referee sent them both off to discuss their disagreement on the sidelines. The Queen's side, consisting of 12 players, managed to score a try late in the game ending the scoring at 20-4. Don Davies accounted for 12 points by kicking 2 penalty kicks and a conversion and by scoring a try. Yogi Yovanoff, and Ralph Lutes each scored a try. The seconds should be congratulated on an excellent team effort, which has been their trademark throughout the season.

The first team was confident that they could win the Championship. This confidence showed through early on in the game as the Queen's team made several charges deep into York territory only to be stopped a couple of yards short of scoring. However their territorial advantage resulted in the completion of three penalty kicks by Peter Kopp. At halftime the firsts led 9-0. The York forwards came alive the second half and played very aggressively, winning much of the ball. The backs also improved and on two occasions Bruce Matheson broke through the Queen's defence for trys, one of which was converted. A penalty kick late in the game finished the scoring at 13-9 in favor of York. It was a disappointing end to an otherwise successful season. In the Queen's locker room after our loss Bill Payne, our philisophical forward, was quick to put things in perspective with the comment that "of the 4.2 billion people in the world possibly a third have ever heard of rugby and of that third, half don't give a shit!"

Besides as was shown this past weekend its not always whether you win or lose the game but who the hell you play with. Thanks to you all for a great season and I hope the younger players in the club continue the Queen's tradition of hard hitting but clean rugby.

The Queen's Rugby squad ended their season with a 13-9 loss in the final to York University this past weekend.

Bews News

Paul Findlay

On Wednesday of last week the second game of the Bews Rugby final was played between P H E and Commerce '76, the latter having a one game lead. This game proved to be better played than the first, as both teams were able to move the ball up the field. However, both teams were tough in defending their goal lines as the score remained 0-0 until halfway through the 2nd half. Then Ron Knox kicked a 25 yard penalty kick to put Comm '76 into a 3-0 lead. With time running out Rick Powers was able to make a penalty kick to tie the game at 3-3. The teams first played two five-minutes halves of overtime but neither team was able to score. Then sudden death overtime started. After a couple minutes of play Commerce '76 won a scrum at midfield, got the ball out to their wing, Ted MacKenzie, who made an excellent run to go in for the try, giving Commerce '76 the Bews Rugby championship for the second year in a row.

Later that night Arts '77 met Arts '76 in the second game of the Flag Football final, Arts '77 having won the first game. In the first half Jim Baqaj took a screen pass 45 yards for a touchdown to put the 3rd year team ahead. Dave Cape converted. A tough Arts '77 defence did not allow the older team to move the ball. In the second half the game became a defensive struggle. Arts '77 had good field position but all they could manage was a single on a punt by Ian Whicher. In the last few minutes of the game, Arts '76 started to roll aided mainly by a bomb from Tom Hamilton to Tom Dixon. But Arts '77 held them for four plays and the game ended in an 8-0 victory for Arts '77, Bews Flag Football champions.

In Soccer, last year's runners-up Meds played Arts '78 in the first semi-final. The game was tied after regulation and after two 10 minute periods of overtime, 0-0. By the tie-breaking method each team was given 5 penalty kicks. Meds only managed 1 goal but Arts '78 managed 2 so they advanced to the finals. In the other semi-final Civil-Math edged defending champs Arts '77, 1-0 on a goal by Dave Ash.

This set the stage for the finals as Civil-Math took on Arts '78. The engineers got goals from Dave Ash and Dell Hallett, and George Costa earned a shutout to give Civil-Math the game, 2-0, and the Bews Soccer championship.

The Horseshoes finals were played on Monday. Randy Gynn of Law '77 had made the finals by beating Roger Roy of Arts '76. Charles Berger of Bus. Grads had beaten Tony Klemencic of Law '76 in the semi-finals. In the final Charles Berger became Bews Horseshoes Champion by 21-4, 21-6 scares. I understand that he was convincing all the way through the tournament, and was easily the class of the field.

Rec League Hockey Managers: payment for ice for 1st term is due by December 5, payable in the Recreation Office. Payment for ice for second term can be made at that time, also.

With the addition of playoff and default points for Rugby, Football and Soccer the fight for 1st place has tightened. PHE had a finalist and a semi-finalist team, Commerce '76 a champion and a semi-finalist team, and Arts '77 had a champion and two semi-finalist teams. Civil-Math passed Commerce '77 by virtue of their soccer win, and Arts '76 slipped behind Law '77 since they defaulted out of Rugby. Here are the standings:

1. PHE	24489
2. Comm '76	24182
3. Arts '77	23681
4. Civil-Math	19501
5. Comm '77	19458

Gaels beat Ryerson play York Saturday

Alps Boniwell

Last Saturday the Golden Gaels Basketball Team beat the Ryerson Rams 79-72, in their regular season opener. The victory left the Gaels undefeated and in a rather strange position; first place. Hopefully the Gaels will familiarize themselves more with the position. Indications are that they have the potential. Some of these indications surfaced in the Ryerson game. Dave Lockhart, who impressed the scorekeepers so much they awarded two of his six fouls to less privileged team mates, scored 22 points to lead Queen's. Peter Lainey, a rookie guard showed good poise under pressure as well as superb defence all game. As a team, the players picked up innumerable little things on offence and defence that go towards developing a running ball team. Unfortunately they also picked up innumerable other little things like fouls. Three Gaels fouled out and Ryerson had only one left. Luckily Ryerson was even quicker to catch on and fouled their entire starting line-up out.

This Saturday at 8:00 pm the Gaels will get a chance to create some real hype over the average excitement when they host a very tough York team. See you there!!

Rasketball - November 18 - 7:15 pm Bews
Ice Hockey - November 19 - 7:00 pm Arena
Co-Ed Volleyball - November 20 - 7:15 Bews

The Basketball regular season has drawn to a close with the Quarter and semi-finals getting under way next Tuesday night at 7:15 pm. Right now it looks as if Meds, Rehab, Nursing, Law, PHE4, PHE2, PHE1 and Chown will be battling it out on the courts for the championship. With only nine points separating the eight teams the games are sure to be close!

To all those who came out and participated but did not make the play-offs thank you for your support and we hope you had a good WIC season!

This is your last chance to be a WIC Convenor (organizer of an event). Application forms are available at the equipment counters at the Women's locker room. (You will be paid an honourarium for your work.)

Queen's Journal
Vol. 103 No. 18
Fri., Nov. 14, 1975

Founded in 1873 and published on Tuesdays and Fridays during the academic year by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Incorporated, Kingston, Ontario. Founding member of Canadian University Press. Editorial opinions expressed are those of the editor and not necessarily those of the AMS nor the University. Telephone (613) 547-2666. The rape of art and the artist

The self-styled creators of the soft drink cans behind the heating plant have written a letter to the Whig-Standard expressing their concern over the fate of their vandalism. They are worried that some body might decide to restore "Pollution" to its original state. It is depressingly ironic that these men are now concerned about someone defacing their so-called creation. It is at the very least two-faced of these vandals to wish their modifications to survive when they showed absolutely no interest in the artistic concern and intention of Yvon Cozic.

Many people have supported the work of these men with the feeble attitude that it looks better. "Pollution" in its original state was not beautiful, in the popular sense of the word, but then there is no rule which states that art must conform to popular notions, if there were art would become something insipid.

"Pollution" is a sculpture which offended many people. Part of its intent was to offend, it is a moot point whether it succeeds as art. "Pollution" made very many people uncomfortable; this was probably Cozic's intention. Pollution of the enviroment is an uncomfortable subject, the pop-art statement of Messers. Baker, Baker & Paul removes much of the uncomfortable feeling of the sculpture.

"Pollution" in its original condition was not pretty, and was not soothing to the intellect, but it was and as art as art was brutally destroyed by the insensitive vandalism of three men.

The point at issue is not whether we can 'prettify' a work of art that annoys us, but whether one has the right to destroy the integrity of an artist and his work. The answer, if we stop and think, is most decidedly no: people do not have the right to mutilate and vandalize any work of art.

Did you ever wonder why you look so down?

George Benson
"When the Queen gets up in the morning she looks down upon our Prime Minister,
When the Prime Minister gets up in the morning he looks down upon the Cabinet,
When the Cabinet gets up in the morning they look down upon the Members of Parliament,
When the members of Parliament get up in the morning they look down upon the people,
When the people get up in the morning they look down, because they have no one to look up to.

We'll keep improving

Dear Editors:
Regarding the article "UTC has problems" in the Journal of November 11,we find it, in all fairness, necessary to present another side of the story.

Whereas it is true that the University Travel Club has had some difficulties in the past, we wish to remind Ms. Smith that, after last year's shake-up of the Queen's Excursion Club, this year's executive has encountered some obstacles in attempting to set up a regularly functioning bus service. We believe, however, that we have managed to overcome these difficulties, and with the student support, that we can continue to improve that service.

We would suggest that taking Thanksgiving weekend as an example was a poor choice. We will admit that one or two of our buses were delayed; however, as we understand it, those who used Voyageur that weekend were subject to even greater delays.

As to other unfortunate incidents, for which we apologize, we would submit that these were the exceptions, not the rule in relation to the total number of people moved through our service, we would say that our track record is good.

No, we are not perfect. We are not professionals, nor do we charge a professional fare. However, let me repeat that, apart from extenuating circumstances, with the support of the student body, we will continue to improve.

University Travel Club

Suzie-Q speaks out

Dear Editors:
The Suzie-Q Committee had two major problems against them this year - one was the use of some buildings due to Convocation, the other was the new Ontario Liquor Laws.

We were lucky enough to obtain Leonard Hall for the Semi, but due to the law, it can only hold 400 people, meaning that only 200 tickets could be sold. At the present time, this room holds the largest capacity on campus.

It's not easy selling 200 tickets to a University of 10,000, but there were 200 tickets passed across the table in the John Orr Room on the three stated days to the people in the line-up. It was stated that approximately 65 tickets would be sold each day. Granted, we oversold a few on the second day, but more than 57 were sold on Wednesday - where that number came from, we have no idea.

The use of a list was the only solution at the time - whether it was the best one or not is debatable. Next year, Cindi's idea of a lottery may be used if these line-ups are to continue. People talked about our disorganization, but most of it was due to a few people in the line trying to organize everything for us.

It was claimed that we should have been there when the line up started, but we were asleep at the time, aside from the fact that we didn't realize baby-sitters were needed. If the tickets had been put on sale at 8:00 a.m., would people have started to line up at 12 midnight? Queen's has never before been faced with the problem of students lining up and waiting for 7 or 8 hours for a 4-hour dance!

Putting aside all the problems we had previous to the night, we were pleased with the success and we hope that all those who attended had a great time!

We don't think many people realize the behind-the-scene work that goes along with a night like this. We'd like to make a special thanks to all those who helped us with decorations, set-up, the A.M.S. constables for all their support and ideas - thanks, and to the faithful friends who stayed to clean up.

Good luck to the Committee of '76.

The speakers are all involved with kids in conflict with the law. Have you ever wondered what serviees are offered to a child (under 16) in this situation? This is the time and the place to learn! The Red Room, Kingston Hall, 8 p.m. Ms. Haeket, a former Volunteer Juvenile Probation Offiee, Judge Thompson of Juvenile & Family Court will be there to speak as well as people involved with Restitution-Diversion Programmes. Don't forget our first Newsletter is still resting in a neat pile on Pam's desk. Do come & pick up your copy.

As we said last week, we have many many programmes that need volunteers, and too few student volunteers! Do come in to our offiee (2nd floor, Grey House) and see Pam between 12:30 and 4:30 p.m. Pam is there to assist you in finding a suitable volunteer position. Most people are quite surprised when they leaf through our 'Book" of volunteer jobs, there are so many

Thank you to the eoneerned people who responded to our plea for volunteers last week! But we need more. A few of the jobs that need your help are:

ALFIE SEZ:

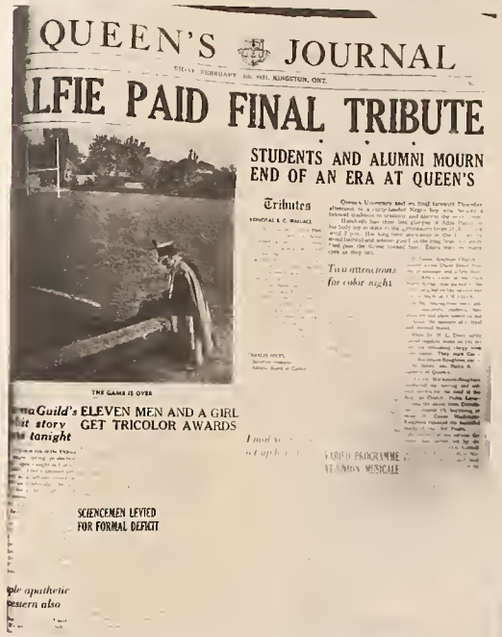
Terry Collins

Alfie Pierce, with the aid of his cane and accompanied by two tartaned cheerleaders, would slowly walk onto the football field wearing his tricolor suit. "What's the matter with Alfie?" "He's all right." "Who's all right?" "Alfie!" "Who says so?" "Everybody!" "Who's everybody?" At which point the spectators broke into a chorus of Oil Thigh Na Banrighinn, and Alfie would acknowledge the ovation with a shake of his tall hat. Until these phrases had echoed through the Old Richardson Stadium, the game would not begin. Alfie missed his first game in 1949 after fifty consecutive years.

Albert "Alfie" Pierce was associated with Queen's and its athletic teams as cheerleader-mascot for most of his life. Articles about him relate that many of his memories centered around the teams of Captain Curtis at the turn of the century. Alfie recalled that few people in those days wore head gear, and players would provide their own equipment. On one occasion, Guy Curtis had to play football in his stocking feet.

Alfie recalled the most exciting game ever for him as being the one played in 1891 (on the field now in front of Kingston Hall) between Queen's and Toronto's Osgoode Hall, a semi-final game for the Dominion Championship. At the end of regulation play, Queen's and Osgoode were in a 9-9 deadlock. After fifteen minutes of overtime, Queen's nosed out the opponents 11-10 by kicking a single point in the final play of the game. Alfie retold and relived that day untiringly.

Alfie Pierce lived on a pension from the AMS Athletic Board of Control (athletics now fall outside the realm of the AMS) and he did odd jobs when he was able. He was brought to Queen's when he was fifteen years old by Captain Curtis. "From that day on, Alfie was Guy Curtis' man and he worshipped Curtis and gave him a devotion that was almost pathetic. In return, Curtis held his protege in high regard. In later years, when he returned to Kingston, the first person he (Curtis) looked up was Alfie." "One Kingston businessman used to call on Alfie on Sundays. Always brought him magazines and candy (Alfie had a particular weakness for humbugs) and always stayed for a visit." So read in part two tributes to Alfie in 1951, the year of his death. The Journal devoted an obituary edition to



Alfie in 1942

Alfie with a cover picture showing him sitting alone on an empty football field entitled "The Game Is Over". Comments from Principal Wallace, "Dutch" Dougall, Coach Frank Tindall and ex-players from as far away as St Louis who had read of Alfie's death were published in that Journal. His body lay in state for several hours in the gymnasium as thousands of Queen's people and Kingstonians filed past to pay their last respects before the burial in Cataraqui

The Journal Editor wrote of Alfie. He gave not only his life, but his spirit to Queen's!"

Alfie's cane is still in Kingston. currently put to use by Mr George Ferguson, 92, of Providence Manor Mr Ferguson was a local barber and a great friend of Alfie's The ghost of Alfie Pierce has reportedly appeared in the Alumni Office recently.

Marriage and aid

WINNIPEG (CUP)---The Manitoba Student Aid Advisory Group has recommended that aid be given to students who marry or enter into common-law contracts after the beginning of classes, pro-rated according to the date of their marriage.

Students who apply for aid are currently divided into "dependent, those who are considered partially dependent, on their parent's resources or "independent".

If a student is married before the beginning of classes that student is automatically considered independent. If a student married after a term is commenced they are still "dependent".

If the recommendation of the group is accepted, however, the amount of aid a student received would be calculated using the rate for independent students for the rest of the year after that student marries. thus giving more aid to that student.

According to Paul McFadzen, student rep on the committee, this would "reflect a more accurate picture for married or common-law students."

However, this criteria does differ from the criteria used by the Federal Canada Student Loans Plan - criteria that all provinces have agreed to.

And the recommendation must still be accepted by the Manitoba Minister of Education before it can come into effect

McFadzen said he is worried it may not be accepted because of the existing federal policy

Defying controls

WINNIPEG (CUP) --- The Student Union executive at the University of Manitoba have been granted the 22 pereent pay hike they asked for, even though it violates the "spirit" of the federal government's wage and priee controls legislation.

The U of M student council voted overwhelmingly Oetober 30 to grant the executive a $100 raise to $550 per month.

A motion to give the executive an increase of only $50 per month was defeated

Few eouncillors doubted the executive deserved the raise The first question asked was, "Do you think it is enough?"

"We can't expect the executive to work so hard without paying them properly," said one representative from the council.

Community forum

Hugh Hagen

Community Forum Canada comes to St. Lawrence College on Saturday, November 22, at 9 a.m.

This particular conference is but one of several hundred being held across Canada, beginning some months ago and ending in June 1976. At this time, a United Nations conference titled "Habitat - A Conference on Human Settlement" will occur, and much of the information gathered by Community Forum will be presented.

Basically, the purpose of CFC is to bring together as many elements of local society as is possible - students, businessmen, senior citizens, etc. - and to have them discuss local problems facing them in everyday life as residents of Kingston. Such problems as the housing shortage (take note students!), high rents, lack of communication in local government could be discussed. Pending the outcome of these talks, proposals for the rectification of local problems could be formulated, and taken to decision-making bodies such as the Kingston City Council for future implementation into city policy. What should be stressed, however, is that the discussions in the workshops are of a formal nature. Whatever people want to talk about will be talked about in open discussion style. The Community Forum's purpose, then is to form concrete proposals, and to help ratify whatever situations need to be looked at and changed.

Forums have already been held in Montreal, Toronto, Saskatoon, Winnipeg with much success. Kingston's conference could be equal to past occasions if indeed people are concerned about social change and have faith in the democratic process of local government This is a golden opportunity for you, the reader, to change Kingston in ways beneficial to the community at large. Do you care?

Human Growth

Stephen Ross

Assumption. The child has a full potential for development. Later, some of it is lost. A ninety-year blind, alcoholic cripple has potential; worth. A sparkle.

We're striving for individuals, groups, societies that allow this full potential, encourage its development, (see Abraham Maslow The Farthest Reaches of Human Nature) not exactly knowing in which direction it might be heading We can only guess, or cite examples: Bach, Schweitzer, Einstein The best we can do by sensing some faint, idealist peaks, "listening to that which grows, to the way of Being in the world...in order to actualize it in the manner in which it, needing us, wants to be actualized by us." (Martin Buber from I and Thou).

The child is of maximum perfection at the moment of conception. If we can't give it all that we might, if we're denying it its full realization, abort it Its life becomes an abortion. A mistake. Each life born into our world shall have the chance for a full, meaningful, blossoming existence.

We need to change to allow all possible, truly human growth to occur, to aid in its creation

The next integrative education seminar will continue from this focus, as well as concentrating on the process of change in general, human communications and relationships Feel free to attend. Elrond College Thurs. Nov 20 at 8pm.

Graduating Students - All Faculties

Queen's M.B.A. Information Meeting

For any Queen's undergraduates considering an MBA, an informal meeting has been arranged for the purpose of providing information with respect to the Queen's MBA Program.

Faculty and current MBA students will be on hand to talk briefly about the program - its purpose, philosophy, structure, curriculum and teaching methodologies - and to answer questions with respect to such subjects as admissions standards and procedures, labour market demand for MBA's, the comparison between the Queen's MBA program and those of other graduate business schools, etc.

Questions of concern to specific individuals may be put to faculty or MBA students over coffee and refreshments after the general session.

Referendum

Vote against tying with CPI

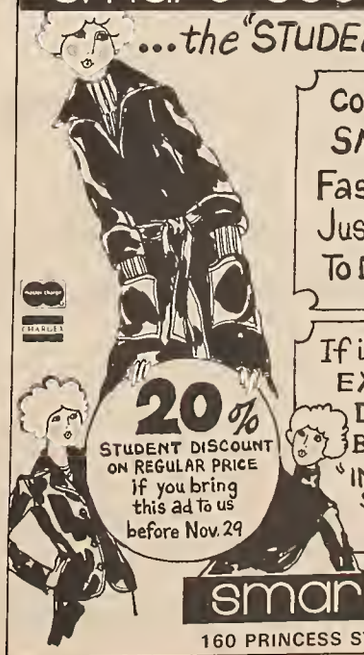
Ohhh!
Meds Variety Night...need we say more?

James C. Avis

It would be most unwise for Queen's students to establish a trend towards tying student activity fees to the consumer price index (CPI). Already the AMS specific fee is automatically increased each year by a percentage equal to the percentage increase in the CPI for the previous year. On the November 19 referendum, students will be asked whether a similar provision should be made in the case of the Student Athletic Fee, the Student Health Service Fee, and the proposed Community Service Fee. I make no comment on the merits of the proposed fee increases; I only say that no matter how valuable a service may be, students should oppose tying the fee for that service to the CPI.

The most undesirable consequence of such a move is that it tends to eliminate for all practical purposes the valuable opportunity to reassess the need for a service and the quality of a service that arises when each service is compelled to come to the "taxpayers" for an increase in its revenue. This process brings the service before the public eye and allows discussion of all aspects of the service. The onus to take action for a change in the fee structure should be left with those receiving the revenue and not shifted to those paying the fees. If you want to preserve your chance to say "no" to increased spending by services, say "no" to tying student activity fees to the CPI.

Furthermore, it is not clear that there is any real relationship between increases in the CPI and increases in the costs of student services. The CPI is a weighted average of commodity costs. The weight assigned to a commodity represents the proportional expenditure for that commodity in the total expenses of an average consumer. But student services are by no means average consumers! Consider, for example, the food and housing, two of the most heavily-weighted components of the CPI, are also among the components whose actual price is increasing most rapidly; these two items account for a large part of any current CPI increases. Yet few services have expenditures for food and accomodation. So it seems that CPI increases do not correspond to increases in the costs of services and there is no good reason for tying service fees to the CPI.



It should be obvious that to grant such automatic increases to some services is to set an irresistable precedent for doing the same in the case of the remaining services. Do you really want all student activity fees tied to the CIP in the light of the above arguments?

A guaranteed increase in income will decrease the motivation to make the best and most efficient use of funds, especially, as has been suggested, when the increased revenues exceed the increased expenditure. Thus voting for the CPI proposal would encourage loose spending practices.

Finally, remember that last year's CPI increase was over 10 percent. If all current student activity fees (excluding faculty society fees) were to increase at 10 percent per annum for the next five years, the total fee would increase from the present $75.21 to $120.95. And this figure does not include any new fees or specific fee increases in the interim. Do you think it is right to leave such a legacy to future Queen's students? Why not let them decide what fees are appropriate in their situation?

For all these reasons you should vote against all proposals to automatically increase service fees proportionally to increases in the consumer price index your health...

ALL STUDENTS CAN VOTE

Tomorrow's referendum could affect:

Dear Editors:
The AMS argues that students should not be treated as a privileged elite, but should go to a family doctor downtown or to the hospital emergency. In fact, because most students do not live in Kingston, and because there are so many of them, the family doctors are not prepared to handle the full student load if the Student Health Service folds up or is reduced.

The Emergency wards of the hospitals are designed to handle emergeneies and are not equipped to take over the role of Student Health. Emergency wards are already being overused and their facilities abused. It should also be realized that treatment in Emergency often requires a follow up by a family physician. This service is provided by Student Health.

At Student Health one may see a doctor in a few minutes with no appointment. The care is fast, efficient and professional. Its services are well used as can be seen by the number of students that are always there. The service provided should not be regarded as an undeserved privilege but as a goal for all health care.

Student Health is an excellent immediate service geared for students. Unfortunately the administrators' unofficial line is that it will reduce its support of Student Health. If Student Health is to maintain its present service, the student fee will have to be increased from six dollars to ten dollars. Four extra dollars is very little. I feel that Student Health is well worth it.

Richard Pidutti

Dear Editors:
I am writing to try to clarify some of the facts which bear on the question of raising the Student Health Fee and especially to bring to light the implications behind a YES or a NO vote. The total 1975-1976 budget for the Student Health Services is $355,918 and of this $304,559 goes towards the "people costs", i.e. admin., professional, technical, and casual academic salaries, and $29,859 covers the cost of supplies, an expense which has been cut to an absolute minimum in recent years. On the revenue side, $160,000 is recovered from O.H.I.P. receipts, $60,000 is paid by the students, and the remaining $135,918 is made up by the University. What this means is that at the present time our Student Health Fee, as a percentage of total expenses, is only 16.8 percent, while the University's support (exclusive of capital costs for premises, maintanance, heat and power) as a percentage of total expenses is 38.1 percent. These figures have greatly differed from the agreement for each to pay the same contribution.

Now let's look at the implications of our vote. If the fee stays at $6, the University will drop its contribution to the equivalent of $6 per student as well, i.e. meaning revenue will drop by $75,000! When this happens, the biggest area of expenses, the "people costs", will be the one first hit. With fewer nurses, perhaps one less doctor, and possibly no casual doctors at peak periods, the service now offered will be cut noticeably. We will wait longer and have less medical staff to see to our needs.

The rationale behind raising the fee to $10 is this: based on roughly $360,000 needed, our health care costs at $36 per student; O.H.I.P. contributes about $16 of that; and therefore the remaining $20 would be split between the student and the University. It must be remembered that the receipts from O.H.I.P. depend entirely on how many students use the service. If we find ourselves waiting in long line-ups at the clinic, most likely some of us will decide to go elsewhere or not go at all. Therefore the total O.H.I.P. receipts will be less and the clinic will be suffering even more.

I realize that we are being asked for more money all the time, and specifically in this referendum for both athletics and health. Yet I can only hope that we will all consciously set our priorities in face of us, because although I do strongly support the proposed increase in the Athletic Fee, at the same time I realize that my health and its care is more important than my sports. I cannot imagine any significant portion of our 10,000 students suddenly finding ourselves forced to use the already overburdened emergency and clinic services of the two city hospitals. It is a real possibility because there simply aren't enough funds, and our Health Service will suffer seriously, if not conceivably be abolished altogether. Please consider your vote, you may have need for the clinic someday even if you never have had before.

agencies...

Dear Editors:
I am writing you this letter to tend my support to the referendum to increase the A.M.S. services fees by $ .75. This money is needed to enable agencies to meet their commitments to the students and the community. These agencies are supplying a vital need, as they are not duplicating any other agencies in this community, but provide services that have been lacking for some time. These agencies enable students to gain valuable practical experience, as well as dispel the idea that the University is concerned only with its own matters, and returns nothing to the community. Through these agencies, Queen's is gaining a reputation as a university that cares what happens outside its confines, and is receiving support from the community in its endeavours. Let's support these agencies so that they can continue to provide a valuable service both to the students and the people of Kingston. Come on out and vote to support your agencies.

Ian McLeod

Dear Editors:
On November 19th, students will go to the polls for a referendum. Altogether there are five motions to be voted on. The one I am most concerned about is the proposal to increase the University Athletic Fee from $20.00 to $25.00. I fear its defeat, that is why I'm writing this, in hopes that the students, or that portion that plans to vote, will understand and support the need for such an increase.

This University Athletic fee goes towards all athletic activities including men's and women's intercollegiate, men's and women's intramurals, and recreational activities. It sponsors intercollegiate teams and their competition, and for those of you involved in intramurals, it pays for your convenors and buys and repairs and equipment you use. Did you know that about 50 percent of the student body participated at least once in intramurals in 1974-75 and that about $27,000 was spent on the equipment pool itself.

In addition, your fee goes towards the grants given to different Queen's clubs, like the Ski Club, the Outing Club, the Curling Club, and the Scuba Club, just to mention the largest ones. It keeps the membership fee down and alleviates some of the financial pressures of running a club. Altogether more than 1,100 students are members in these clubs.

A portion is also used to subsidize the sports skills program, in order to maintain a low cost to the student, as well as the annual Ski-School. This year, the school plans to head for Dry Hill.

This University Athletic Fee has not been increased in 5 years. When the costs of everything from equipment to transportation were skyrocketing, the 5 athletic committees had to function with a minimal increase. They were forced to tighten their belts to the point of cutbacks. For example the Women's Intercollegiate Committee had to drop a few intermediate teams because of lack of funds. Less drastic measures have also taken place on the other committees.

It has been suggested that racquet rentals be increased, and there were even proposals to eliminate club grants, in order to save funds. Is this what you want?

Athletics, be it intercollegiate or recreational, is an essential feature of University life, so vote yes for the increase in the University Athletic Fee.

Bev Watters
AMS Undergrad Rep. for Recreational Services Committee

Dear Editors:
I would like to take this opportunity to voice my views on why the students of Queen's should support the student athletic fee increase on the upcoming referendum.

Firstly I would like to make it clear that this fee increase is for direct use in Queen's intercollegiate, intramural and recreational programs. The athletic fee does not cover the maintenance costs of the Phys. Ed Centre, the user fee of $7.50 which is item 3 on the referendum covers this area of financing.

Queen's intramural sports, both mens and womens have undergone vast increases in the numbers participating in the past several years. For example in hockey, the demand by students to play at a Bews level has increased so much that this year an extra recreational hockey league has been set up. This allows those who "can't make" the Bews team of their unit, because of the large number of those who want to play hockey, to play in a fun league. Needless to say it means that Intramurals must buy extra ice time for this 20 team league.

That is only one sport that has increased participation recently. Since 1971 when the athletic fee of $20 was first charged to the students, 6 new sports have been added to the Bews list. In order to maintain this high level of participation money is required to pay for facilities, referees, convenors, etc. If an increase in our money supply does not come then we will have to reduce our program considerably, possibly below that of 1970-71.

Queen's is one of Ontario's medium sized Universities. Yet we are expected to participate at an intercollegiate level with much larger schools, with larger budgets. This has put quite a strain on the managers and coaches of Queen's teams to put out equal quality at a "lower price". We still have the quality as exemplified by the excellent performances of our rugger and soccer teams (Rugger Firsts--OUAA Finalists, rugger Seconds--OUAA Champions, Soccer--OUAA Champions). In order to continue with the present athletic fee of $20, all of these teams would have to cut budgets drastically to meet rising prices. Result--lower quality. You like going to the Queen's football games? Sure everyone does but with present budgets the next game you go to may feature the Golden Gaels in stocking feet, unable to afford cleats!

What it all amounts to is, if you like participating in Bews' present program and you want to see competitive Queen's teams in the future, then you'd better get out on the 19th and vote YES to item 2.

Dear Editors:
On Wednesday, November 19, the students of Queen's will be asked to vote on the issue of increasing the University Athletic Fee. Many students have been led to believe that the current Athletic Fee of $20.00 is used to support the salaries of Physical Education Staff, Athletic Coaches, Maintenance Staff and Security Officers. This is not the case. The Athletic Fee is used strictly to subsidize athletic activities and equipment.

First, your fee is used to support the officially recognized clubs of the Recreational Services Committee. Without your fee, these clubs could drastically be affected in terms of funding and availability of specialized equipment.

Second, your fee supports our intercollegiate teams. Unfortunately, in 1975 some women's intercollegiate sports were dropped from the athletic program. A possibility exists in 1976 that these cutbacks will be directed at the men's intercollegiate program as well as the women's program.

Third, your fee helps maintain our extensive and first class equipment pool. No one likes playing a sport with a broken hockey stick, squash racquet or punctured monster ball.

Fourth, your fee is used for the sport skills program. If you are a beginner, there is no better way to learn to participate in a sport than from a highly skilled athlete. If you are one of the fifty percent of the student population who enjoy these activities, please be aware that in the near future you may not be able to enjoy these activities at the same quality or even quantity. On November 19, please show your support for continuing the high standards of Queen's athletic activities by voting in favour of the increase in the University Athletic Fee.

Letters

The Queen's Journal wants to print your comments and opinions, in the form of Letters to the Editors -- as long as certain requirements are met with.

First, all letters should be clearly written (preferably typed) -- if we can't read what you say we're not very likely to print it. Secondly, they must be signed, if you wish to remain anonymous, we will print the letter with a pseudonym, but for our own protection, we must know who wrote it. Thirdly, we reserve the right to edit any letter. Letters should be sent to The Editors, Queen's Journal Office in the basement of the Student's Memorial Union.

Referendum: These issues concern you and your pocketbook

Health Service

On Wednesday, November 19, the issue of the Student Health Service will be voted on through a campus-wide referenda. The question appears as a direct result of the report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint and the response of the A.M.S. to that report.

When the Student Health Service was originally established, it was on the basis of an agreement with the University that the students would pay 50 percent of the cost of the service over and above that covered by OHIP and the University would cover the other 50 percent. Since the establishment of the service and the corresponding Student Health Fee of $6.00 which every full-time student pays, the costs have gone steadily up while the student contribution has stayed at the same level. As a result, the University has been paying more than twice what the students are ($13.50 compared to $6.00). The University has decided that it is going to go back to the 50-50 agreement and therefore, the student fee will have to go up if the present level of service is to be maintained. The question therefore becomes what level of service should be offered by the Student Health Service.

However, a larger issue that was raised by the A.M.S. Report was whether there is a need for a Student Health Service at all. The feeling was that given that there are two hospitals close to campus and what would appear to be an unusually large number of doctors for a city the size of Kingston, why have such an expensive operation directly on campus. Students could go to doctors in Kingston and use the emergency departments of the hospitals when necessary, just like any other citizen of Kingston. If a student did not know a doctor, a referral service such as Teleclinic could refer him to a doctor who was available. A small service could even operate on campus funded directly by O.H.I.P. to handle special situations. In addition, this would save the University and the students together about $200,000 each year. The question is one of priorities:- Is the Student Health Service a luxury or is it a necessary part of the University Community? This is the first question that you are asked to answer.

The second question is to be answered by everyone who votes. It assumes that we will have a Student Health Service and asks you what level of service it should provide. If you answer $10.00, then the level of service will be the same next year as it is this year, because the student contribution will jump from $60,000 to $100,000 and the University's will drop from $135,000 to $100,000. If, however, you vote for the fee to stay at $6.00, then the student contribution will stay the same and the University's will drop from $135,000 to $60,000 to regain the 50-50 split of costs. This will mean that the Student Health Service will have to cut $75,000 out of its budget and that means a drop in the level of service. Where the cuts will be made are not known, but it is likely that the infirmary will be eliminated and there probably won't be as many doctors and nurses on staff so service will be slower.

Whether we need a Student Health Service and what level of service any Student Health Service should provide are the two questions you are asked to decide. Vote on Wednesday and tell the A.M.S. and the University what you want!

Athletic fees

Question 1

(a) Shall the University Athletic fee be increased from $20 to $25?

(b) Shall the University Athletic fee be adjusted annually by the percentage change in the Consumer Price Index using 1975 as the base year?

The University Council on Athletics (UCA) is composed of 14 voting members, 7 of whom are students, and is the body charged by the Senate to be responsible for the recreation, men's and women's intramural and men's and women's intercollegiate athletic and sports activities at Queen's. The UCA budget consists of the cost of sports officials, travel, supplies and equipment for the activities and is funded primarily by the $20 Student Athletic fee. None of this money goes toward the maintenance or operation of the Physical Education Centre. The UCA budget appears on these pages.

Recently, the UCA presented a "Report on Inflation and the Athletic Fee" to the Senate. Quoting from this report: "Five years ago when the $20 fee was first implemented, the demands of the various athletic programs were adequately met. Over the years, inflation has eroded the purchasing power of the $20 athletic fee. Granted, student enrolment did increase during these years, and this had the effect of increasing the UCA budget. However, the budget increases were largely illusory as the increase in the number of students also served to increase demands on existing services and programs, with resulting increase in costs. In any case, the increases in the numbers of students at Queen's over the past few years have not been large. Virtually no increase in the total athletic budget under the present structure can be expected in coming years since the student population has now reached a steady state.

"Consequently, the various athletic programs have had to be trimmed so that now the UCA is facing the very real prospect of actually cutting or eliminating some of its programs, unless additional funding can be acquired...

"Much of the cost of providing athletic programs at Queen's goes into equipment, travelling and food. The costs associated with these expenditures have increased over the last few years at rates which substantially exceed the average rate of inflation."

The Senate Committee on Student Affairs, after discussion with representatives from the UCA, AMS and the University administration, foresees the following implications for voting Yes or No on the proposed $5 increase in the University Athletic fee:

Yes: Acceptance of the $5 increase would maintain the current program of activities in recreational, intramural and intercollegiate sports at Queen's.

No: Rejection of the $5 increase would result in a number of existing sports and activities being impaired with some being dropped entirely. The actual decision concerning which programs to curtail or terminate falls under the jurisdiction of the UCA.

Yes: A Yes vote on this question means that every year the University Athletic fee would be adjusted based on the previous calendar year's C.P.I. and would not require an additional referendum. This essentially means that the student wishes to maintain the present athletic program into the future.

No: A No vote means that nay future increase in the University Athletic fee will require an AMS referendum.

Question 2

Shall an Athletic Facilities User's fee of $7.50 be established to provide funds for the capital repairs and maintenance of Physical Education facilities?

The proposed user's fee, which would be an addition to the Student Interest fee, operating in a way similar to the Student Union fee, would be used to supplement the budget of the Administrative Office for Athletics and Physical Education. This budget is separate from that of the University Council on Athletics and a copy of the budget appears on the AMS page of this issue.

The Administrative budget is mainly allocated for the cost of major maintenance and repairs to the physical education complex, including the West Campus facilities and tennis courts, the employment of part-time coaching staff for both intramural and intercollegiate programs, the locker service and security. Funds for this budget are received from the University Operating budget, University Investment Income, non-student and staff memership fees, locker fees and gate receipts.

The approximate requirement of an additional $100,000 for this budget has resulted from two separate problems. The first is that there are now (for the first time since the opening of the $8 million physical edueation complex and west campus facilities) requirements for major repairs and the purchase of new equipment to replace that which has worn out. Secondly, in 1975-76, the contribution from the University's Investment Income included a special contribution of $56,000. Due to financial stringencies, this special contribution can no longer be justified since money from this fund is increasingly required to support other programs.

Presently, students and full-time staff do not make any contrbution toward the maintenance or capital replacement costs of the physical education facilities. It should be remembered that the $20 University Athletic fee is not used for major repair or replacement costs, but only for the programs described in the discussion of Question 1 above.

Implications of your vote

Yes: The implications of accepting the $7.50 User's Fee is that the Administraitve Office for Physical Education and Athletics would receive an increase in its budget of approximately $75,000 of the required additional funds. It is understood by SCOSA that additional money will be generated by a fee for faculty and staff use of the facilities.

This money would enable the required major repairs and replacement of equipment to be carried out and the continued operation of the facilities at their present level.

No: A rejection of the proposed fee would mean that the facilities could not be maintained at their present level.

Community services

On Nov. 19, Queen's students will be asked to include a $ 75 Community Service Fee as part of their student activity fee, beginning next fall. The funds raised by the collection of this fee will total about $7500 which will be used to support such services as TAK, the Birth Control Centre, Telechnic, the Drug Centre and the Student Volunteer Bureau. These services are presently funded by the AMS with funds taken from the AMS portion of the student activity fee.

The purpose of setting up this separate fee is basically to provide a continuous source of funding for the services. Each year at budget time, the AMS Outer Council considers the budgets of these services. Budget night is usually a long drawn out affair. Everything from secretaries' salaries to Homecoming week is discussed. Each year, to maintain a balanced budget, trade-offs must be made, and budgets get cut. These services are often the most vulnerable budget items, and they are never really sure how much money will be available next year.

As well as providing adequate, continuous funding, the Community Service Fee offers other advantages. By removing the services from the External Affairs budget, they will become a discrete service group, and this will encourage better integration of services. When budget decisions must be made, the services will have to decide among themselves where the priorities lie. It is hoped that his will lead to a balanced co-ordinated bank of community services.

The Student Volunteer Bureau, as the name implies, serves to coordinate recruitment and placement of student volunteers in activities ranging from the Drug Centre to the John Howard Society, companions for senior citizens, etc. Telephone Aid Kingston (TAK) provides a sympathetic and helpful ear for those with a problem or who simply want to talk. The Centre for Drug Information and Counselling provides information and counselling on licit and illicit drugs and associated problems. In addition, they provide a Crisis Intervention Service. The Birth Control, Abortion, and Venereal Disease Information and Referral service provides information, counselling and referrals on matters relating to sexuality. The Teleclinic provides information, referrals and counselling on a broad range of health and social problems. These services were originally aimed at the Queen's community, but more and more, they are being used by members of the Kingston community.

You are being asked therefore, to pay a 75 cent tax to support a co-ordinated service group. We have a very real responsibility to provide these services to the community in which we all live. I urge you to vote YES on Nov. 19, for the Community Service Fee.

Liquor fees

The referenda on November 19 includes a question of whether the student interest fee should be increased by 50 cents for the next four years to repay the University for expenses incurred in making various repairs and alterations to several locations on campus in order to have them qualify for licenses under th new regulations established by the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario. The estimated funds expended by the University for this purpose is $22,800. This fee, if passed, would provide approximately $20,000; the balance would be found from other sources.

Currently to run a licenced event on campus, the sponsoring group must go through the University for permission, bear the cost of a certain number of University personnel in addition to volunteer student help to staff the bars, and must sell at the University's prices only (60c for beer, 75c for liquor). In addition, the University takes 50 percent of the surplus off the operation of the bar in an attempt to recoup the expenditures indicated above for the repairs and alterations to the facilities.

The effect has been that a large number of social events on campus have been dropped because the sponsoring groups have found that it is not financially worthwhile to try and run them. As a result, the student body is losing because there are not many social events on campus and the University is not gaining anything because the fewer events that are run, the less their 50 percent contributes to the repayment of the alterations.

Despite protests from the AMS and a number of faculty societies, the University has stated firmly that they will not remove the 50 percent levy. The reason given is that in the present state of financial constraints, there is no money to pay for these repairs and alterations and therefore, they have to get the money back from someone and the logical place is from the people who use the facilities. In an attempt to get the funds in a different manner, a petition was circulated by a group of students requesting the AMS to place the issue on the referenda ballot.

If the fee is approved, the 50 percent levy will be removed and it should be easier for people to put a social event on, on campus, although the days of crowded beer bashes in Grant Hall with beer 3 for a $1.00 are gone forever (or until the L.L.B.O. changes its policies which amounts to the same thing). An argument can be made, however, that the University benefits from having improved facilities on campus that are licenced, and the students should not be stuck with paying the cost of these alterations to University buildings. The answer to this issue is not an easy one. The decision rests with everyone on Wednesday. Make your feelings known - GET OUT AND VOTE.

McArthur opens with Macbeth

Shelley Ledger

To theatrically produce "Macbeth" is "an ambitious undertaking", states Andrew Orr, the Associate Co-ordinator of Student Teaching for McArthur College. With forty years experience in drama here, and in his native Scotland, Mr. Orr is well able to qualify and to undertake such a project. From tonight, through to Saturday, he will direct the McArthur Dramatic Arts production of Macbeth.

Orr's personal, profound attraction for Shakespeare and particularly "Macbeth", its language and convoluted characters, have partially determined the choice of production. Also, he explained, "We decided to attempt it because Shakespeare is a part of the curriculum in many of our high schools, and students will have the opportunity to see a live performance of one of the plays."

High school students visited the faculty of education to watch a rehearsal in action, and members of the cast travelled to perform at schools too far afield to attend. Lady Macbeth and Macbeth enacted the same scene several ways for students to choose which presentation they preferred. The three witches took to the road for some performances as well. Discussions on the rehearsals and the play completed the visits.

Backstage, the production crew responsible for stage managing, lighting, props, make-up, costumes and set construction, is made up of Bachelor of Education students who are earning a degree credit in Dramatic Presentation.

Sets, lighting and costumes have been designed by Gavin Semple a highly talented professional artist and designer who has contributed in the past to the Queen's Drama Department, Drama Guild, Domino and Mekanique Theatres. The set design has transformed McArthur's proscenium stage into stylized tenth century Scottish masonry.

The designer working from a basic gallery has increased the number of playing spaces, condusive to an essence of separate but broad, open areas.

Orr and Semple have felt the necessity for a faithful presentation in original historical setting and costume. According to Orr, "Some directors today are doing Shakespeare in modern dress. But I think with Macbeth, if one is faithful to the text, the relevance of what Shakespeare is saying comes out."

Professor David Keane of Queen's music department has composed original music for the performance, written to reflect the historic setting of the play, but also to enhance the play's unreal and ghostly qualities. Professor Keane creates primarily with electronic equipment to produce the special effects

A conviction exists within the theatre, that no one can ever make a success of Shakespeare's brilliant tragedy. Orr explains, there is "a thing about Macbeth. It's a tradition of the theatre that it is unlucky even to quote Macbeth in the dressing room."

Leading the cast are David Kemp as Macbeth and Lorna Wilson as Lady Macbeth. Howard Hughes and John McGovern both McArthur students, will play Macduff and Malcolm respectively.

Other cast members are Stan Morton as Duncan, Joanne Hutchison as Lady Macduff, Peter Brydon as Ross, Larry O'Farrel as Banquo, and Chick Reid, Harriet Boyes and Nancy Clark as the three witches. Two elementary school students and two teachers with the Board of Education are also in the cast.

McArthur's Macbeth proves to be a particularly fascinating and "ambitious undertaking". Performances run November 18, Tues. through to Nov. 22, Sat. at 8:30 P.M., McArthur Hall auditorium. Tickets are $1 for students and Senior Citizens, and $2 for adults.

Concert tonight

There is to be a band concert in Grant Hall tonight, November 18 at 8:30 p.m. The Music Department of Queen's University is presenting the concert played by the fifty-two member of Queen's Wind Ensemble, under the direction of David C.M. Smith. Admission is free.

This is the first of the twice-yearly performances by the Wind Ensemble, which has many members in common with the extremely popular Jazz Ensemble, also directed this year by David Smith

The program's wide-ranging music has all been specially written for, or arranged for, full band, and the ensemble will play only in this capacity, differing from previous years' inclusion of smaller groupings of instrumentalists.

The program opens with James Gayfer's CANADIAN LANDSCAPE written in 1975, and proceeds with WHEN JESUS WEPT (1959) by William Schumann; FETES from THREE NOCTURNS, arranged by William Schafer; MARCH FOR CONCERT BAND by William Walton; SINFONIA FOR SOLO TRUMPETS AND BAND, by Guiseppi Torelli and featuring soloists John Palmer, Terry Marek, John McEwen, Victoria Handford. WILLIAM BYRD SUITE, by Gordon Jacob; and last but by no means least a transcription of George Gershwin's AN AMERICAN IN PARIS.

International in its representation of composers, this program should attract an audience who appreciate the special sound of fifty-two woodwind and brass instruments playing concert band music.

More on referendum

Dear Editors:

Another referendum· "Good God!" you say ..and then don't even bother to find out what it's about, let alone vote on it. Apathy runs rampant at Queen's; we're even becoming apathetic about our apathy.

A word about the proposed 75 cents from each student in support of student services...student services include such things as the Birth Control Centre, TAK, Career Planning and Placement, the Drug Centre and the Student Volunteer Bureau. These programs are worthwhile"both to Queen's students and to Kingston residents, and, in the case of SVB,, provides a much needed link between the two groups. The Student Services at Queen's are among the best of all the Ontario Universities. (For example, Queen's is one of only three universities in Ontario that has a Career Planning and Placement Centre.) We are fortunate to have the quality of Student Services that we have and should strive to keep them that way.

The reason we ask for yet another 75 cents from each student to go to Student Services is that this would provide a guaranteed annual income for the services. As it is now, each year we must submit a budget proposal (actually, two budget proposals - one for the academic year and one for the summer) to the AMS and, depending on how well we can plead our case, how charitable the existing AMS executive is and how many other groups are begging money from the AMS budget, we may or may not receive the money which we require. With your 75 cents, we would be financially secure each year and able to operate with maximum efficiency for the benefit of all, knowing ahead of time how much money we have to work with. This would also ease the ever tightening strain on the AMS budget, enabling them to more easily allocate money to needy and worthwhile groups on projects.

Please read Peter Lane's article explaining the referendum. It is important that you understand the issue and also that you vote. Voting only takes a minute (less, if you hurry!) And 75 cents isn't all that much money. Please vote.

Dear Editors:

Shall the Student Interest Fee be increased by 50 cents for four years, to reimburse the University for funds expended on improving various premises on campus in order to qualify for Liquor Licences with the understanding that the 50 percent presently charged by the University will be removed: Yes....., No.....

On Wednesday of this week this question will be put to the students. In only one afternoon last week a petition containing 718 names was gathered in order to make this last minute addition to the November referendum. The purpose of the 50 cents is more than just paying the university back the $22,000 we owe them. If the students pay the university in this manner, then the 50 percent levy on revenues that presently applies at all events serving liquor will be dropped. This will mean more dances, smokers and in general an increase in the number of social events on campus.

As it stands now, many events have been cancelled because its just too tough to break even. The result has been a significant decline in the number of social events. For only 50 cents for the next four years we can improve upon this prohibitive situation, one that could be with us for many years to come. On Wednesday, a vote of YES will benefit us all.

Pub relations not too good

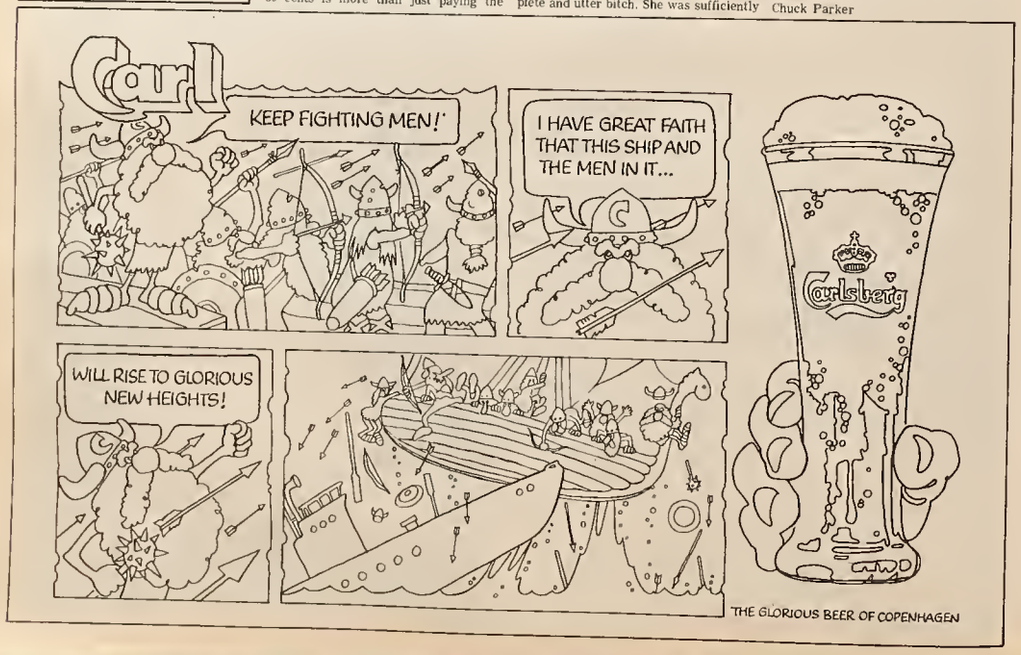
Dear Editors:

I completely support Steve Garneau's opinion of last Friday (Couldn't Hear Myself Think) about the atmosphere at the Pub. Last Wednesday night three friends and myself decided to go to the pub for a "quiet drink". To say that I was disappointed and disgusted with what I encountered there is surely an understatement. After waiting in line for half an hour, we were rewarded with four seats which we had to climb into (there was no room to pull them' out), and found ourselves surrounding a dirty, sticky table. To say the least, the music did not encourage, if even allow, any meaningful conversation.

The waitress came; she was a complete and utter bitch. She was sufficiently snotty while taking our order but, when on her return, we noticed she had brought the wrong drinks, she was even haughtier. I felt like I owed her an apology for being there! To top it all off I was sitting shoulder to shoulder with an unfamiliar female who was vividly describing her latest 'conquest' to an avid audience. The conversation wasn't even worth eavesdropping on. I stood the whole ordeal for approximately 20 minutes. I felt a degree of finality when I left, knowing well that I'd never return, while the pub is under such conditions.

K. Anne Milne

Dear Editors:



Although I often thought that there are more important issues at university than the condition of the student-operated watering spot, Garneau's letter (Couldn't Hear Myself Think) refreshed my memory of the sorry state I found the Pub in last Wednesday night.

The place was uncomfortably crowded (cattle cars are more spacious) and noisy (rock concerts are quieter). "Is this what the new liquor laws force the Pub management into?" I thought. When they're charging sixty cents for a bottle of beer, can't they run a profitable operation with a lower density of bodies? (Wallace Hall was vacant that night).

Surrounding aside, the service I got for my sixty cents plus tip was worse than a vending machine might give. The girl who served our table was so unfriendly, I felt I was an unwanted but necessary chore to be done that day. Possibly, the environment she was working in was the reason.

The Queen's Pub has seen better days, and I don't believe it's just the liquor laws to blame.

Queen's Golden Gals Ice Hockey team picked up a win and a tie in their first weekend of league play, November 14 and 15. After topping an invitational tournament held at York University November 7 and 8 with a 4-2 victory over Western and 6-5 win over McMaster, the Gals hit the road this weekend for a two-game trip to Western and Guelph.

Western: Despite a late arrival for the Western match Friday night, the Gals blanked Western 2-0. As the score indicates, the game was a goal-keepers duel. Although 3 penalities were handed out in the first period, no goals were scored. Queen's proved in the second period that they were finally warmed up and pumped two goals past the Western netminder.

Team captain, Sue Wright, put Queen's on the score board midway through the second period when she tucked the puck over the goal-line on an unassisted drive. Five minutes later, winger Sandy Statten doubled the score while demonstrating her patented "double whammy". Despite a marked lack of back and fore-checking by the Gals, Western was unable to put the puck past Queen's goalie Sue Hall, who played a flawless game in nets recording a shut-out in her first league game as netminder.

Guelph: If the Western-Queen's match was characterized by few goals, the Guelph-Queen's confrontation Saturday was marked by a see-sawing score which ended in a 6-6 tie.

Queen's opened the scoring early in the first period on a play sparked by Marg Bartlett and completed by centre Janean Gerow. Guelph came back quickly driving the puck past netminder Cathy Smith, thus tying the score before drawing a penalty which brought the Gals power play to the ice. Janean Gerow notched her second goal of the game on a shot from the point catching the corner of the Guelph

Queen's opened the scoring early in the first period on a play sparked by Marg Bartlett and completed by centre Janean Gerow. Guelph came back quickly driving the puck past netminder Cathy Smith, thus tying the score before drawing a penalty which brought the Gals power play to the ice. Janean Gerow notched her second goal of the game on a shot from the point catching the corner of the Guelph net. Again Guelph stormed back to tie the score before the end of the period and pitted a go-ahead goal early in the second period. Marg Barlett picked up a second period. by setting up Sue Wright on a goal which tied the score 3-3. Guelph slid their 4th goal into the Queen's net to take the lead but Sue Wright assisted winger Les Ferrari in evening the score just 30 seconds later. The Guelph squad added two more goals to their total but Queen's dazzling defenseman Sue Wright put the powerplay together on two Guelph penalties scoring twice to tie the score.

The Guelph match proved that the Gals will have to improve their fore and back-checking efforts if they are to enjoy a successful season, especially against strong squads from McMaster and Guelph. The Golden Gals meet McMaster in the Jock Hardy arena on Saturday at 4:00 p.m. next week.

Gaels...

Tom Shand

The Golden Gaels stormed back from a three goal deficit to register a 6-3 victory in their league opener against the Waterloo Warriors in Waterloo on Saturday night

The Gaels appeared to be rather disoriented in the unfamiliar confines and smaller ice surface of the Waterloo Memorial Centre and before they could acclimatize themselves they were behind 3-0. The Warriors capitalized on their opportunities in the early going but even at that time did not appear to have the game in control. Doug Mitchell opened the scoring for the Warriors at the 3:26 mark on a low slap shot that beat Clyde Harris on the glove side Fielding and Chase completed the scoring for the Warriors with Chases' screen shot from the point being the last puck to beat Harris who shut out the Warriors for the final 51 minutes.

The Gaels needed only 17 seconds of their first power play opportunity to get on the scoreboard as Tim Hanson scored his first of two at 9:35 of the first. Hanson moved into Kevin Treacy's spot on a line with John Cerre and Geoff Arnoldi as Treacy's amateur eligibility is currently being examined. Treacy played last season with the Flint Generals of the IHL but did so on an amateur card thereby giving Coach Bob Carnegie reason to believe he will be allowed to reinstate Treacy into the lineup. The Gaels narrowed the margin to one goal late in the first period as Mike Haramis put away Steve Aubrey's rebound past sprawler Warrior goalie Jake Dupuis.

It was all Queen's for the final two periods as the Gaels' persistent skating and forechecking forced the Warriors into mistakes.

The Warriors who outshot Queen's 18 to 10 in the opening period were outshot by the Gaels 17 to 8 in the decisive second period. Steve Aubrey and Doug Grills were the Queen's marksmen in the middle frame. Both goals were assisted by Willie Wing, ex-Hamilton Jr. Red Wing, who had another outstanding game. Wing added another assist on Haramis' second goal of the game in the final period. Haramis, one of eight transfer students to crack the lineup this season, had two excellent opportunities to add to his two goal night but fired wide twice after having zipped past the Waterloo rearguards.

Tim Hanson scored Queen's sixth and final goal, at 11:28 of the third period, on a brilliant individual effort. Hanson's effort capped off another excellent game on the part of the entire Gael's team, with the exception of the opening nine minutes

Waterloo's loss evened their record at 1 win and 1 loss. Their victory was over the Windsor Lancer's on Friday night That game weakened the Waterloo lineup somewhat as six Warriors were hurt or suspended in that hrawl-filled contest and consequently did not dress against the Gaels on Saturday night

Queen's Annual Invitational Volleyball Tournament held

George Benson

In the Bartlett Gym last Friday night the Queen's Annual International Volleyball Tournament was staged. Seven teams representing Europe, China, The West Indies Indo-Persia, Canada, Venezuela, and the Rest of the World, battled for three hours for the coveted Trophy. After four consecutive games each, Venezuela and Indo-Persia were the only two teams without game loss and therefore went into the final playing best out of three Although not reflected by the final scores, both teams played long hard games with Venezuela trimphant 15-3 and 15-4, thus taking this year's championship. The final team standings were First-Venezuela, Second-Indo-Persia, Third (tied)-West Indies and Rest of the World, Fourth-Canada, Fifth-China, and sixth-Europe. The Event was organized and staged by the International Club.

Queen's Curling Club Bonspiel

The annual Queen's Curling Club Beginners Bonspiel was held Saturday, November 15, at the Kingston Curling Club. Although the number of partcipants was low, everyone had a good time—especially Arther K and Malcolm.

The winning team was composed of Gil Dawson (skip), Connie Crosby, John Sherbet, and Debbie Meeks. The runners-up were George Cooke (skip), Kathy Ogryzlo, Jim Deacon and Carolyn Corrigan.

Many thanks are extended to Kathy Ogryzlo. Sharon Lillico and the rest of the club's executive for organizing and running a very susccessful bonspiel

Waterpolo Gaels 2nd in the league

Hart House resounded with the Queen's cheer, "What's the sport of Kings..." as the Gaels Waterpolo team attempted to establish themselves in the number one position of the OUAA East Division.

Queen's first game was against York University. Final score was 16-1 in favour of Queen's. Mike Fox led the scoring with 4 goals; Dave Ardell and Bruce Hopkins each came up with a hat-trick, Paul Nolan and George Houston scored 2 each while Bruce Evernden and Craig Render accounted for single goals.

The second game of the tournament meant everything to the Queen's team. Toronto and Queen's had met earlier in the season, the game ending in a tie and going into the tournament, both teams were undefeated in OUAA play.

At the end of the first half, Toronto led Queen's by two goals, Queen's rallied in the 3rd quarter to outscore Toronto 3-1, making the game a 7-7 tie going into the fourth quarter. The game ended with Toronto squeezing by with a 10-8 victory over the Gaels putting Queen's in second place in the OUAA East Division.

Outstanding players for Queen's were Paul Nolan, Dave Ardell, Mike Fox, Dave Kay, Bruce Evernden, Bob Brisebois and Bruce Hopkins. Paul Nolan scored three goals for Queen's offensive punch as well as playing tremendous defence as the defensive centre. Dave Ardell netted two goals as well as providing blanket coverage over Toronto's star player Alex Fedko, keeping Fedko's scoring limited to only one goal. Bob Brisbois, Bruce Evernde and Bruce Hopkins each scored once, showing the depth of Queen's scoring ability. Mike Fox, although not scoring, played the centre forward position taking most of the punishment as well as being the key player in setting up the majority of Queen's goals. The star of Queen's defensive unit is of course our goalie Dave Kay, who stopped breakaways and point blank shots, to keep the Queen's team in the game. Queen's most valuable asset in Waterpolo remains Coach Simon Beitler who continues to set the example for waterpolo excellence and sportsmanship.

Queen's final game of the tournament was against RMC and Gaels showed the strain of the days previous games. Slower than usual, the Queen's team outswam and out scored the RMC team 8-3. Paul Nolan scored three goals; Bob Brisebois, Mike Fox, Dave Ardell, Bruce Evernden and Orville James, each scored once.

The next tournament will be on November 29 at Queen's. The final standings for the OUAA East Division will be decided at this tournament when Queen's goes against Toronto in what promises to be the game of the season.

Badminton strikes as Gals place 1st; Gaels second

Gals...

Diana Edwards

The Queen's Intercollegiate women's badminton team started their season in true championship form. At the Pre-Christmas Combined Meet at Waterloo this weekend, they emerged top out of 11 Universities and managed to win a total of 41 out of a possible 54 badminton matches in both singles and doubles events. Toronto came second with a total of 36 points and Western came third with 32 points - both of these universities are Queen's big rivals from last year.

The Waterloo tournament, played over 2 days, was found so demanding it literally exhausted every member of the team. But though each Queen's player had to play 6 singles and 6 doubles matches, with each match going to the best out of three games, the excellent training given by coach Bernie Houghton produced fantastic results. The best record for the weekend was held by fourth seed singles player Betsy "Star" Carey who won all but one of her 6 singles matches and, teamed with third singles players Sandy "Killer" Koerner, won all the doubles matches against the other second seed doubles teams. Sandy Koerner also gave an excellent showing by winning a total of 10 of her 12 matches. The one rookie on the team, sixth singles player Bev "Beth" Koski seemed to breeze her way through her first intercollegiate tournament and accumulate 4 victories in singles and 5 in doubles. This third doubles team was made up of Bev Koski and Sandy "Sam" McFarlane, Queen's fifth singles player who also accumulated 4 singles victories. The third player with a 9 wins 3 losses record was first singles player Daphne "Daph" Meredith who won 5 of her singles matches and teamed with second singles player Diane "Cap'n" Edwards, winner of 4 singles matches, to make up the first doubles team which emerged with 4 doubles victories. Last but not least, many thanks go out to the badminton team manager Gayle Raycraft who did a superb job of giving moral support, warming the players up on the court and spreading around her good humour.

Unfortunately, the Queen's Gals found their toughest contenders to be Guelph and Western and there two universities took away many of Queen's singles and doubles victories. Hopefully, the situation will be different when these teams meet each other after Christmas.

The women's badminton team will host the next tournament, the Part I East involving Queen's, U. of T., Ottawa and Ryerson, in 2 weekends hence on Saturday, Nov. 29. These Gals need your support and since this will be one of the rare times the student body will be able to see this particular one of the Queen's winning teams in action, come on out and cheer them on to victory!

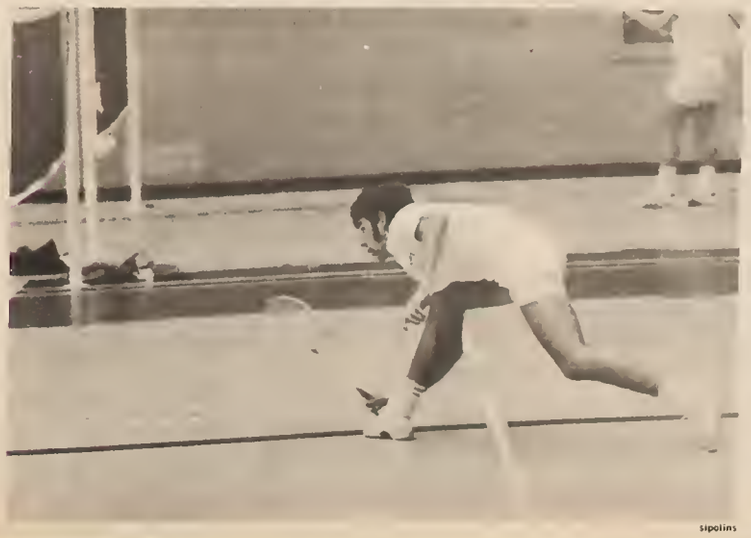
An unidentified Queen's Badminton Gael smashes the bird at an opponent in the RCM Invitational this past weekend. Queen's managed to secure second place; after being thumped by RMC once again. The Gaels did manage to beat U of T though.

Gaels...

James Stewart



Unfortunately Queen's men's badminton team was thoroughly thumped by RMC again. Last weekend six universities (Queen's, Toronto, Ottawa, Ryerson, RMC, and York) competed in an invitational badminton tournament at RMC. Queen's struggled to second position, narrowly beating Toronto by one point. A more regimented, and physically grueling practice schedule will undoubtedly increase the team's success against RMC and destroy the pleasure of the sport.

In singles Paul Buckley played number one, admitting with many grunts and groans that he really wasn't in shape for that sort of workout. Paul won most of his matches, losing only to Ryerson and the infamous I. Czich from RMC. Playing second was James Stewart. Wood shots, misses, and bad hits out the sides, back and into the net, were in great quantity, but fewer than his opponents, as he trumphed over all other teams except RMC.

Mike Neville playing third position won most of his matches. He was thoroughly disgruntled with the team's lack of decent rackets as evidenced by the accusing looks he gave his racket after every bad hit. He also lost only to RMC and Ryerson.

Mike Stoute playing in fourth position good humouredly lost most of his singles matches, beating Ryerson and York, but only narrowly losing to RMC. He played terrifically well in doubles, as he and Stewart won all of their matches except against RMC.

The event was well organized, but judging by the final comments of many players, it was perhaps too long and tiring.

B-Ball Gals split to Western/Windsor

Atwood

On Thursday evening the Queen's Women's Intercollegiate Basketball team piled into a van and trucked off to London Ontario. They ran into a deer and some snow along the way but otherwise the trip was uneventful. Coaches Maureen Lisle and Stewart Beck ran their team through an early morning practise on Saturday at the University of Western Ontario in preparation for their first league game against Western later that night. It would also be the first time that Queen's would ever meet the University of Western Ontario due to the restructuring of the league that had just been implemented this season.

Queen's was defeated by the Muslangs 57-50. B. and M. McKeague, a sister team, were the two highest scorers for the game with 24 and 16 points while Kathy Keeley of Queen's ranked third in scoring, coming up with 14 much needed points. The rest of the scoring for Queen's was evenly distributed.

Three of Queen's first string fouled out before the end of the game. Penny Wedd, Kim Headford and Jackie Gallipeau were forced to retire to the bench a little early.

Generally speaking the rebounding for the Gals was extremely poor especially offensively and it is this mediocrity on the boards that cost Queen's the game. Queen's just wasn't working their offence and Western continually forced the Gals to take the outside shot by playing a very tough man-to-man defence. In fact it appeared as if the Mustangs managed to keep the Gals off balance for almost the entire duration of the game.

The next game was at the University of Windsor, at 6:15pm on Saturday. The Gals defeated their opponents 49-35 although not as handily as they thought they would, or should have. The top scorers in this match were Pat Quigly 14 points, who is playing ball for Queen's for her fifth year, and Kim Headford, 13 points, who is in her Frosh year at Queen's. The rest of the scoring was scattered among the various members of the team.

As far as boards are concerned the Windsor game at least showed that Queen's is capable of getting the rebounds if they want to. Kim Headford, Laura Mattson, and Heather Gifford showed some strength in this department, and it was their effort which probably afforded Queen's the 14 point win.

Queen's tryed a zone offence but it didn't seem to be too successful against the effective zone defence offered by Windsor. For the major part of the game the Gals were working a 1-4 offence by failing to get back on defence which is where they were getting burned.

Generally speaking their rebounding was a lot better but the game was very sluggish. Queen's has to do a lot more moving around and quick cutting if they expect to live up to their very high potential this year.

This coming weekend Queen's will meet Laurentian (6:30) and McMaster (2:00) both on home courts, Friday night and Saturday afternoon respectively. Let's have some fan support.

Swimming Gaels/Gals prove their superiority in Invitational meet

Gaels...

Wayne Serebrin

If you were fortunate enough to attend the annual Queen's Invitational Swim Meet last Saturday, you had the opportunity to see a high quality of swimming. From the enthusiastic opening cheer to the final relay our swimmers distinguished themselves as something special.

The opening event, the 400 yd. Medley Relay, saw veterans John Ireland and John Pearson, and rookies Tim Dennis and Andrew Fagan assaulting the Queen's record board with a brilliant combination that put them a slim half a second behind the Ontario powerhouse EMAC swim club. In the next event, a tired John Pearson put together a respectable 50 yd. Freestyle to finish one second behind the leader. Disturbed by this second place finish in the 200 yd breastroke, Tim Dennis, normally a backstroke and medley swimmer, fought back against the strong EMAC club to win the 100 yd. breastroke in a time of 1:03.5. The next event saw a tough John Ireland complete the gruelling 200 yd. butterfly in a final time of 2:06.7. Following in Ireland's example, team mate John Pearson exploded in the 100 yd. butterfly, to finish two tenths of a second off the winning time of 57.5. The climax of the meet, however, came in event 24, the 400 yd. Individual Medley. In a swim that left his nearest competitor over twelve seconds and half a pool length behind, Tim Dennis destroyed a Queen's record – untouched for the last couple of years.

The Queen's team is not, however, made up of just a few stars, it is a complete team. Admirable core performances were turned in by Leo Hwoxdyk in the 100 yd. freestyle and John Randle in the 200 yd. breaststroke. Special mention must also go to first year swimmers; Roger Cassidy, Martin Demmers, Ken Davies, Andreas Cordson and Don MacNaughton.

The team is ready for their trip to the Ontario Universities relay meet next Saturday at McMaster and wish to express their thanks to Chris, Ellan, John and Rob for their help on Saturday

Gals...

This past Saturday the Queen's Swimming Gals again combined with the men's team to host the annual Queen's Invitational Club Meet. Queen's made a good showing, placing second overall among seven teams with the Etobicoke Memorial Aquatic Club coming first.

The Gals put on another strong performance this week. A total of six new team records were set, along with many other personal bests. The team of Pam Skene, Cathy Brace, Jane Noakes and Kate Whitaker combined to set records in the 400 freestyle and 400 medley relays. Brace also did a lifetime best in setting a new record in the 200 breaststroke of 2:47.8. Skene took another 3 seconds off her record of last week of 2:32.0 in the 200 backstroke, and Kate Whitaker lowered the 100 fly and 200 individual medley times.

This year instead of going through the time-consuming ordeal of setting up all the heats by hand, the job was done by computer. After some initial fiddling around with the last-minute entry changes, the meet ran smoothly, and the computer will probably continue to be used in the future.

An added feature of this meet was an old girls' 400 freestyle relay team, members of which, at one point in time or another swam for Queen's. Despite varying lengths of time since they last trained, Mary Jean Duncan, Barb Whitehead, Ianna Swann, and Vickie Troup held their own quite well.

Such good showing at this early point in the season is very encouraging for the Ontario finals, which Queen's will host in February. The Swimming Gals next meet is in two weeks, on November 29, with York coming here. It should be exciting so be sure to come out and see more new records set. However, this weekend the Hockey Gals are playing host to McMaster--their big rival, at 4:00 on Saturday, and they also would welcome your support!

Homosexual myths

Recently there has been a lot of controversy about the Queen's University Homophile Association. The Queen's Journal seems to have been chosen as the sounding board for various points of view, and we are pleased that we can serve students who send in legitimate and publishable letters. (To be published, a letter must be signed by the writer.) Both sides of the homosexuality issue have been presented; but it is curious that many people who have taken the time to write a letter have not signed their real names.

As one of these individuals said, "bravery is not determined by foolishly signing your name for the public eye." One must then conclude that bravery is instead determined by comments such as: "Homosexuals should at least be de-sexualized' Why? "Because they disrupt our moral standards -- (what's next, screwing dead babies?)"

It is in these unsigned letters that one can see the misinformation and myths that exist at this university

People have come up with some intriguing ideas about the QUHA's plans to spend its 250 AMS dollars, The Association is setting up seminars and lectures, compiling a resource centre and providing information to individuals who request it QUHA recently spoke with a representative of the department of the Solicitor-General who approached them for information on how to deal with homosexuality in prisons.

QUHA has a telephone counselling service, a listening ear for people concerned about their sexuality -- a service similar to Telephone Aid Kingston (TAK). The QUHA counselling service is needed because of the oppression endured by homosexuals, but the mythology surrounding QUHA would have us believe that the Association is running an AMS funded homosexuals' dating service.

Students wondering about the validity of this and other myths should call the QUHA. It would take much less energy than writing a letter and would be far more constructive

Book prices

Dear Editors:
I want to congratulate the Campus Bookstore for the fine job it is doing in supplying texts to students at reduced prices. I bought one of these bargains yesterday. The originally marked price was 95 cents, and I got it for the low, low price of $2.10.

This is not the first time that this has happened. I have to wonder if I'd be better off buying from Coles or the Book Merchant downtown, rather than lose my shirt, and my lunch, over the great discounts which Campus bookstore provides.

Grad wife hurt

Dear Editors:
I am writing to you regarding the statement made by Terry Collins concerning the Fall Convocation in the Journal, November 11, 1975. The ceremony was everything BUT uneventful. As I am writing this, I feel very hurt and bitter that what took place on November 8 did not even deserve a paragraph!!!!!

To me it was the most beautiful day of my life. First, the bagpipes came up the aisle, and them those proud, hard-working students finally travelled up that long aisle to their seats. As I saw my husband and friends, a feeling came over me that I cannot describe even to you. They looked so happy and pleased with themselves. You know why? The majority of these students received their degree the hard way!! Does Mr. Collins know what sacrifice and hard work it is to receive a degree? Judging from his 'crummy' write-up of ONE sentence, I do not believe he does.

My husband went to Queen's from September to September and worked nights and week-ends to survive financially. Our friends had to leave their homes and families all summer and drive many miles in winter to go to Queen's - I may also add, it took many summers and winters, not to mention time and money, before their dream of accomplishment was fulfilled.

Principal Watts gave a most memorable speech and in many moments during the event there wasn't a dry eye in Grant Hall. I am very disgusted and hurt that a University such as Queen's would send a 'kid' in third year Commerce to sit judgement on the events of the most wonderful Convocation I have ever been part of Graduates, if any convocation deserves writing about it was this one!!!!!

I doubt, Mr. Collins, that any of those graduates give a damn about your one sentence write-up, only they know the sacrifices they made to achieve their goals of improving themselves, their community and the country

Graduates, Principal Watts, and all of those who helped to make that day - I salute you!!

Mary Ann Culhane

Nebel explains

My gosh. The power of the press.

So the volley has been returned to my court. (Kindly note the game metaphor.) Also, kindly note the 'kindly'. (If I'm going to explain any of it I might just as well explain every allusion.) I hate to have to interpret my own letter in this public forum but it is evidently necessary, even vital, if that letter (any myself along with it) are not to be further misconceived, misconstrued and generally all-round misunderstood

I seem to have single-handedly sparked a veritable hot bed of controversy That was not my intention. Far from it.

Vindication time.

What it was, in fact, was an attempt to balance the whole question. To put it all into a more appropriate perspective....I may be jumping to an unwarranted conclusion here but I'm willing to go out on a limb and hazard a guess that it failed to do that.

But do I really have to spell it out for you? Rhetorical question. Evidently, I must.

P—A—R—O—D—Y. Caveat Emptor.

I don't know. Maybe it was too good, too real a parody. But to actually be accepted seriously and absolutely at face value? It boggles the mind.

Actually, I'm not the red neck it seems I appeared to be. A little offbeat maybe, but certainly not the sole sentry between here and utopia.

Sincerely (this time)
John Nebel

Synopsis: In the last episode, New York City had kidnapped Nelson Rockefeller for the ransom to erase its deficit, fast. President Ford had talked the Russians into threatening to bomb the city unless it returned Rocky.

Meanwhile, on a farm in Kansas, one landowner, Angus McTavish, was plowing his field, singing a typical yeoman's song: "Yo ho ho and a bottle of pop!" he bellowed. The neighbors giggled, for this was not Angus' only eccentricity. He was green, too. His skin, his eyes his hair, his blood, teeth, and internal organs were all green In fact, Angus was a Martian. He was under three and a half feet tall, and had a hard time making the hired hands do anything. "Hey!" he would call, "Tote that barge, life that bale!: the farmhands told him to drop dead. "Drop dead, shortstuff!" Angus didn't really mind this, though, he only thought it was the normal way of doing things on Earth. He was an idiot, which is why he was deported from Mars in the first place. In spite of all this, he was married, and to the most beautiful girl in America This is a situation which I won't try, as anthors are supposed to, to justify I probably couldn't.

An unlikely figure for a hero? Perhaps; but on his three little shoulders rested the fate of New Yark and the entire Free World.

Until tonight at 10 p.m., you may peruse Caravan, a craft display and sale in the International Centre Lower Lounge.

This sale is sponsored by the World University Service of Canada (WUSC), an organization oriented towards increasing public awareness of international development problems. WUSC and Caravan work to provide a market for the products of craftsmen in developing communities as well as to involve students in a practical form of international co-operation.

The sale has thus far not seen the volume of last year. It is, however, "far from a total disaster."

Students and staff are urged to view the crafts display and learn about the cultures of other countries.

Kathy Grant, the new AMS Research Assitant, has launched into her multi-faceted job. Her operations are based in a small room on the third floor of the Student's Union.

According to AMS Vice-President (University Affairs), John Wilson, the position was felt necessary due to the "time constraints which did not allow Council members to fulfill all aspects of their jobs. They did not have time to go to the original documents to back up their political positions.
